MAN'S DEPARTURE, AND THE INVISIBLE WORLD. By G. H. H. OLIPHANT-FERGUSON. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The compiler of this work has succeeded in providing a really readable and useful volume of thoughts upon the weighty and solemn subject he treats of. The chapters on "The Spiritual Body," and on "Recognition of Friends in Heaven," are specially suggestive, and furnish much food for thought. The choice of authors quoted from is wide and discriminating, and the editorial work appears to be carefully and skilfully performed.

THE SHADOW OF THE HAND, AND OTHER SERMONS. By W. A. GRAY. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier. A book of thoughtful sermons by a Scotch minister. He has evidently a deep admiration for Moses, and Sermon VIII. shows considerable insight into his character. Sermons V. and VI. are full of ripe spiritual teaching ("Faith refusing Deliverance," and "Danger of Reaction"). Two sermons, "The Pricelessness of Christ," and the "Changelessness of Christ," show by their very headings that Christ is to the writer the centre and essence of Christianity. Mr. Gray's style is cultured, without being laboured or redundant, and his divisions clear.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER. The Annual Volume (Cassell & Co., 2s. 6d.) gives an account of labour amongst lost children, carried on by the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges, and Children's Aid Society. It contains a number of stories and illustrations calculated to excite the reader's practical sympathy on behalf of this excellent work. THE CHILDREN'S OWN PAPER (3s.), published in the same cause, will delight all children who have an opportunity of reading it. "Uncle Gilbert" evidently understands how to please and entertain the little ones; his excellent collection of stories, poems, and pictures will be highly appreciated.

THE NATION'S VICE: The Claims of Temperance on the Christian Church. By the late R. B. GRINDROD, M.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a posthumous work, now edited and brought out by the son of the author. Since it was written, some ten years ago, the cause of Gospel Temperance has made rapid strides and has taken hold of the hearts and consciences of ministers of the Gospel in a way that would have rejoiced the heart of the writer had he lived to see it. As there is still "much land to be possessed" in this direction, we strongly recommend this book as a great help to abstaining Christians in bringing the claims of Temperance before those Christians who have not yet thrown the weight of their influence on the side of abstinence. It is a very readable book, teeming with facts and arguments calculated to convince the wavering and strongly impress the minds of all who read it.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD YEAR-BOOK FOR 1885. Jas. Clark & Co. 1s. 6d. Here we have a complete alphabetical list of ministers of all Nonconforming Churches in Great Britain and Ireland. This is the third year of its publication, and the book has evidently been compiled with the utmost care. It will prove invaluable to ministers, deacons, and all interested in church matters.

MORNING AND EVENING PRAYERS FOR CHILDREN. 2d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Brief and simple prayers for morning and evening, also for special occasions; suitable hymns are interspersed.

A new edition of the GUIDE TO THE INSTITUTIONS AND CHARITIES, &C., FOR THE BLIND (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) is published. Those who want information about these most valuable institutions will find this guide replete with information.

THE YEARS THAT THE LOCUSTS HAVE EATEN. 1d. Monthly Tract Society. This is a well-written tract for the New Year, and is admirably fitted to stimulate young men and maidens to consecrate their best days to God's service.

THE NATIONAL THRIFT ALMANACK, compiled by F. BOWDEN GREEN, is issued by the National Thrift Society, 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C. In addition to the daily mottoes are brief articles and extracts from addresses of distinguished men bearing on the subject of thrift. The price is 10s. per 100 copies.

THE LAW OF LOVE: a Plea for Total Abstinence. By JANE RANSOM. 5s. per 100. A. Kingdon & Co. The numerous evils arising from intemperance are here vividly pourtrayed, and total abstinence urged from considerations based on the principle of love to our neighbour. It is worthy of a large circulation.

THE WORDS "SALVATION" OR "TO SAVE." By Rev. C. S. BERE. Hamilton, Adams & Co. 3d. In this pamphlet a brief exposition is given of each of the 142 passages in which either of these words occur. As they frequently are used to denote simply a temporal deliverance, it is important that preachers should discriminate.

THE EXPOSITOR for February (Hodder & Stoughton) opens with the first of a series of articles on "The Epistles of St. Paul," by Prof. Godet, specially interesting as giving the great commentator's views on the Second Advent and the Man of Sin. Professor Drummond supplies a second paper on "The Contributions of Science to Christianity." Dr. Maclaren continues his "Exposition of Colossians" (treating of the prelude). Dr. Alexander Whyte writes on "Joseph and Mary;" Professor Agar Beet contributes the first of a series on "Systematic Theology;" and Dr. Marcus Dods reviews recent New Testament literature. There are also Brevia, and an elaborate criticism of the Prolegomena to Tischendorf's New Testament. We understand that the January number of the magazine has reached its third edition. Messrs. Randolph, of New York, are arranging to publish the magazine in the United States.

We have also received the following books:—

S. W. Partridge & Co.:
  Mountain Waterbrooks, and other poems. By Rev. C. A. Fox. 2s.
Elliot Stock:
  Aunt Frank's Bible Studies. By Caroline A. E. Cole.
W. Kent & Co.:
  Souls and Cities. By the author of "A Modern Minister."
Ward, Lock & Co.:
  Occident: Boston Monday. Lectures by Joseph Cook. 3s. 6d.
  Continuity of Christian Thought: a Study of Modern Theology in the Light of its History. By Professor Allen, Cambridge, Mass. 5s.

MR. THORNE IN WELLINGTON, SALOP.

THE interest and blessing in Mr. Thorne's meetings at the Young Men's Christian Association has deepened and extended every day, till the large central hall was packed, and many at last were standing outside. Mr. Thorne having laboured for months in the closest connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey, has adopted many of their plans and ways of working, with most blessed results. The early morning prayer-meeting on the last Sunday was a wonderful sight, and the meeting at three o'clock, and again at eight, were manifestations of our God's salvation in very many marvellous instances.

On Monday evening about 140 of the recent converts had tea, together with many friends. All joined hands together to dedicate themselves to the Lord. On Tuesday morning at eight o'clock the Committee breakfasted with the evangelist, and a large number accompanied him to the train on his way to Shrewsbury, for a short visit, a large number of the recent converts there giving him a hearty welcome. A description of the many striking conversions would fill a volume.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—One of the most interesting of all the annual gatherings at Abbey-road Chapel is that called the pastor's old people's feast. This year three hundred of the poor of the district were invited, but in consequence of the downpouring rain only two hundred and sixty responded. Twenty of these were fetched in coaches, kindly lent free of cost for the purpose. Some were bent double with years and afflictions, some were deaf, some were dumb, six were blind, and many were lame, and the most pitiful sight of all were those drawn into all manner of contortions, being paralysed. Of this strange assembly, seventy were over seventy years old, and of these sixteen were over eighty, and of these again five were over ninety, and one was ninety-five years. The total ages amounted to 14,630 years. The pastor (Rev. W. Stott) was the moving spirit of the meeting.—Freeman.

MR. JOSEPH CLEWORTH IN MONTROSE.

THIS well-known evangelist has just concluded a most successful three weeks' Mission in Montrose. An old magistrate, who has lived in the town over forty years, told me that he never before saw so many gathered together night after night, attracted simply by the "old, old story." During the last week I should think that from 600 to 800 were present at each service, and at the closing meeting one of the largest churches in the town was crowded. Many have been led, so far as man can judge, to faith in Christ.

To me, a stranger—residing in the town for a few weeks—the sight of such meetings called forth much praise to God, and once again I was thankful to witness that the Gospel still charmed and stirred the hearts of the people. W. S.

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

SYRIAN COLONISATION FUND,

41, Parliament-street (entrance in Cannon-row), London, S.W.

President—RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

IN view of the greatly-increasing distress among the Jews, and of the earnest appeals addressed to us, we desire to carry out at once the work of providing employment for Jews in the Land of Promise.

Intolerable oppression is driving Jews out of Roumania, Russia, and other countries. They seek in the Holy Land the shelter denied them elsewhere.

In Jerusalem there are nearly 20,000 Jews, of whom not one-tenth can obtain work. There are several thousands in Galilee and elsewhere in Palestine in great need.

We ask for means to enable us to give employment at Jerusalem—where some land near the city is at once available—till increase of funds shall give us the means to enable them to form themselves into colonies on their own responsibility.

Also to help Jewish families in Galilee who have asked our aid in forming a settlement there under favourable conditions.

Also to make final provisions for the Jews in Cyprus.

Donors are requested to state which of these objects they desire to assist, otherwise contributions will be divided among them.

The agricultural season has begun. In order to secure the crops, and avoid having to wait till harvest of the year after next, we ask for speedy help.

SHAFTESBURY, President.

December, 1884.

On behalf of the Committee,
E. A. FINN, Secretary,

Bankers.

Messrs. Drummond & Co., Charing-cross, S.W.; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; the Bank of England; the Royal Bank of Scotland; the Provincial Bank of Ireland, to any of whom subscriptions may be paid, or to the Secretary.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' and SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing cross.

Patron—Right Hon. Earl of SHAFTESBURY.
President—GENERAL SIR A. J. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

The friends of the soldier are earnestly appealed to for funds for the continued support of the Society. Ninety Scripture Readers are now actively employed in the Army at home and abroad.

With such unquestionable testimony on all sides to the beneficial influence of the Reader in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the Lord's blessing is resting in no small degree upon this Institution; and with this conviction deeply impressed on our hearts, we lay this matter before all who can feel for a soldier's trials, a soldier's temptations, a soldier's devotion to his Queen and country, but, above all for a soldier's everlasting welfare, confident—nay, more than confident, assured—that He will cause unknown supporters to spring up upon the right hand and upon the left, and stimulate old friends to fresh exertions. Two additional Readers are with the Troops in Egypt and one with Sir Charles Warren's Expedition in South Africa.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, V. G. M. Holt, Esq., 17, Whitehall-place; at the Bankers, National Provincial Bank of England, 212, Piccadilly; by the Secretary, Mr. William A. Blake; or by the Hon. Secretary, Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

(Founded by Mr. W. J. Lewis, in the year 1863.)

NOW CONDUCTED BY

MR. JAMES SHARPLESS, Superintendent,

AND

MR. EDWARD GEO. HARVEY, Secretary, 14, Sidney-square, London, E.

This Mission is carried on in one of the most degraded parts of the East of London. The operations consist of Open-Air Gospel Preaching; House-to-House Visitation; Services for Adults and Children; Ragged Night School; Lodging-house visiting. Many have, through this Mission, been delivered from lives of vice and misery. Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at above address, or at the Office of The Christian.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

IN aid of the funds of the proposed LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, received One Hundred and Ninety-nine Shillings from "Appeal," per Christian. Many thanks. Several friends have requested to have Shilling Collecting Cards forwarded. Will kindly Readers extend this easy method of helping the quiet poor? THE LITTLE HARP OF GOLD.

Price 3d. per dozen; 2s. per 100.

But beyond the grief and weeping,
  Far beyond the skies so cold,
Clad in white and shining raiment,
  Bertie held his harp of gold.

And above the sounds of mourning,
  Bertie's spirit seemed to say,
"Weep no more, for I am learning
  On my golden harp to play!"

"NOT IN VAIN;"

OR, THE TEACHER AND HER SCHOLARS.

Price 3d per dozen; 2s. per 100.

"I have laboured in vain," a teacher said,
  With sorrowful look and tone;
"I have laboured in vain!"—and she bowed her head,
And bitter and sad were the tears she shed,
  As she sat in her chamber alone.

"I am weary and worn, and my hands are weak;
  My courage has well-nigh flown:
For none give heed to the words I speak,
And in vain for a promise of fruit I seek,
  Where the seed of the Word is sown."

A CHILD'S FAITH.

Price 6d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100.

The tide of grief
O'er the widow swept;
She dropped her sewing,
And moaned and wept;
And the cloud of sorrow
So veiled the sky,
She scarce remembered
The God on high.

But one of her children
Just four years old,
With her pale face pinched
With hunger and cold,
But a sweet soft light
In her fair blue eye,
Crept close and whispered,
"Why do you cry?"

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SKIEN, NORWAY.—A Pastor writes: "I have had a very refreshing season of prayer with the church here. The Lord was indeed in our midst, and souls were saved at almost every meeting."

SLAVERY has been abolished in the kingdom of Camboge, near Cochin-China, thanks to the influence of France, which exercises a Protectorate over this country.—L'Evangéliste.

THE Evangeliste, speaking of the week of prayer in Paris, says, "Although the addresses were excellent and appropriate to the occasion, yet we should have preferred more prayer."

LAUSANNE.—Pastor Nœf invited the cabmen and commissionaires of the town to a dinner at Christmas; on leaving each man received a New Testament and Almanack.

THE Journal Rèligeux strongly urges the Swiss churches to hold Gospel Missions for at least a week at a time, after the fashion now so well-known and so greatly blessed in England.

MR. HAEGERT, of the Santhal Mission, writes to the Indian Witness reporting some baptisms. He says: "Licensed liquor shops abound, and are cursing scores of villages."

REV. W. H. AITKEN, according to the New York Witness, has accepted an invitation to conduct evangelistic services in the Protestant Episcopal Churches in New York and Brooklyn.

CHINA.—Rev. Dr. Macdonald, who has gone to China as a medical missionary in connection with the Methodist body, gives a very deplorable account of the condition of Chinese women. No country, he thinks, stands more in need of Christianity.

THE MORMONS.—It is said that the Mormon authorities at Salt Lake are negociating for the concession of large tracts of land in Mexico, whither they propose to go if they are too hardly pressed by the United States Government.

BRUSSELS.—The Week of Prayer was observed here by large numbers, and the meetings manifested increased life and interest. The barriers which separate the divers sections of the Protestant Church in Brussels are yielding to hearty union in prayer. —Chretien Belge.

THE CHICAGO AVENUE CHURCH commenced the new year with a vigorous effort, meetings being held every night of the Week of Prayer, led by various members of the church. Evangelistic services commenced the second week, conducted by E. W. Bliss.

BROOKLYN Y.M.C.A.—The Weekly Bulletin of this Association, dated January 10, has the following notice of Bible-readings:—The number attending the Bible-readings of Mr. George Soltau, the English evangelist, who was with us three days last week, was so large as to tax to the utmost the capacity of our parlours. The services were pregnant with interest and power.

PHILADELPHIA, U.S.A.—The annual Week of Prayer was attended by more than the usual blessing in Philadelphia, and we are thankful to the Evangelical Alliance (under God) for its appointment. The churches which actively joined in it were in little neighbourhood groups, including Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists, associated in daily union meetings using in turn their several regular places of worship

A. L. S.

SPAIN.—Mrs. Armstrong and Miss Matthey speak of the difficulty the poor converts have in attending the Lord's Day worship. Agricultural labour is universal on Sunday—work is so scarce and hands so numerous that their position is very difficult. These ladies were very cordially welcomed in the different villages they visited, and their message of love cheered the scattered believers. The soil is very sterile, but the pastors, evangelists, and colporteurs are still sowing in hope.

JAPAN.—The Japan Mail reports a most remarkable preaching service held in Tokio, in the largest theatre of the city. The audiences are variously estimated at from 4500 to 6000 each day. The preaching was mostly by native Japanese pastors, and the people listened eagerly for four hours each day while the Gospel was preached to them. The Mail says: "The large attendance, the earnest attention, with so little dissent or interruption, in so public and free a place as the most popular theatre in Tokio, give evidence of a marked advance in public sentiment in favour of Christianity within the space of one short year." Rev. Dr. Hepburn, of the Presbyterian Mission in Japan, doubts whether a foreign missionary will be needed in that country fifteen or twenty years hence. He says, "If all the foreign missionaries were expelled to-morrow, the work would be carried on by the natives."

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this Edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages. The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.
Rephidim.
Damascus.
Mount Tabor.
Tyre.
Hebron.
Jerusalem from the South.
Shechem—Sychar.
Tiberias.
Bethany.
Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. Porter, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. Porter.

"It is beautifully got up, carefully edited, and all has been done to make the work as useful as possible. Every Christian home ought to have a copy.
Oldham Chronicle.

Also being published in 18 Monthly Parts at Sixpence each.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

"We cannot but express the desire that the circulation of this volume may be as extensive as its merit so well demands. It is elegant in the upgetting; and paper and print are a credit to its enterprising publishers."—British Friend.

Also published in 16 Monthly Parts at Sixpence each.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NEW EDITION, 474 PAGES.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"RIGHT LUNG DISEASED." CASE of Mr. J. R. DAVIES.

This patient (a young man 20 years of age, of great promise as a draughtsman and engineer), whose address is Ty-yn-y-wern Farm, Bedwas, near Cardiff, Glamorganshire, applied to me in August last. He had been suffering for three months. Disease commenced with severe headaches, cold, cough, loss of appetite, night sweats, &c. When he became a patient the cough was harassing, the expectoration yellow and heavy, hæmorrhage had twice occurred, the breathing was constantly affected. Loss of flesh was gradually going on. The family doctor pronounced "the right lung diseased;" and ordered him to the seaside, where he rapidly grew worse.

At this juncture his sister wrote to me, saying, "My poor brother is in deep consumption. I am writing you as a last resource. I am deeply distressed about him, but trust my Heavenly Father may yet be pleased to spare him."

Medicine and advice were forwarded at once. In less than a fortnight the sister wrote word there was some visible improvement. The patient slept better, and cough and expectoration had decreased. Hope had dawned upon her mind.

Letters dated September 14 and 24, October 10 and 23, November 20, &c., all related a gradual improvement.

A recent letter from the patient himself says, "I have been under your treatment for three months with magnificent results. I was in a dreadful state when I commenced, but I can now walk miles with ease, and go up the hills well. I owe you a debt I can never repay, and will recommend your treatment on every occasion."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS.

GREAT SUCCESS.

For the last four weeks we have not been able to offer these Slippers to the public, owing to the demand being so enormous when we advertised before Christmas, that we have only just been able to execute all the orders we received. As many as

1,578 Pairs Sold in One Day.

Having now got over a very large stock, we once again offer them to the public at the same low prices. These Slippers are made of felt throughout, nice-looking, trimmed with imitation fur, and are the most comfortable and the easiest Slippers ever made, and for this weather certainly the most acceptable. The immense number of repeat orders, and the warm letters of praise that we receive, are the best proof of the satisfaction they afford. These Slippers can be had in either black or scarlet at the following prices, post free:—

Ladies' or Children's, 1s. 6d. per pair.

THE BENEVOLENT OR
STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

B. H. Gerrans, Secretary.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College Avenue, Hackney.—Subscriptions are much needed to maintain the children, and to pay off the small debt upon the Home. Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss S. Rye, or Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Thursdays, 7 p.m. Special: Fridays, 7 p.m., Trinity Church, Triangle, Hackney: Baptism of the Holy Ghost and Power for Service.

CRIPPLED BOYS' HOME, Kensington, W.—Instituted in 1865 to feed, clothe, educate on Christian principles, and teach a trade to crippled boys between 12 and 18 years of age. 80 boys now in the Home; accommodation for 100, if funds allowed. Several candidates waiting admission. Funds urgently needed.

H. R. Knipe, Hon. Sec.

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The extra expenses recently incurred in fitting up and furnishing our new Reading-room, which is frequented by Jews daily, and the two additional workers engaged in this growing Mission, necessitates us to appeal to the Lord's people for their prayerful and practical sympathy at this trying time. The Reading-room over the Albion Hall, London-wall, is open daily from 3 till 8 p.m. Meetings for Jews and Jewesses are held regularly, which, together with the distribution of Bibles and tracts, and house to house visitation, have proved a blessing to many sons and daughters of Abraham. As many heart-rending cases of distress and misery are constantly witnessed by us all in the work, we hope the more confidently that the Lord's stewards will strengthen our hands in our extended efforts. Free-will offerings will be gratefully acknowledged, and an Annual Report forwarded by the Missionary Superintendent, Paul Warschawski, 16, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

WHAT READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN" SAY ABOUT MR. B. COPSON GARRATT'S TREATMENT.

From Mr. A. PERI E J, Elms-road, Redhill, Surrey.

January 24, 1885.

"Twelve months ago this day I consulted you respecting a complication of disorders (one being a spinal affection), from most of which I had suffered more or less for over forty years, but which had so increased that I was reduced to a state of weakness and helplessness which disabled me from dressing and undressing myself; indeed it was with great pain and difficulty that I could raise a hand to my head. You recommended and supplied me with an Electric Vest and Belt to wear by day, and Gloves for friction night and morning. From the first use of these Appliances, by God's blessing, I experienced an abatement of the pains in my neck, back and limbs; and, as a consequence, was enabled to sleep a few hours together, which I had not done for many months previously. By degrees my appetite and digestive powers improved, so that I slowly gained strength, and can now dress and undress with ease, and can also do a two-mile walk with very little inconvenience. The improvement has naturally been slow (considering I am nearly 66), but it is continuous; and I am not without hope, should it be the Almighty's will, that I may yet enjoy a share of health in my evening of life. I think my case may well encourage other sufferers to try your remedy, who like myself have proved the uselessness of medicine to relieve their maladies."

"It is now five months since I adopted your treatment for neuralgia in the side; and I am glad to say that at the end of a month I was relieved of all acute pain, and at the end of four months all pain was quite gone. I now have more energy, and can go about my duties with pleasure and comfort. A lady who saw me recently, after an absence of over a year, remarked that I was not like the same person—I looked younger and brighter, and went about with such a quick step that she was quite astonished at the change; and, indeed, I am a different person. After three years of such suffering, to be so well seems marvellous, and almost too good to be true. Recently I undertook a journey, during which I was riding in the train eight hours, and I did not feel the slightest pain; although, when I came to you, I could scarcely bear the motion of the train for the short distance I had to come. As I have tried no other remedy since adopting the Magnetic treatment, I am convinced that it is this alone that has helped me, and I can never sufficiently express my thankfulness to you."

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the Healing Art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send to any address a private list of 950 names as referees.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

WORKS BY JOSEPH PARKER, D.D.

Now Ready, price 8s., the FIRST VOLUME of

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE. By Joseph Parker, D.D., Minister of the City Temple, London.

Vol. I.—THE BOOK OF GENESIS.

The author says:—"In the preparation of 'The People's Bible,' I seem to begin my life-work, the very thing that expresses my supreme purpose and highest hope. This is not a Bible Commentary in the usual sense of that term. It is a pastor's commentary upon such portions of Holy Scripture as are of obvious and immediate importance to the growth of the soul in divine wisdom, and is therefore not intended to take the place of the verbal and critical commentaries which so ably represent the latest phases of Christian erudition."

THE INNER LIFE OF CHRIST, as Revealed in the Gospel of Matthew. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Vol. I., "These Sayings of Mine." 8vo. 8s. Eighth edition.

THE INNER LIFE OF CHRIST. Vol. II. "Servant of All." 8vo., 8s. Tenth thousand.

THE INNER LIFE OF CHRIST. Vol. III. "Things Concerning Himself." 8vo., 8s. Eighth edition.

APOSTOLIC LIFE, as Revealed in the Acts of the Apostles. By Joseph Parker, D.D. In 3 vols., 8vo. Sold separately, price 8s. each.

"These lectures are in substance rich and strong, overflowing with ideas expressed in the rapid, direct, and telling style of the best spoken discourse."—Dr. Marcus Dods in the Expositor, February.

TYNE CHILDE: My Life and Teaching. Partly in the daylight of Fact, partly in the limelight of Fancy. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Third thousand, 8vo., price 8s.

The Christian.

"CREATURELY ACTIVITY."

IT is with considerable diffidence that I approach this subject, because, in the first place, it is almost impossible to avoid misconstruction in dealing with it; and, in the second, those for whom the warning is least intended are most likely to apply it, not to themselves, but to their neighbours whose busy devoted lives form an uncomfortable foil to their own.

Nevertheless, I am under the impression that while religious magazines and sermons are constantly stirring up to "more work in the vineyard," there is, as in nearly every case, room for a companion voice of warning lest this activity verge into something less worthy—a kind of restless excitement, which grows as necessary to the "worker," as a round of balls or parties does to the members of "society."

Mission and similar work is generally spoken of as a path of self-denial, and, undoubtedly, it frequently is, especially when first entered on at the expense of more selfish pursuits. But observation assures me that when "in the full swing" of such work, the labourer is rewarded with a delightful sense of usefulness, of developing energy and power, of the growing respect and gratitude of those around him, of that rare blessed sense of "doing good" which gradually transforms the distasteful and unlovely surroundings into a positively pleasant spot. All would go well if it ended here; but, unhappily, here it does not always end. The pressure from outside, from well-meaning associates, and the still more subtle pressure from within, which has its origin in a restless desire to be always moving and doing, gradually absorbs the whole life till it practically becomes a round of committees, Temperance platforms, or Sunday-schools. Far be it from me to deny, for a moment, that this is the life for which some, perhaps many, are intended. For these, home claims are light, perhaps nil, and social duties equally unimportant; also, in some rare instances, there may be those who are called upon to sacrifice the good of those dearest and nearest, in view of the perishing thousands around them. But this is a course which should be very clearly seen before it is followed.

But outside these there appears to exist a ring of men and women who, having fallen into a habit of being always "busy," have lost the power of being interested under any other conditions than those which carry them from one meeting to another. They pack the week with engagements thick and threefold, and should an unfortunate lapse occur, and they are condemned to a few hours of quiet at home, they are tormented with a sense of inertia, so flat, stale, and unprofitable as to be almost intolerable. Their life becomes a purely outside life. The expensive education which, perhaps, loving parents strained to give them, the social advantages which are open to them, are lost. Intellectual studies are brought down to a superficial cramming for a popular lecture, or skimming text books for a Sunday class.

But if the evil ended with themselves it would matter much less. Those who have taken upon them home ties cannot throw aside, lightly, these responsibilities. Perhaps, while the speaker at a blue-ribbon meeting is expatiating on the sorrows and loneliness of the drunkard's wife, sitting alone waiting for her husband's late return, his own drawing-room may show a companion picture, where for weeks together the wife sits solitary, and the children never see their father because he is always at meetings. Here, whatever be the gain, is a serious loss, and one which not unfrequently brings a terrible reckoning, and all because a good and noble impulse has been allowed to "run out" into an immoderate habit, and unbalanced the whole life.

Keep a watch on these impulses and only obey them when they are in direct and immediate parallelism with God's will, and all will be well. The work will gain by a due admixture of mental change and repose. Gospel and Temperance addresses will lose their anecdotal monotony and superficial character when the speakers allow their own minds to feast on "pastures new," and the meetings will have a freshness and power hitherto unknown when their leaders come in, not "just to see how they are going on, and because they have no other place to attend," but because they have a direct message to give them. TREASURES UPON EARTH.

THERE are many maxims in Political Economy, which, sounding well in the lecture-room, do not bear the test of outdoor dissection, and perhaps one of the most specious of them is that which contains the statement that the increase of wealth is a benefit to the community as a whole. If the definition of wealth, as given by a correspondent at Belfast, in a letter which appeared in this journal for Jan. 1, "cheapness of the products of labour aided by capital" could be accepted, there would be less objection to the teaching; but, unfortunately, in the majority of cases cheapness of the products of labour implies the insufficient remuneration of the producer, the capitalist meeting competition, not by foregoing a portion of his profits, but by lowering the wages of the worker. In the end, therefore, the increased wealth of the few means the greater poverty of the many, and if, as the same correspondent stated, the Factory Acts have hampered and lessened the production of wealth, it certainly has not been in the way indicated, by reducing competition and keeping up wages; but rather by taking it out of the power of the unscrupulous capitalist to add to his wealth at the cost of the lives of children and women.

The fact that before the passing of the Ten Hours Bill it was possible for employers of labour to add to their wealth by increasing at will the hours of work, and shortening the lives of the operatives, whose lot was less enviable than that of a galley slave, moved Richard Oastler to undertake his sacred mission on behalf of the defenceless toilers, and stirred George Cruikshank to his noblest and most pathetic work; and it is true that, Factory Acts notwithstanding, much of the wealth of which we boast to-day has been amassed in an equally unrighteous manner.

Professor Leone Levi has quite recently published statistics which go to show that the total annual income of the working classes of the United Kingdom is £521,000,000, or "an average of about 32s. per week per family, a fair amount if equally divided," the net income of the nation being about £1,000,000,000. But, on the other hand, only a few months ago the Archbishop of Canterbury, in a public meeting, referred to the female tailors in London, who are paid threepence for making a little boy's suit of clothes, and surely it is not too much to assume that where threepence is the market value of such protracted toil, the "cheapness of the products of labour aided by capital" is attained not by any sacrifice on the part of the capitalist, but by the suffering and starvation of the worker. Such cheapness may indeed be an adjunct to our high civilisation, but the civilisation must be that of a nation whose noble virtues are dying under the baneful and blighting influence of competition and the love of gain.

A writer whose volumes have been lauded as being "adapted to the wants of the age," has, with very questionable morality, advised his "young men," that "great fortunes are to be made by understanding how to cater for the foibles and the weaknesses of humanity;" but he might have gone even further, and have pointed out how fortunes might be made out of human lives—wealth like that of the men who, sheltering themselves behind economistic maxims as to the "market value" of labour, have been utterly regardless of both the bodies and the souls of the producers; or like that of those who supply articles which are destructive to the majority of the consumers, and productive of evil and misery in every form.

Wealth built upon such foundations cannot be a benefit to the community at large. A portion of it may indeed be given in charity, but that cannot repair the wrong done in its collection.

The one fact that as our wealth increases poverty and misery in our large towns increase in proportion, proves that the wealth is not acquired in accordance with those principles of righteousness and justice which should be the keystone and the foundations of the life of every Christian. It is not Communism but Christianity that is wanted. The teachings of Mill and Fawcett contain nothing sufficiently potent to save us from the retribution which seems to be impending; but the individual obedience of Christians to the Divine laws of Christ, which deal not only with the rewards of heaven, but also with wages upon earth, certainly do; and men who really are seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness will not hesitate long in their choice between the inflexible and unselfish directions given by Jesus, and the cut and dried, heartless maxims of political economists. The business profits of the man who in these things also follows the Master, may be less than those of his unscrupulous competitor, but "he that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor."

LAST WEEK'S MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

GOD'S nobility are often found, like Carey and Livingstone, among the toiling classes, and their native nobleness obliges them to seek the high places of the field. But God also honours the holders of the world's wealth or position with a share of the blue blood of heaven, and it is not surprising that these also should press to the front of missionary enterprise.

The great gathering last week that crowded every corner of Exeter Hall and overflowed into the lesser hall below, was one of very remarkable and even historic interest. It formed a fitting climax to a series of meetings in London and the provinces that can find no parallel, we believe, in the records of Missions to the unevangelised world. Larger bands of workers have often left our shores for distant fields of Gospel service, and there have been in recent years many valedictory occasions that have exercised a potent and stimulating effect on the churches at home. When we consider the social position, attainments, and influence of the six young men who are now on their way to China, and the wide-spread attention to the claims of foreign Missions that their going forth has produced in circles hitherto closed to such matters, we repeat that the thing is unprecedented in the evangelistic annals of the world. It would not perhaps be easy to connect in complete succession the various links in the chain of events that have culminated so happily, but we cannot help feeling that two important links are the London Missions of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It will be an unspeakable joy to these brethren to know that such far-reaching fruits are growing out of their earnest labours in the Gospel in this land.

The meeting in Exeter Hall, as we have said, was crowded to overflowing, despite the storm of wind and rain that passed over Central London at the hour of meeting. Men of mark in the ranks of Christian workers at home were as plentiful, on and around the platform, as blackberries in autumn. We observed, in the body of the audience, at least one well-known Member of Parliament who has not, so far as common reputation goes, hitherto shown any active personal interest in religious matters. Mr. George Williams filled the chair, and filled it well. When, in the name of the British and Foreign Bible Society, he presented each of the departing band of brethren with a copy of the New Testament printed in Chinese, the enthusiasm of the audience was raised to a high point, at which it remained throughout the entire proceedings.

We have not the space to reproduce the excellent addresses of the six young men who were the centre of the evening's interest. For an admirable and pretty full report of them we are glad to refer our readers to the Nonconformist and Independent of last week. Mr. Stanley Smith dwelt with much force and unction on the blessing that would return to the heart of Christian England if she liberally sent forth to the dark places of the earth, the Gospel light in which she herself is bathed. On the other hand, if she continued to be niggardly in this matter, poverty of spirit would follow within her own borders. Mr. Smith was singularly impressive when he spoke of the thirst of Christ for the salvation of the heathen, and of the Church's responsibility to see to it that the longing desires of His heart were fulfilled.

Mr. M. Beauchamp said he counted it a high privilege to go out as an ambassador of Christ, and counselled his hearers to covet the like privilege. Mr. D. E. Hoste (late of the Royal Artillery) gave a very clear testimony to the utterly unsatisfying character of a worldly life, and rejoiced that he had been counted worthy to become a messenger of the Cross in China. The utterance of Rev. W. W. Cassel was a very weighty one. They were not going out, he said, on speculation. They had experienced in themselves and seen in others the mighty converting grace of God, and they were assured that the power of God was not less in China than in England. In words that were most solemn and well chosen, he appealed to his fellow-Christians to come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty," if they would avoid the condemnation passed on the tribes of old who sought their own ease when they should have been fighting the battles of the Lord. Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner, and his brother, Mr. Arthur Polhill-Turner, told of the surpassing joy they had experienced since they gave themselves to the Lord. One of them, contrasting the bondage of the world with the freedom of Christian service, said he felt like a bird let out of a cage. Last of all came Mr. C. T. Studd, who received a great ovation, and who repeated, with much quiet grace and simplicity, the story of God's leadings, from his restoration from a backsliding state to the dedication of his life for service in the China Mission-field.

There were other speakers, all of whom held the interested attention of the meeting. Mr. Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission, gave a little outline sketch of the Society's remarkable history, and drew attention to the presence on the platform of forty undergraduates from Cambridge, besides a band of Wesleyan students from Richmond. Mr. R. J. Landale, speaking from experience of the Chinese, said the work among them deserved the best men England could send. He trusted that not seven only nor seventy, but 700 might soon go forth in the same way. Mr. Farthing, of Cambridge, as the mouthpiece of his fellow-students, thanked God for the benefit that had come to the Universities through the visits of Messrs. Smith and Studd. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, as a representative of those staying at home, bade their departing brethren God-speed, and rejoiced to believe that brighter days were dawning for the Evangelical Gospel than they or their fathers had seen. Then they were commended to God in prayer by Rev. J. F. Waller, and the great company dispersed.

The missionary party left Victoria Station for Dover on Thursday morning, a number of their relatives and a few old college friends assembling to bid them farewell. "The Crowning Day is Coming" was sung as the hour of departure drew near, and many a silent prayer was offered that the presence of the Lord should accompany the little band.

In the Record of last week, the Oxford and Cambridge correspondents tell of the wonderful farewell gatherings at these University centres. The latter says "it was, we can hardly doubt, the most remarkable missionary meeting held within living memory at Cambridge."

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—The Clothworkers' Company have voted a contribution of £20, and the Gunmakers' Company £5, to the funds of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche and Orphan Home in Stepney.

A SAILORS' HOME FOR PORT SAID.—One who spends her life in the distribution of the Scriptures, on the shores of the Mediterranean, writes from Port Said, January 22:—"A Christian, who does not give any name, has given Mr. Eoll £100 towards building a Mission house instead of a Bethel ship. The land alone will cost £500, as it is £3 a yard, and for the rest it will require another £500. We pray the Lord to give all. He should have a hall for meetings, and coffee shop and dormitory for sailors. How much such a place is wanted! We have had prayer together, and commend the whole matter to the Lord."

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

THE annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society on Wednesday afternoon last week, in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall, again brought to view the persistent efforts which are being made for the evangelisation of many in isolated places in India. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird presided. The presence of Mr. and Mrs. Fordyce after their long sojourn in India, and the earnest address of the former, added greatly to the interest of the meeting.

The Chairman said their Scotch friends had up to the present shown more interest in the work of the Society than the English. If a few friends in London would place their drawing-rooms at the disposal of the Society for meetings, the information which Mr. Fordyce could impart would tend to make English Christians hearty in its support.

Rev. P. Bannatyne, secretary, said that during another year the Society had continued to occupy very extensive districts throughout the country. Their agents had endeavoured to use all available means of evangelisation. A warm welcome had been given to their ministrations everywhere, and it was encouraging to know that an increasing interest in spiritual things had been manifested. During the year the pecuniary contributions from India had been larger than ever, amounting to nearly £500.

Rev. John Fordyce, in giving an account of fourteen years' work in India, as the Society's Commissioner, said he had in that time travelled more than 100,000 miles in its service. He fully believed that a great future was before the society. Mrs. Fordyce had travelled a good deal of that distance with him, and when he went on into places whither she could not accompany him, she had been busily at work elsewhere. The work was beset with difficulties, geographical, climatic, and pecuniary. There was also the difficulty of securing agents, because the Society was not in a position to offer them permanent engagements. In answer to prayer, however, they had been favoured with the services of several remarkably gifted men, some from England and some from India. They had now greater facilities than formerly for carrying on the work. The great railway companies and the Government had given them passes over about 8000 miles, and he himself had travelled over more than half the railways of India. Generally speaking, notwithstanding ecclesiastical difficulties, good thorough-going Protestants proved themselves the friends of this Society, and laymen of the English Church had helped him most heartily. In referring to those whose sympathy had been of great value, he mentioned Sir W. Wilberforce Turner, who had drawn up the large map by which he had now and again illustrated his remarks, and the late Lord Lawrence. In grateful terms he alluded to the kindness of Lady Kinnaird, whose sympathy and help had been of the greatest value.

The meeting was cordially addressed by Rev. J. B. Outram, Mr. Donald Matheson, Rev. Mr. Stevenson, of Madras, and was closed with prayer by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay-park.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING FOR GIRLS.—Miss Ardagh, 49, Gloucester-street, Belgrave-road, S.W., sends an interesting account of an effort that is successfully being made in the neighbourhood of Drury-lane, to teach poor girls the art and practice of cookery. She asks for help in connection with a sewing-class held for the girls. Any friends who can respond will obtain full details on application to Miss Ardagh.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—During the last month some fourteen meetings, attended by nearly 1000 women, have been held in London, Winchester, and Cambridge. There have been many signs of deep repentance and some good cases of rescue. A conversazione of English and Foreign women was held in Regent-street. A large number came and were waited on by self-denying Christian ladies, both German and English. Some German women were at once, at their own request, taken to a Home for foreigners. Mr. John H. L. Christien, organising secretary, is greatly in want of tracts, and will be greatly obliged for any sent to the office, 8A, Red Lion-square, W.C.

For the Young.

A CHILD'S LETTER.

A "Christian Governess" writes:—"Perhaps it may interest some of the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN to see the following letter, written by a little girl, aged ten, to a child who would not go to Sunday-school. Being anxious to find a suitable employment for my pupils on Sunday afternoons, an idea occurred to me that they might write helpful letters to some Sunday-school children living at a distance whose names I knew. These letters have been much blessed by God; they are written and composed without any outside help, but prayer is offered before commencing them. Parents, big brothers, &c., read them, and as each one is different, and as they are sent by post with no name attached, they are looked upon as a message from God Himself."

MY DEAR BLANCHE,—I thought I would write you a letter, as I know something about you. I hope you go very often to the Sunday-school, because it is very kind of people to take such trouble to bring you to love Jesus. So you ought to go as often as you can, for some little children have not got the advantage of having a kind teacher to come and teach you to love the dear Lord Jesus. And you know if the Lord Jesus was going to teach you how you would be pleased, how you would learn your lessons perfectly, and you would sit quite still, listening; but Jesus is there; He is there all the while, only you do not see Him. How still you ought to sit if Jesus is there. Try if you cannot sit very still, listening with all your ears. How pleased Jesus would be, and also your teachers.

Then try and be gentle and kind, and when your brothers and sisters are very cross, just say this little prayer, "Dear Jesus, please do not let me be cross, and please make them not cross," and then you will see such a difference. But if they go on being cross, go on praying till they stop being cross. Then in the mornings and evenings say this prayer. In the mornings say, "Dear Lord Jesus, keep me this day, and do not let me be cross at all; help me to run errands, and if anyone's cross let me be kind. Amen." And in the evenings say, "Dear Jesus, forgive me if I have been cross; thank you for taking care of me all the day, and take care of me all the night, and be Thou sitting by my bed all the night. Amen."

Then, if you have asked trustingly, you will have such a nice day, and at evening you will say, "I have walked with God to-day." And He will be with you all night, and you will always have such a nice day. I always think it's a good plan to give one's-self to God when you awake and when you go to sleep, so that if you die you will go to heaven and not to hell. Try to think about what I have said to you about going to school; do do it. Good-bye.

A little girl called MAY.

NOTES ON THE
SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

FEBRUARY 12.—MATTHEW XI. 1—15.

VERSE 5.—"The poor have the Gospel preached to them."—Come, poor sinner! poor spiritually, I mean, and it may be literally poor also,—ye people that have not bread for the body, come to this Bread of Life; ye that have not raiment for the body, come to this garment of salvation; ye that have not a roof to shelter your heads, come to this shelter—to this habitation. And then, when all this pomp and splendour shall have passed away, you shall have a glory brighter than ten thousand suns, a crown of glory, a kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world! Oh, why will you not come to Jesus? All things should then be yours, for "ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." Come, ye friendless, ye outcast, ye long wanderers from God, and Jesus will receive you. Come, from the crowned head to the poorest pauper, come! He bids me say, "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." He is furnished, appointed, and constituted to bless you.—Bishop Gregg.

FEBRUARY 13.—MATTHEW XI. 16—30.

Children are mentioned three times in this passage. In verse 16, "Children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows;" children playing in the streets (see Zech. viii. 5), and in their games disagreeing one with another as they do sometimes. Jesus noticed the children of his day, and observed their recreations as He walked among them, and He watches little ones now. He does not censure their playing, but in play would have them kind and forbearing one with another.

Verse 19 speaks of the children of wisdom; so we read of "the children of light" and "the children of the day." Read Proverbs viii. 1—6, 32—36. Children should receive Jesus into their hearts, He is "the wisdom of God," then they become the children of wisdom.

FEBRUARY 14.—MATTHEW XII 1—13

VERSE 4.—The word "shewbread" means literally facebread, or "bread of presence," that is, bread fit to be, or honoured to be set, in the presence of the king. Its name had reference to the place which it occupied in the Sanctuary. It was ever in JEHOVAH'S presence—BEFORE HIS FACE ALWAYS. Christ Jesus is the true shewbread. On Him the eye of Jehovah ever looks with infinite delight. He is the "bread of God." Christ, too, is our "staff of life." He who is the bread of God is our bread also; the "Living Bread;" the bread of our life. By faith we eat his flesh, and drink his blood. We live only as we feed upon Him (John vi. 53).—Frank H. White.

FEBRUARY 15.—MATTHEW XII. 14—30.

VERSE 20.—"A bruised reed shall He not break."—A loving mother was talking to her child one night, when she went to bed, about something she had done wrong during the day. Little Mary acknowledged all, and promised to try to do better. Just as her mother was giving her the parting kiss, she said, "Mother, what will God do about all the naughty things I have done already? What will happen to me for that?" The mother felt how very important this question was, so she asked God to teach her to say the right words; and then replied, "God will forgive your past sins for the sake of Jesus Christ, Mary, if you ask Him." "Won't He count them anything? Won't He punish me at all for them?" "No," said the mother; "He will forgive them." "Why, how good," said Mary, and lay thinking over it deeply, and then turned over to go to sleep. How sweet it is to go to sleep while thinking on the goodness of God, and the love of Jesus!—Felix Friendly.

FEBRUARY 16.—MATTHEW XII. 31—50.

VERSE 36.—"For every idle word that men shall speak."—In Grecian history we read how the Athenians erected to Lœcena's memory a bronze statue of a lioness without a tongue. She was put to the torture, but would not give the name of her lover, one of the conspirators who had helped to slay Hipparchus. Some say she bit out her tongue lest she should disclose anything. Let us learn from her, and feel that we would rather bite out our tongue than say an unkind, untrue word, which can never be recalled. Better still, let us have this prayer ever rising in our heart and to our lips:—

"Set, Lord, a watch before my mouth,
Keep of my lips the door;
My heart incline Thou not unto
The ills I should abhor."

Mrs. Simpson.

FEBRUARY 17.—MATTHEW XIII. 1—17.

There are seven parables in this chapter, all of them telling us about the kingdom of heaven, which Jesus came to set up, and which is now ruling in the hearts of all who trust and serve Him. The parable of the Sower tells us of Christ sowing the good seed of the Gospel, which He first of all gave to his disciples, and then commanded them to preach to every creature. Has that good seed fallen into your heart, and is it bringing forth fruit in your life?

VERSE 7.—"The thorns sprang up and choked them."—The weeds which spring up in a cornfield are many and various, so are those which spring up in the heart of a boy or girl. There is untruthfulness, deception, meanness, talebearing, evil speaking, unkind thoughts, and many others. These, if left to flourish, will choke the good seed. But read Prov. iv. 23, and 1 Pet. iv. 19.—C. B.

FEBRUARY 18.—MATTHEW XIII. 18—30.

VERSE 23.—"Which also beareth fruit."—Here, then, is what the Lord seeks from every one of us—fruit. A master comes to his garden. He turns over leaves of pear and plum trees, and he looks along the branches of the peach trees. "Trees look very healthy, don't they, sir," says the gardener, in a satisfied way. Then they pass into the orchard. "Nice trees these, sir," observes the gardener; "very choice sorts, golden pippin, and russet." Then they turn to the hot-houses: "Vines and pines look very promising," says the gardener, smiling complacently. At last the master speaks out, half angrily, "What in the world is the use of healthy trees, and of choice sorts, and of promising plants? I don't want green leaves and fine young wood only; I want fruit. And if you can't get it, I must find somebody that can." The Lord of the vineyard comes to us. He stands before us and looks underneath the leaves of our profession, searching for fruit. Good desires, good feelings, good endeavours, all our praying, all our believing, everything else counts for nothing unless there be some fruit. This is what our Master requires and seeks.—Mark Guy Pearse.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—A large meeting was held at Cradley Heath, near Dudley, on Monday, February 2, in a spacious theatre, occupied by the Salvation Army. Mr. James Wookey addressed an audience of over 500 men only; fifty-five signed the Gospel Purity Pledge.

ANOTHER STRANGERS' REST IN LIVERPOOL.—What it is to be hoped will develop into a useful Mission centre was recently opened by a Gospel Temperance meeting underneath St. James's Hall, Lime-street, Liverpool. The mission is a branch of the Strangers' Rest which has been established for some eight years in Park-lane. The object of the Rest is to provide for foreign sailors, and the large number of emigrants who pass through this city during the year, a place where they can attend Gospel services spoken in their own tongue. The services will be conducted in the following languages according to the nationality of those present:—namely, Swedish, German, Spanish, and sometimes French, Italian, and English. Bible classes are to be conducted by a band of ladies and gentlemen who have come forward to the good cause voluntarily, nearly every afternoon, and meetings will be held in the evenings. Another object of this excellent work is that which will enable sailors to come and write letters in the room on the ground floor. Meetings are held every Sunday afternoon, and every night at half-past seven o'clock. One of the workers present at the opening service writes: "What a grand time we had in it on Saturday night. Several of the people who professed to be converted that night have been back since."

EDWARD IRVING'S GREAT MISSIONARY SERMON.

AN EXTRACT.

WITHOUT staff, without shoes, they fared on their way two by two, their sandalled feet exposed to dust and sultry heat, their bodies to every blast of heaven, their natural wants to man's precarious charity. The most defenceless bird that flies athwart the heavens, the weakest, most persecuted beast that cowers beneath the covert, or scuds along the plain, are better provided with visible help than were these apostles of the Highest; for the birds of the air have nests to which to wing their flight at eventide, and the beasts of the earth have holes wherein to screen themselves from pursuit; but the founders of the spiritual and everlasting Kingdom had not where to lay their heads.

Whom, having thus divided from the resources which human weakness hath in the storehouse and armory of nature, He next divided from the resources which she hath in the power and patronage and friendship of men. They are to compose no speeches for the ears of prince or governor, but to speak as the Spirit of truth gave them utterance. They are not to go from house to house making friends against the evil day, but to abide where they first halted so long as they are welcome; and they are not even to salute a friend, acquaintance, or neighbour by the way. And if, in spite of these precautions, it should come to pass that the people they conferred with were well disposed to them for their word's sake, should take pity upon their unprovided estate, and offer them money to help them on their way, lo, they have no purse for containing it. If they should offer them provision to be their viaticum from town to town, lo, they have no scrip wherein to bestow it! They cannot possess, they cannot accumulate, they are cut off from all fixed and movable wealth which the world holdeth within its fair and ample bound. What will preserve life, they are to take upon the credit of their universal message, without feeling obligation, for the labourer is worthy of his meat, and they are wholly obliged to another cause.

In no earthly shape can they benefit from their labours under the sun; to no account can they turn the children of men, from whose liberality they can profit no further than to live. Like Jonah, commissioned with the burden of Nineveh, they are to gird up their loins and make speed; they are to hie from house to house, and hasten from town to town, inquiring after the spirits of immortal men; to tell their tale and hurry onward, as the heralds of the Northern chiefs were wont to hasten from house to house and from village to village, when rousing the mountain clans to war. And cause truly see I none why they who hold the commission to make peace should not be as fleet as those who hold the commission to levy war; why the messenger of salvation fly with as hasty a wing as the messenger of death; why servants should not be found to do as much and do it as hastily for the King of Heaven, as for the lordly chieftain of a mountain clan, or the throned monarch of a mighty land.

Thus disfurnished of resources from Nature's storehouse, and hindered from ploughing with human help, do you ask if these first Missioners of the Gospel had promises of welcome everywhere, and went forth on a flourishing and popular cause? if the way was prepared for them in every city, and a hospitable home made ready for them in every house? Hear what their Lord saith to them at parting: “Go your ways: behold I send you as sheep in the midst of wolves. Beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues, and ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake; and the brother shall deliver up the brother, and the father the child, and the children shall rise up against the parents, and cause them to be put to death; and ye shall be hated of all men for my Name's sake.” Such was their heavy parting. No missionary that ever went to the heathen fared in this way with so gloomy a foreboding, so cheerless a farewell. Let no one object, in the face of these predictions too truly fulfilled, “But these are not men like us, open to every want; they are inspired, miracle-working men, who had Nature under their control.” Their miracles, which saved many, protected not themselves; their inspirations, which blessed many, could not preserve themselves from every harm and sorrow which patient nature could endure. They are to be placed at the bar of civil law, to be hunted out with religious persecution; against them the tender affections of life are to rise in arms, and the soft and downy scenes of home are to bristle like the iron front of war; the tender hands which are wont to pluck the thorns of sorrow from our feet, are to guide the weapons of their death; of all men they are to be hated for his Name's sake; they are to be hunted like the partridge on the mountains, and every refuge upon the earth is to be hidden from their sight. “Go,” said He, “my chosen ones, go like the defenceless lamb into the paw of the ravenous wolf; the world thirsteth for your blood, and is in arms for your undefended lives. Nevertheless go. You are without weapons of defence, no bribes are in your hands, nor soft words upon your tongues; and you go in the teeth of hatred, derision, and rage. Nevertheless, my children, go.”

They are launched into a stormy sea; a sea of storms and shipwreck is before them, and their frail bark is not fenced or fitted out for any storm, or furnished for any voyage. So the world would say, because so it seemeth in the eye of the world, which looketh but upon the visible and temporal forms of things. It is madness, they would say, moon-struck madness, to think that of such should come any speed; it is not in the nature of things they should exist a week in any region of the earth, and in barbarous regions not a single day. No policy of insurance would do their risk at any premium; they are shipwrecked, castaway creatures, doomed to death, and destined to effect no good, even if they should outlive their first outsetting. Men must have a livelihood before they can speak or act; they must have protection to cover them from the tyranny of power, and law to save them from the riots of the people; they must be well paid if you would have them work well, for if a man have no comforts his life is miserable.

What! such mendicants as these convert the world? say the well-conditioned classes; vagrant vagabond fellows, they are fitter for the stocks of the common gaol. Such illiterate clowns, such babblers as these instruct mankind! say the learned classes; away with them to their nets and fishing craft. And, say the political classes, it is dangerous to the State; they cover plots under their silly pretences, and must be dealt with by the strong hand of power. Methinks I hear, in every contemptible and arrogant speech which is vented against the modern missionaries by worldly and self-sufficient men, the echo, after two thousand years, of those speeches which were wont to be poured upon the twelve apostles and seventy disciples when they began to emerge out of the foundation of society into the neighbourhood and level of its higher ranks.

But the Wonderful Counsellor, in whom dwelt all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and who knew what was in man, did not without good and sufficient cause divorce the human desires from those objects on which they naturally rest. He knew that if he gave the messengers of his Kingdom, which is not of this world, and against which this world conspireth, to expect any ray of hope, any shadow of consolation, or scantling of support from the things of this world, it would be only to disappoint them in the end; for although He foresaw that fair weather would dawn, and much enjoyment be partaken in the progress, and towards the latter end of the work, He saw hanging over its first beginnings in every region of the earth storms and tempests and terrific commotions, out of which the eclipsed light of truth was to come forth, and the day of peace to be established. He knew that in every realm his truth was to make way against the edge of the sword, and, like the phœnix, to procreate itself in the flame of fire, and that his servants were to be heard from the paw of the lion and from the horn of the unicorn; wherefore it booted not to amuse those who were to plant the plant, and those who were to propagate the plant, with the enjoyments which were to be partaken under its future shade. So He spoke plainly unto them and said, “If ye have not a heart for the extremes of human sufferings, and a soul above the fear of man, ye need not undertake this work—more perilous than war, more adventurous than a voyage to ‘regions of thick-ribbed ice,’ and more important to the earth than the most sacred legation which ever went forth on behalf of suffering and insulted humanity.”

But, while He cut them off from the power and virtue of gold and silver, which, they say, will unlock barred gates and scale frowning ramparts; while He denied them the scrip, and therewith hindered the accumulation or use of property in any form; while He forbade them change of raiment, that is, pleasure and accommodation of the person; and with their staff interdicted all ease of travel and recreation of the sense by the way; and in hindering salutations, hindered the formalities of life and the ends of natural or social affection; all the natural motives to enterprise, and the sweet rewards of success, while He cut asunder (because, as hath been said, He foresaw that whether He did so or not the world would soon do it for them), He did not leave their minds in a void state, without motive or inducement, or hope of reward. But He proceeded to fill each several chamber thereof with the spirit of a more enduring patience, and a more adventurous daring: to give to faith what He took from sight. What He interdicted in the visible to supply from the invisible; what of temporal things He spoiled them of to repay with things spiritual and eternal.

And instead of a home He gave them this declaration, which raised them first to a footing with Himself, and then to a footing with God: “He that receiveth you receiveth Me, and He that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward.” Instead of food He gave them this promise: “Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, Verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.” Instead of protection and a safe conduct on the way, He gave them this stout-hearted admonition; “Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to kill both soul and body in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.” And when delivered up to councils, and brought before governors and kings, instead of human help and countenance, and skill of pleading, and persuasive words, He gave them this sentence: “When they deliver you up, take no thought of how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.” And when their fathers and mothers should betray them, and their sons and daughters should spit upon them, which the first confessors sadly proved, He gave them this consolation to their heavy hearts: “He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me, is not worthy of Me.”

For their sustenance under false accusation He gave them this comfort: “The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household." For the comfort of their hearts under blackening calumnies, when the sun of light was setting under thick and dark clouds of falsehood, and their name was likely to be overshadowed forever, He gave them this assurance: "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known; what I tell you in darkness that speak ye in light; what ye hear in the ear that preach ye on the housetops." And for their use when they were enveloped in the flames, or extended upon the honourable cross, He gave them this heart-establishing word: "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me. He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." And to keep up a constant cheerfulness in their hearts under every hardship and mistreatment, He gave them to know and to rejoice that their names were written in heaven, removing their confidence from every thing terrestrial that it might rest at the right hand of God, where there is fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore.

Thus furnished He his missioners, building them up in faith, and establishing them with infallible promise, weaning them from the bosom of the earth to place them in the bosom of their Father in heaven. He took them from the hands of human protection to put them under the arm of the mighty God of Jacob. He emptied them of self dependence and dependence upon human strength and prudence, to fill them with the spirit of wisdom and truth. He bestowed upon them the elements of heaven's heroism when he took from them the elements of earth's heroism; and He conveyed their treasure away from hence, where moths corrupt and thieves break through to steal, depositing them safely in the heavens; where also He prepared for them a place in his Father's house of many mansions, and wrote their honoured names in the Book of Life.

It was a spiritual work they had to do, therefore He disembodied (if I may so speak) and spiritualised the men who were to do it. It was faith they had to plant, therefore He made his missionaries men of faith, that they might plant faith, and faith alone. They had to deliver the nations from the idolatry of gold and silver, therefore He took care his messengers should have none. He had to deliver them from the idolatry of wisdom, therefore He took care they should be foolish. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of power and might, therefore He took care they should be weak. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of fame and reputation, therefore He took care they should be despised. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of things that are, therefore He took care they should be as things that are not, making them in all respects types and representatives of the ritual they were to establish, models of the doctrine which they went forth to teach.

CITY POLICE CHILDREN.—Three hundred of the City Police children were recently entertained at the Fox and Knot Schools, Charterhouse-street. After tea, singing and recitation by the children themselves, Mr. Thomas Russell (Missionary to the City Police) gave a lecture on "The Life of Christ," illustrated by the aid of a magic-lantern that exhibited fifty-five beautiful views. A friend who kindly paid for the entertainment spoke a few words encouraging the little ones to love their Saviour, obey their parents, and join the Band of Hope.

"SERMONS IN TREES."—Such was the title of a lecture delivered on the 2nd instant, at Talbot Tabernacle, Westbourne-park, by Pastor Frank H. White. The occasion was the quarterly meeting of the members and friends of the Open-air Mission, who first met for tea in Powis Hall as Mr. and Mrs. White's guests, and then joined the general public in the Tabernacle for the lecture. Numerous beautiful dissolving views admirably placed lent a peculiar charm to the subject, and point to the lecture. The principal plants of the Bible passed before the eye, and afforded the opportunity for much homely teaching; choice incidents and poetic quotations being appositely introduced: Mr. White mentioning incidentally, that about sixty natural objects were referred to in Christ's teaching. No preacher could have listened to such a lecture without being able to preach better as a consequence.

A MESSAGE FROM MANITOBA.

DEAR SIR,—In the name of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of this place, I thank you and your readers for the hearty response to my appeal on behalf of our Coffee Room and Free Reading-room. I could tell some touching incidents about the distribution of the tracts.

Reading to-day in your columns for November (which reached this distant land only last week), I have been filled with longing that our work for the Lord here might share in the prayers and sympathies of the labourers in the old country, who are giving and doing so much, while we are so crippled that our Union seems to be bound hand and foot. Still, the love for souls burns within some hearts so strongly that, with a thermometer many degrees below the cipher, one and another of our members every Sunday afternoon walk a mile and a half over the prairie to the county gaol to hold a Bible reading with the prisoners there. To-day I talked with one man confined there, who told me he belonged to Devonshire. We talked to him about the love of Christ, and sang with him "The old, old story" once more. Now, our hearts go out in prayer for these poor men. Another Englishman of good connections is under sentence for forgery. Nearly all have taken the Gospel Temperance pledge, and wear the blue ribbon. Two Catholics amongst the number regularly attend our little services. Two notorious "cow-boys," committed six months ago for horse-stealing, left last week, sending us a letter of thanks, written in rhyme, before departing from Brandon.

If I could but interest your readers so that you could feel our need of assistance, I am assured that our lack of books for these prisoners to read would at least be supplied from the dear old mother country, whence most of us here have had our origin. The prisoners eagerly read the copies of old country illustrated papers, which, now and again we take them. I am trying to get money enough to buy a set of Rev. W. Haslam's works, so suited to any capacity, but money seems in such demand for other necessaries that as yet I am not in funds for this purpose. Our Union have provided Gospel hymn-books for the prisoners, and some of Mr. Moody's addresses, but we want large type texts for the walls, as well as books for the library. We give each man a testament, and some of the Stirling tracts when we can get them, and there seems a great change in the looks of the men who receive them since first we began our Bible readings; they are so softened by the tale "of Jesus and his love."

Our free reading-room is struggling for existence; the cost of fuel and light is heavy for our Union to bear. We try to keep up little "socials" to interest those who go there, and also to gather a fund for purchasing reading matter. But we need a magic lantern with suitable slides, and such a thing is unattainable by us at present. Many prophesy that we will not be able to continue, but the coffee-room is doing good work, and surely there are friends in the old country who will join us in prayer that God will send us means to keep up the institution.

Some of Mr. Fegan's boys are in Brandon, also a number of the deaf mutes brought here last summer from England, who all board at the coffee-rooms, and who are delighted with the copies of English illustrated papers which are sometimes lent to the free reading-room by the Episcopal minister and other kind friends. I send THE CHRISTIAN round visiting from one of our Union to another, after having been fed and strengthened by its precious tidings myself. All my writing has to be done in the "small hours" of the night when the members of my large family are asleep, and this may be said of most mothers of families in this new and busy country, where leisure is a thing undreamt of.—Faithfully yours,

ANNIE DAVIDSON.

REFLECTED LIGHT.

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED ON PRINTING A TEXT IN LUMINOUS PAINT.

I TRACED some lines in living light;
I thought to see them shine by night,
To shine with soft and silver ray
When evening closed the eye of day.

By day, in this mysterious paint,
The letters looked but dull and faint,
But promised so at night to shine
As though they came from hands Divine.

The words were full of comfort sweet,
To cheer and guide our weary feet:
"Strength shall be even as thy day,"
God's promise on our pilgrim way.

The darkness fell—I gazed perplexed,
I sought in vain my shining text,
And just distinguished in the dark
A very feeble silver spark.

Closer I look—yes, now I see,
'Tis, "As thy day thy strength shall be."
But I had hoped, in midnight gloom,
To read it quite across the room.

Reflection soon an answer brought
To all my puzzled, anxious thought;
Had yesterday been bright and fine,
My text would not have failed to shine.

But fogs obscured the sunshine bright,
Nor could the words absorb the light;
So, when had closed the wintry day,
They faintly glowed, then died away.

Rebuked, I felt this failure teach
A lesson in its silent speech;
For often I the same had done,
And tried to shine without the sun.

To feed, we must ourselves be fed,
To shine, the light on us be shed,
Or words of promise, words of rest,
Will fall unnoticed and unblest.

Shine on thy servants, Heavenly Light,
So shall we speak thy word aright.
Reveal Thyself, and then shall we Reflect the light received from Thee.

GOSPEL WORK IN FRANKFORT.

AN evangelist, Pastor Schrenk, who was formerly a missionary in Africa, under the Basel Society, has lately held a course of very successful meetings at Frankfort. Mr. Schrenk is now agent of the Evangelical Society at Berne, and has become well known in that part of Switzerland for his success in evangelising. Early in October he was invited by the Bonn Committee for Evangelisation in Germany, of which Prof. Christlieb is president, to come to Germany, and hold evangelistic meetings at Bremen. This effort having met with great success, he was asked by a few friends at Frankfort-on-Maine to stop there on his way back for the same purpose. This he did, and held meetings every night for more than a fortnight during November, in different parts of the town, preaching in theatres and dancing saloons, in order to reach those who had ceased to attend any regular place of worship.

Mr. Schrenk, who is a German by birth, preaches the Gospel message in simple, unadorned language, every word of which seems impregnated with his own intense conviction and deep experience. The halls in which the meetings were held filled rapidly from night to night, and at last, when hundreds were unable to enter, the large concert-hall, holding about 1500 people, was taken for the last two nights and well filled. There are many signs that the work has been greatly blessed, and that permanent fruit will remain.

In one quarter of the town, at some distance from any church, the meetings are being carried on weekly by three pastors of the town, who take it in turn to preach there. It is hoped that Mr. Schrenk, or some other evangelist, will hold another course of meetings before very long.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN LEICESTER.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

IN 1867, when a young clerk in a City counting-house, I was attracted to the services which Mr. Payson Hammond was holding in the chapel of the venerated Baptist Noel. I could pick out to-day the seat where I sat, and I can never forget the effect which was produced on me. It was the first breath of the revival spirit which had ever swept across my heart, and it strangely touched me. The hymns have lingered in my memory, and the scene of scores of young children gathering around that noble form is vivid as I write.

Since then I have eagerly read every scrap of news of Mr. Hammond's work, as he has carried the tidings of the Gospel to the Far West, stirring with his words vast multitudes of men, and I have always endeavoured to work among the children. I am increasingly enamoured of that work; it is such an easy one. Children have not to unlearn those habits of doubt and misconception which hinder so many from accepting the Gospel. It is natural for them to trust One whom they cannot see, to give Him their choicest treasures, and to conform themselves to his sweet life. None but those who have worked among children could credit the readiness with which they receive the Gospel; and when they have received it, they are so frank in confession, and so eager to win others to Him whom they find so dear. There is everything in our Saviour to charm and attract children, and his Gospel does not present difficulties to their simple faith. The Lord told us we must become as little children to enter his kingdom; surely then, little children themselves have not far to go—"only a step to Jesus."

With these thoughts in my heart, I was thoroughly aroused when I saw that Dr. Hammond, after a lapse of fifteen or sixteen years, was again to visit England. I had become the pastor of a church, with 2000 young people under its care, and with splendid school premises, and I felt that I would spare no effort to induce him to visit me. I knew how eagerly his services would be caught up, but I never rested till I got a favourable reply. Even though I had but short notice, we were able to give him large audiences of children, in addition to the general mission services for adults.

Mr. Hammond has a wonderful influence over children. I have often wondered where the secret lay. His stories are capital, but others could tell them. His hymns are sweet, but others could sing them. His methods are good, but others could employ them. And yet when all is put together a marvellous effect is produced. I think his principal power consists in the clear presentation of the sufferings of Christ for sinful men, given in direct dependence on the Holy Spirit. It is impossible to judge of the effect of an address during the meeting. Sometimes when it would seem as if no special impression had been made, yet seat after seat is full of children, anxious to know how to give their hearts to Christ.

One little boy, when bidden to go home by a worker, who thought him too young to understand, burst into tears, and said, "He was waiting for someone to speak to him about Jesus Christ." Others who went away under deep impression came again and again, until one evening their faces would beam with new-found joy; and there were many cases in which they brought their little friends to get the blessing which they had themselves received.

In my young Christians' class last night, which was swollen by large accessions of dear young converts, scores of hands were held up by those who had had the delight of leading their companions to Christ. Testimonies have come in to me from parents and teachers. In some cases nearly the whole of a class has been brought to Jesus; there is hardly one in which there are not cases of deep impression and conversion. The altered lives at home are sweet testimonies to the genuineness of the work done. I am more than satisfied with the results, so far as I have seen them. The teachers urge me to hold an after-meeting at the close of our Sunday-school, each Sunday afternoon, that the fire may not die down, and that the oil may not stay for want of vessels in which to store it.

After a week of blessed services in Melbourne Hall, Mr. Hammond has passed on to other churches in the town, where similar results have accrued. In all, between 400 and 500 have given in their names, professing to be converted. At the close of one of the services a teacher was found at the end of a pew, bathed in tears, because she feared that her class of young ladies was going away unsaved. Surely tears like these are dear to Him, who wept over those whom He would fain have gathered under the wings of his love. Nor were they without effect, for they awakened a deep concern in her scholars' hearts, who all finally yielded to the love of Christ.

I know of many Christians whose hearts have been much quickened by work amongst the dear children, and who will never cease to thank God that ever Mr. Payson Hammond was led to visit Leicester.

From what I have seen of Mr. Hammond and his work, I almost grudge him to ordinary Mission services. He has great power over a large mixed audience, like that which heard him in our theatre on Sunday night; but this is a field which is trodden by so many stalwart reapers. I should like him to go up and down through England, gathering large multitudes of children and young people in every town for the Saviour. Surely the results of such a campaign could never be estimated. Its benefits would be found in thousands of homes and churches for the next generation, and might furnish hosts of ministers, evangelists, and missionaries for the Church of Christ. It seems to me that no work would bring wider or quicker returns, for it is possible, in the same time, to win about ten children for every individual adult.

Experienced workers, like Mr. Spurgeon, say that they have found children to be as steadfast to their profession, and more so, than those of older growth. I would not write thus if Mr. Hammond were constantly working on the feelings or upon the fears of the children. The appeal is made to their love, and to their sense of what He deserves from them, who bore their sins in his own body on the tree.

THE EARTHQUAKES IN SPAIN.

THE friend in Malaga, who sent to Mr. Greene, of Claydon, Ipswich, the accounts of the earthquakes, which have appeared in our columns, now writes acknowledging the first instalment of the relief money sent out to her:—

I feel it a great responsibility to distribute your bounties. Don Enrique Blanco, despite his weak health, was in the chapel night after night comforting the panic-stricken creatures. The services, with the restored quiet, are being attended by these people, who found comfort as it were by chance. What marvellous ways God has of enlarging his borders—as by the breath of his mouth! It is a privilege to have witnessed such manifestations of his power, and I rejoice I was here, terrible though it was.

I have bought lots of blankets, for all crave for them, and am looking up specially the people who had to sleep out in the bed of the river, in caves, and under rotten tents. Great fruits are to be reaped in Malaga after this trouble. How can I thank you all enough, oh Christian friends?

SOUTH LONDON.—A well-attended meeting was held on Wednesday week at the Collingwood-street Working Men's Mission Hall, New Cut, Lambeth. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and addresses were given by Mr. Bevan, Mr. Creer, and other gentlemen. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon wrote strongly commending the Mission. It was explained that during the meeting it is intended to expend some £500 on the premises, which are to be much enlarged, to accommodate the large crowds of working people who attend the services.

REVIVAL AT EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.

IF some of the English Universities have had their times of spiritual quickening, Edinburgh has not been forgotten. While the south wind has been blowing upon the "gardens of the Lord" the north wind has been awake also!

The year 1884-5 will long be remembered. It opened with the impulse of the Tercentenary Celebration behind it—an impulse "making for righteousness"; or, when the brilliant pageant had passed away, and the interest produced by the presence of so many notable savants had subsided, one clear gain at least was counted—an acknowledgment either openly or tacity made by those who impressed the students most, that there was a revelation which natural science did not see, and a philosophy of life only to be learned at the feet of Him who is meek and lowly in heart.

The present session was inaugurated by an address from Sir Alexander Grant, on which his death—so soon to follow—has set a solemn seal. No one listened to it as the kindly-hearted principal's nunc dimittis; there was indeed throughout a throb of unwonted fervour, and towards the close an appeal of subdued but earnest feeling. It was, in truth, prophetic, and it lingers in the memory with a still increasing pathos.

The visits of Messrs. Studd and Smith, made recently, were in the nick of time. They were just the men to arouse the attention of the careless students, and to help the latent convictions of the serious into life. Men from the Arts classes, but more particularly from the Medical, flocked to hear them. After-meetings for anxious inquirers were held, and many stayed to have the way of God expounded to them more perfectly. Professor Henry Drummond followed,—a man of a different calibre, but admirably adapted to deepen the work so well begun. The style and manner of the Cambridge athletes are now familiar; Smith, eloquent and enthusiastic, Studd, gentle but irresistibly simple and sincere. Drummond's method is unique. He is a scientific evangelist—strange conjunction—with a philosophy iridescent with the light and fire of the Holy Ghost. A glance at the public advertisements during his last appearances in Edinburgh was enough to make the most foreboding Christian cripple leap for joy. On Sunday night here is one of the most successful scientific writers setting forth Christ before a crowd of students, and on the Tuesday lecturing to the members of the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution! This is one of the signs of the times.

But the most significant fact connected with these special services remains. Professors of the University presided, and in the inquiry-meetings which followed some of them mingled amongst the students, speaking of the Lord's dealings with themselves, and pointing penitents to the Saviour. A stern editorial censorship compels a conclusion. Let this, however, be remembered—there are no young men who, as a class, are more open to the truth as it is in Jesus, than the thoughtful students in our Universities. The writer testifies of what he has seen. How can it be otherwise? Eyes that long for the light must recognise the Sun when He rises. But the claims of Christ must be fully set forth; not sentimentally, not harshly, but with clearness, force, and love. Claims which call for an absolute self-surrender, and for a calm and constant courage, of which a man, though brave as Burnaby of the Blues, might yet know nothing. Young men just girding for the arena of life will respond to such demands as these, and accept a service which makes a pure, unselfish, manly life a glorious possibility.—Methodist Times.

[An intensely interesting communication on this subject from Dr. Moxey, Edinburgh, has reached us, and we regret being unable to find space for it in our present issue; it will appear in our next.]

YOUNG MEN IN NORTH LONDON.

AFTER some few years' quiet work in an obscure place, the friends of young men in the Finsbury-park district have taken a bold step. Somewhat extensive premises, with entrances in the Seven Sisters'-road, and opposite the Finsbury-park Station, have fallen into the hands of the Committee, who have converted what was "The Seven Sisters' Club" into the Finsbury-park Branch of the Y.M.C.A. On Tuesday evening last week the premises were formally opened by Mr. George Williams, without whom such happy occasions would seem to be incomplete.

The large lecture-hall was prettily decorated with flowers and flags; in fact, every room was redolent of faint flower scent and bright with bunting and happy men and women. Many members of the North Choir, which did such good service for Messrs. Moody and Sankey at the Priory Hall, Islington, were there to sing the well-known words which Mr. Moody so often led off in the days that are passed. The refreshments were uncommonly good, and were served in a large basement lounge, the pillars of which were brightened with mirrors on each of the four sides. There are quite a number of rooms, in which much may be done in the future, as soon as the new premises get into working order.

After prayer by Rev. G. Snashall, Mr. WILLIAMS rose, as he has done almost countless times before, to welcome into active life another branch of the great institution which he was permitted, in the good providence of God, to inaugurate nearly a half-century ago. It gave Mr. Williams special pleasure to be at this meeting, he said, for not only did the Finsbury-park district teem with young men, but most of those young men came out nightly from the great City. Such a place as this newest Y.M.C.A. would benefit and improve the characters of young men; it would help them to store their minds with useful knowledge in the time to come; it would help them to keep away from special evils to which young men are exposed; they would be better able to discharge their duties in the positions which they occupy; they would become better companions and better employés. Their mothers and fathers would be made glad, and their brothers would be proud that they had brothers connected with the Finsbury-park branch of the Y.M.C.A. It was Burke who said, "Tell me what your young men are thinking about, and I will tell you what will be the character of the coming generation." The employers of the City of London and of the district would be benefited by the Association; so would the ministers. It had been discovered that the only way to make the young man an ornament to the community of which he is a part, was to bring that young man to Christ.

Mr. HENRY HOLME, Chairman of Committee, stated that five years ago they were led to take small premises in the neighbourhood, but the place in Coleridge-road became inadequate to the work. Now they had enlarged their borders mightily, and classes would soon be in full swing. It was hoped that arrangements would be made so that the large hall should be utilised as a gymnasium for mass exercise at such hours as would be advisable. A library was to be formed, a refreshment-room started, and £2000 would be wanted for all the varied programme which the Committee had mapped out for themselves. Mr. Williams had given £100. The President of the Branch had given a like sum, so had Mr. J. Aukland (the Treasurer). Mr. Robert Porter had promised £100, Mr. Judd (the Vice-Chairman) and Mr. Howe had promised to collect £50.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN said that somebody had in error called Mr. Holme the Hon. Secretary, but really he was the honorary everything; he and Mr. C. Cotching, the Secretary, had laid the foundations of the great work that was before them. Some eighteen months ago the work was carried on in Godwin-street, and Mr. Holme had succeeded in gathering about him a band of energetic Christian workers, who were to be the mainstay of the larger work now inaugurated. Mr. Morgan had two pages of records of persons who had already been brought to Christ, and if a testimony meeting were asked for then, they would have to stop there all night. Originally the sum of £5000 was asked for the premises, but after much negotiation £625 was offered and taken for the lease and whatever fittings remained. The first need now was for the friends to come forward and make up the £2000 needed to pay off the advances already lent, and to put the place in the order necessary for the future work.

Rev. E. A. STUART, of St. James', Holloway, then gave an address, which for fervour, manliness, and Christian thoroughness, was a fitting prelude to the no less encouraging speeches which followed. Mr. Stuart pointed out the peculiar temptations which surrounded the young man. In speaking of the manliness that should permeate nineteenth century Christianity, the speaker drew a just distinction between mere brute courage, and that higher virtue which for truth's sake would dare to stand alone. The calm courage and perfect manhood of our Lord Jesus Christ were vividly set before the large audience, and we noticed the eyes of many a young man light up with sympathy as the picture approached completion. Christ's words to the third greatest man in Jerusalem, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," was the final touch on the glowing canvas. The absolute necessity of keeping the highest aims of the Y.M.C.A. in the highest place was pressed home to the listeners. Mr. Stuart concluded by stating that the work of the Y.M.C.A. was not done when young men were brought in and made members. There was work for this youthful consecrated life in the churches and Sunday-schools of the neighbourhood.

Rev. J. R. WOOD compared the Y.M.C.A. to the banyan tree, whose tendrils, as they touched the earth, struck root, formed fresh trees, and so became not only strong in themselves, but supports to the parent stem. In allusion to the duty of members of the Y.M.C.A., he stated that there is nothing God blesses so much as hard work. If all men meant work, God meant blessing. Those who were responsible for that meeting had a very distinct conception of what they were aiming at, and that was more than could be said of a great many of the public gatherings which took place in London. It was not the object of the Y.M.C.A. to make controversialists of the young men. They did not want brisk talkers about religion, for such were amongst the most mischievous to be found anywhere, for they had religion just from the teeth outwards. What was wanted was to make copies of the Lord Jesus Christ, so that it might be felt by young men in that district that there has been a perfect type of manhood upon God's earth, and that that type was Jesus Christ.

Rev. T. EYNON DAVIES was in sympathy with the constituency of the Y.M.C.A. He believed in their aims, and he agreed with their methods. The important thing was to get the sympathies of those for whom they tried to cater. He remembered hearing of an old coach-driver who, day after day, used to pass a certain gate with his team. One day that gate was painted white. The leader horse saw it, was startled by it, shied at it, and caused the driver a deal of trouble. When the coach had next to pass the gate he gathered his reins well in hand, and just before he reached the gate, he began shouting, cracking his whip, and acting in an unusual way. The nervous horse went past the gate at a swinging pace and did not shy at all. Afterwards somebody asked the old coachman why he had shouted and carried on so. His answer was: "Why, ye see, that mare she shied at the white gate, so I thought I'd cure her by giving her something to think on." So, too, said the speaker, young men must have something to think on, or else they will shy.

In the course of the evening Mr. Holme announced a good list of subscriptions and donations, which had resulted from the collection. Mr. W. Green and Mr. Holme moved a sincere vote of thanks to Mr. Williams, and more singing from the choir, and the benediction, brought a most happy and important meeting to a close.

AFRICA FOR JESUS.

IT was my privilege last evening to attend one of the grandest meetings that has ever been witnessed on this continent. For the past seven days there has been a Holiness Convention held here in the Carrol Park M. E. Church, in connection with the departure of Bishop William Taylor's missionaries for Africa; last evening was devoted to testimonies, experiences, and short addresses by the missionaries. This heroic band is composed of forty men and women and thirteen children from all parts of the United States; of different denominations and from different walks in life, yet all bound together in love, in unity of purpose, and bent on the same errand—to win Africa for Jesus.

It would be impossible for me to give a detailed account of each one's experience of how God had led, guided, and finally called them to the work, and cleared all difficulties and oppositions out of the way. One dear brother told how when his wife and himself were convinced God had called them, he wrote to inform his father-in-law of their intention to go to Africa. The old father was very much opposed to it, and accused his son-in-law of robbing him of his daughter. He would not go himself, nor allow them to come and bid him good-bye. They laid the matter before the Lord, and last night the old father arrived from the country. With tears streaming down his cheeks, he told them that ever since he had opposed their going to Africa everything seemed to go wrong with him, and now he had come to give them his farewell blessing and bid them God-speed.

A young sister, a graduate of the Medical College in Boston, melted the audience into tears, as she told them that while expecting her dear father to arrive from Boston that morning for the farewell meeting, she had received a telegram of his death. It was a sad and heavy blow; but she testified definitely that Jesus was sweetly keeping her, and that her trust in Him was complete.

This morning I had the pleasure, with others, of seeing them on board the s.s. City of Montreal, which carries them to Liverpool. After the last farewells had been given, and the last chord that bound them to their native land was cut, and at a time when one would naturally expect the emotional feelings to gain the mastery, this brave little band stood on deck and sang, "In the sweet by and by;" not knowing whether they should meet on earth again, but joyfully anticipating the grand meeting at the Father's home.

This expedition, under the leadership of that noble man of God, Bishop W. Taylor, the world's missionary, goes out without any church organisation or society to support it. All the expenses have been and are met by voluntary subscriptions. It is on the self-supporting system. All the missionaries are volunteers. Bishop Taylor said so many had offered themselves that he was puzzled how many to take. He was not going on an experiment, but he meant to burn the bridges behind them. "Though I die on the way the thing will be done," was his earnest declaration before the M. E. General Missionary Committee, who were urging him to accept an appropriation for the enterprise, which he refused.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the last meeting of the Western Board, held in Glasgow, it was stated that the Society had employed 57 native colporteurs in Japan last year. After five years' experience the agent reported that it was in provinces in which the Bible had been most widely circulated that Mission work had been most successful. It was agreed to share with the British and Foreign Bible Society the support of the native translators and of one European missionary engaged in translating the Old Testament Scriptures into Japanese. An encouraging report was received in regard to the Society's colportage in Corea. Large sales were being made at fairs and markets.

Notes and Comments.

THE tream of intelligence that comes to us week by week, from almost every corner of the globe, is so great that we are quite unable to make room for it without considerable curtailment. May we ask our kind contributors to help us, by condensing their communications as much as possible, omitting all minute details that are only of local or temporary interest? The report from New York on another page, entitled "Africa or Jesus," is a model in this respect.

A correspondent sends the following: "As a reader of Harper's Monthly Magazine, I have borne with some offensive jokes at the expense of the religion loved by the members of my household. But on reading the following in last month's number I at once, although not a Methodist, told my bookseller not to send it again:—

> "'When Methodist preachers come down,
> A preaching that drinking is sinful,
> . . . . They always preach with a skinful.
> But when you come down with your pence,
> For a slice of their scurvy religion,' &c.

"The decision I have been brought to occasions regret. Harper's has been valued for its illustrations. But probably the editor intends to meet the tastes of other than those of men whose duty it is to be careful as to the kind of serial literature that enters their families."

The Roman Catholics of Montreal have been put to sore confusion by the discovery that a number of relics brought from Rome by Monsignor Fabre, their Bishop, are spurious. The Bishop made a special Mission to the Papal City in 1830 to obtain them. On his return, high altars were erected, and the treasures were blessed and consecrated amid great pomp and loud rejoicings. Some of them were sold to the devotees of popish tradition for large sums. Recently a message has been received from Rome stating that all these so-called relics are spurious, and the Pope orders them to be destroyed.

"Deeper down than prohibitory laws lies custom and lies conscience. The drinking usages feed and sustain the dram-shop. As citizens we may vote to suppress drinking haunts, just as we vote to suppress gaming-houses. But as Christians we are bound to war against the drinking usages which entrap our young men, lead to drunkenness, desolate homes, and ruin precious souls."—Cuyler.

The following from The Daily Telegraph is worthy of special notice as a true and suggestive statement of fact:—

> "In our social system no agent has effected greater reforms than light, and those who are responsible for the safety of life and property in London are still saying, like Goethe, 'More light.' You change the character of a blind alley that has been a den of thieves or receivers, by putting up a good lamp. 'Bill Sikes' and the disciples of Fagan, and the more cowardly dynamitard, avoid too much illumination; and a highly-placed police official was probably not far wrong when he said, 'Give us twice the light and we can do with half the number of constables.' Another observed, 'The greatest danger of some of our public buildings, so far as the dynamiters are concerned, is that they are badly lighted.' Nothing is gained by concealing these plain truths. To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and public opinion will certainly support the authorities in any legitimate outlay to make the capital and the Thames more safe."

Goethe's cry for "more light," was from within, and for inner illumination. For lack of this, how many heart evils remain unheeded and secret sins undiscovered? And yet spiritual light is provided in abundance by Him who said, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." The inspired records of which the Psalmist said, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path," abound in illuminating power. Clear and steady in its flame, the holy lamp of heavenly truth sheds its radiant gleams into every nook and cranny of the heart opened to its sacred influence. What we all need in order to greater spiritual illuminating power, is simply to come to the light, and to "let the Word of Christ dwell in us richly, in all wisdom."

The General Mission in West and North-West London is proceeding this week; there is every symptom that it will attract large attention and produce important results. With the kind help of the clergymen in charge, we hope in succeeding issues to give brief reports of the work.

At a recent meeting of the Prayer-book Revision Society, it was forcibly pointed out that the Romanising practices which divide the Church of England found their justification in the present Book of Common Prayer. There is a lesson to be learnt on this very serious question. About thirty years ago the Evangelicals were the strong party, and probably seven-eighths of the nation were in hostility to an incipient Tractarianism. The Evangelicals might, by the help of God and the force of public opinion, have secured a reformed Prayer-book, but formally declined to do so.

The case is now entirely reversed. The Evangelical party is in the minority. It has lamentably lost ground. The Rev. J. H. Blunt writes of the "mystical rites" and "material substances" made to teach sacramental grace, which are common; while Bishop Ellicott affirms that the reading of the New Testament is studiously discountenanced in parish schools, that priestly confession is enforced, catechisms are in use of the most pronounced sacerdotal nature, and "practices are being quietly introduced, compared with which altar lights and vestments are innocence itself." This is a most alarming state of things for the nation, and conveys a lesson of very grave import to the Evangelical school. But has the Church Association lost all power to arouse the country to a sense of the peril that menaces it?

Apart from differing views of imperial politics, there is much to be said in favour of this state of the case, as propounded in Truth:—

> "When I think of the crying need of reform at home, the farmers hardly able to make two ends meet, the agricultural labourers slaving like serfs for a pittance which scarcely keeps body and soul together, the artisans starving for want of work, our own street arabs cowering at nights in arches, and our school-children faint and emaciated for want of a humble meal, I am astounded at the philanthropy which would have us squander our resources in African annexations and such-like dreamy follies. Let us set our own house in order before we set Africa in order."

This ought we to have done, and not to leave the other undone. But the greatest good that England could do to foreign countries would be to cultivate at home the righteousness which exalteth a nation.

We shall not be suspected of endorsing all the opinions of George Eliot, but her Life just published contains passages of value. She says of the Temperance cause:—

> "Also I prefer a country where I don't make bad blood by having to see one public-house to every six dwellings—which is literally the case in many spots around us. My gall rises at the rich brewers in Parliament and out of it, who plant these poison shops for the sake of their million-making trade, while probably their families are figuring somewhere as refined philanthropists or devout evangelicals and ritualists."

The book has the following passage on old age:—

> "People talk of the feelings dying out as one gets older; but at present my experience is just the contrary. All the serious relations of life become so much more real to me—pleasure seems so slight a thing, and sorrow and duty and endurance so great. I find the least bit of real human life touch me in a way it never did when I was younger."

We are glad to learn that the many evils which have resulted to unsuspecting Englishwomen, from the peculiar conditions of the French marriage law, may, in the future, be obviated. A circular has been issued by the solicitor to the French Consulate in London, in which he says:—

> "Diplomatic notes have been exchanged between the two Cabinets, and it has been decided that French Consuls in the United Kingdom shall henceforth (with the object of better assuring the validity of marriages between English and French subjects) be authorised to grant certificates proving that the necessary formalities prescribed by the French law, to be complied with previous to the celebration, have been carried out in due form in France. . . .
> "Clergymen, registrars, solicitors, and the public, before solemnising a marriage, or permitting a British subject to contract marriage with a Frenchman, will now be able to insist upon the latter producing a Consular Certificate, establishing his legal right to have the ceremony performed, and it can then be proceeded with without risk of being subsequently annulled by the Courts in France."

We presume that copies of the circular, giving full information on this subject, can be had on application to the writer, M. Argles, 32, Great St. Helen's, E.C.

Some correspondents suggest that the so-called imprecatory Psalms are predictive rather than imperative. But Hebrew scholars of every shade take the verbs as imperative—Delitzsch, Dr. Kay, and Cheyne (the latest translator); so did the Septuagint, and so did Peter quote Psalm cix. in Acts i. Even were they prophetic we do not see that it would make any real difference.

We are glad to find that Mr. Hatton, and his worthy lieutenant Mr. Wheatley, are launching out somewhat, through necessity, in their splendid rescue work among discharged prisoners. In another column Mr. Hatton sets forth the present needs of the Mission. If they were thrice as great we would urgently plead that they should be supplied. All who render aid in this good work are not only saving men from present and eternal ruin, but helping to purify the national life by thinning the ranks of its criminal population.

In a recent letter to The Times, Mr. D. Mackenzie describes Morocco, which lies within four days' sail of England, as being the finest country, and as having the worst government, in the world. We are sending our sons and daughters in growing numbers to evangelise far-off China; surely we shall come soon to see the inconsistency of leaving comparatively neglected this fertile and pleasant, but needy land, almost at our very doors.

"An open Bible in the homes of France would have saved her from national atheism and the moral degradation which must come out of it."

A subject of very great interest has arisen in connection with the deciphering of cuneiform inscriptions. In opposition to the critics who have treated the migration of Abram from Ur of the Chaldees as a mystic Jewish story, recently discovered evidence goes to show that it is a definite historic event. The tablets shed much light on Hebrew chronology and on the Bible records of Abramic history.

A very full meeting of the Victoria Institute, to receive a statement on the above subject, was held last month. Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen said that it was only last December, on turning over in the British Museum some of the inscribed tablets, he was at once struck with the occurrence of names mentioned in Genesis. Further researches revealed twenty-six of these names, which threw light on events connected with the Abramic migration and its course. Mr. Rassam, who has enriched our National Museum by these Babylonian tablets, and other Oriental investigators, spoke warmly of the value of Mr. Boscawen's labours. The Victoria Institute has rendered a very valuable service by drawing attention to this interesting matter at the very earliest opportunity.

A lay secretary of a London society lately said that he had gone recently to 148 towns, every one of which the disciples of Mr. Bradlaugh had visited in order to propagate a ribald infidelity. With priestly Ritualism on the one hand and Bradlaughism on the other, there is a loud call to the faithful in Christ Jesus to promote evangelisation among the masses.

In our last issue we quoted from our Glasgow contemporary, the Christian Leader, a paragraph describing circumstantially a remarkable work of revival in the northern section of that city. We observe a correspondent of last week's Leader asserts that the account is greatly exaggerated. If this be the case, it is much to be regretted. It is most important that all reports of Christian work should be strictly within the truth.

Mr. Thomas Jackson, missionary in connection with the evangelistic work at the Clapton-park Theatre, writes in strong confirmation of Mr. Hurndall's statements about the prevalent destitution in East London. He says the extent of the need is appalling, and can only be estimated by those who visit the homes of the people. We hope all who can will do something to help in this matter, through whatever channel most commends itself to them.

When Edward Irving was in the zenith of his fame as a popular preacher at the church in Regent-square, he was requested to preach a sermon on behalf of foreign missions. His discourse is said by his biographer, Mrs. Oliphant, to have lasted four hours, and to have created an extraordinary sensation, by reason of its eloquence and its thorough-going character. We have thought that in these days of revived missionary interest it would not be amiss to reproduce some parts of this remarkable sermon, as it appears in the collected writings of Mr. Irving (1864. Messrs. Strahan & Co. Vol. I.), entitled "Missionaries after the Apostolic School." Extracts will be found on a preceding page.

In an interesting statement, privately circulated, Major-General Haig makes an urgent appeal for the evangelisation of Southern Arabia and the Somali tribes, Aden being made the point of approach. After describing the difficulties of interior evangelisation, because of the fanatical character of the Arab tribes, he thus refers to the opportunities afforded by the possession of Aden as a seaport under the control of Great Britain:—

> "The population of Aden, which was originally but a few hundreds, is now 30,000. There is an immense traffic with the interior by camels. The number that entered Aden in 1875 was 267,000, showing that tens of thousands of the Arab tribes of the inaccessible interior visit Aden, and spend a longer or shorter time there every year. To every one of these the Gospel might be made known with perfect safety. There is weekly or fortnightly communication by steam with Berbera and Zeila, and constant intercourse by this means with the Somalis and their country. Aden would thus afford a secure base for a Mission to the Somalis as well as the Arabs. From it also visits might be periodically paid to Mokha, Hodeida, Jeddah, Massowa, in one direction, and to Muscat in the other. It is one of the healthiest stations in the tropics, as shown by the statistics of the British troops there. It is but twelve days' journey from England by the overland route. It presents, in short, every one of the requisite conditions for an effective Mission station, and needs only to be occupied to become the centre of a vast circle of spiritual influence embracing all the tribes of south-western Arabia, and many of those on the opposite African coast. There should be two missionaries at least, and better still four, two for the Arabs and two for the Somalis. A medical missionary would be especially valuable, and would gain access to the tribes in the interior in a way that no one else could."

General Haig is hopeful not only that some Christian friends may further this project by monetary assistance, but that others may offer themselves as missionaries. He may be communicated with at 6, Kemplay-road, Hampstead, N.W.

The Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety is showing much commendable activity in various ways. The report of the "proceedings" of the Society just published (Lewis, 136, Gower-street, W.C. 6d.), which contains a full account of the recent discussion on "Inebriety and Voice Use," will repay the attentive perusal of many who do not use their voices in public. We rejoice in every form of attack on this Dagon idol of alcohol; it has resisted many blows, but these repeated attacks from different quarters ought by and by to make it totter to its fall.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have done well to issue a memorandum expressing their strong desire that the work among the young in connection with their foreign missions should be developed as far as possible. We are learning more and more, even in this country, the vast importance of laying hold of the children; it must be more important still in heathen lands where adults have so many accumulated prepossessions to lay aside before confessing faith in Christ.

A correspondent of the Sunday-school Chronicle strenuously defends the habit of Bible reading in railway carriages, and combats the notion that it involves any assumption of superiority. He forcibly says:—

> "I should read the Bible if I were alone. Am I, then, to be deterred by the presence of a few or more of my fellow-creatures? Certainly not; on the contrary, let us read our Bible with modesty, at the same time with the absence of any sneaking regard as to what others may think. There is not half enough Bible reading amongst us, and whether it is in our dinner hour, or in the train, or at home, or elsewhere, let us go on, and let who will smile with contempt or treat us with derision."

The only remark which we will trust ourselves to make with regard to the unhappy disasters in the Soudan, is the expression of an earnest hope that much prayer will be made to God to prevent an evil and bloodthirsty spirit of cruelty and revenge from taking possession of this nation.

Thursday next, Feb. 19, will be observed as an all-day of prayer by the friends labouring for the repeal of legislation that sanctions and "regulates" vice in this and other lands. All who can join in this are invited to attend at Exeter Hall on that day, when meetings will be held from 10 to 1, and 2 to 6. There will be a break each hour for the convenience of those assembled. On Feb. 20 the annual meeting of the Ladies' National Association will take place at Exeter Hall at 7.30 p.m., Mr. Stansfeld presiding. This latter day is the anniversary of the date when the House of Commons passed the resolution that virtually suspended the operation of the Contagious Diseases Acts.

We are glad to be able to inform our readers that the Russian Government have decided again to authorise the gratuitous circulation of tracts in that country. All the tracts seized by the authorities have been restored to the Russian Tract Society. We believe this welcome change of policy has resulted mainly from the recent visit to England of a high dignitary of the Russian Church. While here, he took the opportunity of inspecting the depôt of the Religious Tract Society, and had a friendly conference with the secretaries.

When we take up any special study it is the tendency of the human mind to follow it exclusively, to carry it to extremes, and to magnify it out of its due proportion to other truths. Historical, dispensational, and doctrinal aspects of the Scriptures of truth are all necessary, but never was there more need to beware of historical, dispensational, doctrinal, and other specialists.

Thirty years ago we knew one of those men whose nature it is to follow an idea out of the window, over the rocks, into the swamp, wherever it goes. He "had been enlightened as to the difference between the Church, which is the body of Christ, and Israel, the nation of God," but he had not learned rightly to divide the Word of Truth. He divided it into Jewish and Christian, with this result, that his Jewish volume increased, and his Christian volume decreased, until, when we last saw him, he had only two or three books of the New Testament which he could call his own. We are sure that minds of the same order, who begin by making the Hebrews, James, and the Revelation Jewish, will come to poverty in the same way.

Many of our readers will remember a recent notice in our columns of Pastor Funcke's excellent little work, "The School of Life; or, Christian Life Pictures from the Book of Jonah." We are pleased to learn that many Christian friends have interested themselves in circulating the book in their neighbourhoods. We are requested to state that it can be had from the publishers, Messrs. Kingsley & Co., 49, Bedford-street, W.C., for free distribution or colportage, at 1s. 8d. per copy, provided a parcel of not less than four copies be taken. The book is thoroughly evangelical, fresh, suggestive, and readable.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

HOW often are the words "We bless Thee. . . . . for the means of grace, and for the hope of glory," repeated in our churches ashore, and yet how very few take to heart the needs of those thousands of our countrymen whose lives are passed upon the seas without "the means of grace," and, alas! too frequently are lost without "the hope of glory."

"I almost wished myself a fisherman," quoth a friend whose vacation had been spent in Norway, and who had watched with much interest the fleets of fishing vessels cruising off the Dogger Bank.

Yes, the North Sea looked placid and pleasant enough to the hundreds of holiday folk who crossed it during the past season, and they were perhaps half inclined, like my friend, as in yacht or steamer they passed in the lovely summer weather through a fishing fleet, to envy the lot of the smacksmen.

But a dreary winter is upon us, when night after night the watch on deck pace to and fro in the darkness, while the trawl is down to catch fish for the landsmen who are comfortably sleeping ashore and at home.

Ah! who would exchange with the smacksman now, as he beats his arms together, and stamps his feet upon the deck in the vain attempt to withstand the icy cold of that piercing north-east wind which penetrates oilskin and flannels and chills him to the bone, while hour after hour he waits through the seemingly interminable night for the cold grey dawn of another day of toil? Or, when at length the daylight breaks in the east, who would care to labour at his side as he strains at the capstan to bring home the gear, as he looks aghast when nought is found but split nets and labour utterly wasted?

Or, if fortunate in securing a good haul, what landsman dare accompany him, as his small boat dances on the huge crested waves in her perilous course from the smack to the attendant steamer, to deliver the fish for conveyance to market?

Though but a short trip of a few hundred yards or so, it is fraught with direst dangers to the occupants of the tiny craft, and never a winter passes without boats being swamped and precious lives being lost in this "ferrying" from smack to steam carrier in the open sea.

Who would join him when, warned by a falling barometer, he has close-reefed his vessel, and awaits the burst of one of those fierce hurricanes which rage over the North Sea in the winter season? All has been done that skilful seamanship can devise, but to the fury of the storm is added that graver peril of thickly falling snow, which not merely drives with blinding force into the eyes of the crew, but quickly obscures the lights, so that every skipper in the fleet knows well that even if his smack can live through the gale, nought but the good providence of God can preserve him from colliding with the vessels around. No, indeed, there are none who would undertake such a life as this!

And it was for the spiritual, moral, and physical welfare of these men (upwards of 12,000 of whom are constantly afloat in the North Sea alone engaged in supplying our tables with fish) that the Thames Church Mission four years ago first began to make adequate provision. To-day the "Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen" has four fine vessels cruising with the trawling fleets, each of which is at once a Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Lending Library; and the gracious blessing of Almighty God has most manifestly attended the effort. The godly amongst the fishermen may gather for worship, and (as was the case during the past summer, when nine or ten clergymen were out on board the Mission ships) for the Holy Communion, and the unconverted have the Gospel proclaimed to them. Hundreds of cases have been medically or surgically treated, and great numbers have been rescued from habits of intemperance and from that curse of the North Sea fleets, the "coper," or floating grog shop.

Interesting books and magazines (will not our readers spare their surplus volumes for the fishermen?) have supplanted the gambling with which the hours of idleness were formerly beguiled; and, by the kindness of ladies ashore, upwards of 6,000 woollen mufflers and 10,000 pairs of cuffs were last year given to the smacksmen.

Lack of space prevents our giving fuller details of this unique and most important "Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen," but those (may the number be large!) who desire to learn more and to render help, will be gladly and freely supplied with pamphlets at the Offices of the Society, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C. It is of the utmost moment that the operations of the Mission be extended to other fleets, as yet unsupplied with this "means of grace;" and we urge our readers, both by prayer and by practical effort, to do all that lies in their power towards securing so invaluable a boon for these brave men, to whom we all are debtors.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

A NEW HOME FOR DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

WILL you allow me to make known to our many kind friends among your readers an unexpected difficulty that has arisen in connection with our work among discharged prisoners? Our present premises, 10, Brooke-street, Holborn, used as a temporary home for hopeful men, are about to be pulled down, and we are consequently compelled to get out almost at once. This is a very serious matter, as we were never more pressed for sleeping accommodation for the large number of men at this moment under our care. Besides this, our Gospel services and Sunday-school in this station are in an exceptionally prosperous condition.

To have this door of usefulness shut up would be little short of a calamity, but I am pleased to be able to state that larger premises, that could be well adapted to our needs, are now offered immediately opposite. The opportunity is an excellent one, as we are much in want of more space, which we shall certainly get when alterations are completed. Some £500, at least, will be needed before this can be undertaken, as we are resolved not to touch any moneys from our general working fund for this purpose, lest we should cripple our daily operations.

Never was there greater opportunity of rescuing the fallen among the criminal classes, and we are resolved more firmly than ever to make the most of these golden moments of precious privilege, and by the mighty power of our omnipotent God to pluck many more of these precious souls from the eternal burning. I confidently leave our present pressing monetary needs in the hands of the Lord's stewards, assured that they will readily help us in carrying on this work.—Sincerely yours,

Geo. Hatton, Superintendent.

KINGSLAND INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS.—Two interesting meetings were held on Friday last, at the Institute, Ridley-road, Dalston, at both of which Dr. Barnardo gave addresses. The first was for workers, in the afternoon, when the address was founded on the history of the man sick of the palsy (Mark ii.). In the evening the meeting was for the young women employed in some of the neighbouring factories. About 100 were present at the tea, and afterwards filled the club-room of the Institute for a meeting. The girls were invited to become members of a Bible-class to be started for their benefit, and it is hoped much practical benefit will result from this effort for their welfare.

MR. MOODY AT WASHINGTON.—A Convention of Christian workers, conducted by Mr. D. L. Moody, was held in Washington, Jan. 16-19. Mr. Moody did not come as an evangelist, but to rouse Christians to more earnest and more effective work for God. That as many Church members as possible might hear him, each week-day had three services, and 1500 tickets (the seating capacity of the largest Congregational Church) were given for each service. Wherever possible benches were put in, and doors were open to non-ticket holders ten minutes before service. Thus, at least, 15,000 different persons heard him, and the full number could not have been less than 25,000 on those three days. The meetings have been very well reported by leading papers.—New York Observer.

OUR LOST LITTLE ONES.

SEEK them out in the haunts of vice,
The little ones dear to God,
Souls that He ransomed at wondrous price,
The price of a Saviour's blood.
Where the current of life runs dark and vile,
Go in the Saviour's name:
Go in the light of the Master's smile,
Pluck them from woe and shame.

Seek them out in the dark cold street,
Poor little heads are laid
On the door-step, wet with the rain and sleet;
Poor little hearts, afraid
Of life's stern, bitter, pitiless round,
Long for the end to come.
Bear them tenderly off the ground,
Teach them the sound of "home."

Some have already learned to lie,
Ah! some are so old in sin;
Lost little children! Christ on high,
Help us their souls to win.
What have they known of a mother's love?
What of a father's care?
Oh! if angel-eyes could weep above,
It would be at a child's despair.

Oh! friends of the children, night and day
We hold up your hands in prayer;
There is room for the little ones far away
In a brighter, purer air,
Where the stream of youth run, fresh and sweet,
And there's room in our hearts at home
For each little waif cast up at our feet,
Through the life sea's roar and foam.

WORK AMONG SAILORS & FISHERMEN.

I WOULD ask the readers of The Christian to unite with me in praise for success given in our work during the past year. The Annie Mission ketch is now at Honfleur, and will sail in a few days for Cherbourg, with a French evangelist, kindly lent by Rev. George Whelpton, of Havre. This will be entirely new ground.

In connection with our work at home, the Mystery will sail in a few days for the usual Mission work among the East Coast fishermen now fishing in the West of England. Among them we have long and happily worked, with many real conversions. A very successful fortnight's evangelistic services have been held on board the Mystery at Fareham, near Portsmouth. Many Christians have thanked us for putting into this port.

Mr. William Hall, of Annan, Scotland, kindly sent by Mr. James Carr, of Carlisle, has lately spent three weeks with us in our work on shore and on the water. Our French evangelistic brother has also been with us as a change from France. Both of these friends have been much encouraged, and their labours greatly blessed.

May I ask your readers again to assist by gifts of English and foreign Bibles, Gospel books and tracts; also in making small bags, 8 inches by 7? A large supply of literature is yearly required by our Mission for Gospel work on board the missionary ketch Annie, which seats over 150 adults, and the schooner Mystery, seating the same number. We also need them for the steam launch for the roadsteads, and the Mission boat for the harbour work, &c.

Our sailors and soldiers are constantly leaving our shores for foreign lands, and are always glad of our little bags well filled with pure Gospel literature. The wives and children of the men going abroad are not forgotten—they come in for their share of books, cards, &c. Any help will be gratefully acknowledged. H. Cook.

Soldiers' Home, Stoke-road, Gosport.

FISHERMEN AND SAILORS' WIVES.—An address has been sent to the Queen from some women at Port Isaac, Cornwall, who have recently lost their relatives by shipwreck, asking Her Majesty to receive a deputation representing various districts of the kingdom, to plead for greater protection to seafaring men through the erection of harbours of refuge.

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER AT BARNET.

THE fourteen days' Evangelistic Mission held at Barnet by these evangelists has been the means of much blessing. God has answered prayer and rewarded faith. Every evening (Saturdays excepted) evangelistic services were conducted in the Baptist Chapel, and afternoon meetings for prayer and Bible-reading were held in the class-rooms.

Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, all the meetings have been exceedingly well attended, and the "power of the Lord" has been "present to heal." Night after night anxious souls have pressed into the inquiry-rooms, where a band of affectionate Christian workers have been ready to point them to Jesus. Not a few seekers have found joy and peace in believing in Christ. The Sunday evening meetings have proved special seasons of blessing. Large numbers have been present, who do not usually attend the House of Prayer. The good old Gospel so effectively sung by Mr. Parker, so faithfully and tenderly preached by Mr. Mateer, has reached many of their hearts. The closing service on the Sunday night was most impressive, and will be remembered by many.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN EDINBURGH.

By DR. MOXEY.

IN his far-off fields of labour Mr. Moody will doubtless be glad to learn that a good work of evangelisation has at last been carried out in the large hall of the New Mission premises in Carruber's-close, which we owe to his noble efforts. He will be all the more pleased that our first evangelist has been the one he named himself, and that his engagement has extended over four weeks.

Had not Mr. Scroggie been already engaged for another place, we might have gone on most advantageously for another fortnight, for the interest of the people and of the workers and the power of the preacher were increasing night by night. His last address on Sunday week in the Free Assembly Hall, which was crammed to the door, was, perhaps, the most powerful of the whole series. At the end over seventy persons rose for prayer. During the month over four hundred persons have been conversed with in the after-meetings. At least that number of names has been handed in by the workers; but it is believed that more than a hundred additional persons have been dealt with whose names have not been taken.

Mr. Scroggie is a powerful preacher. The Saviour has been lifted up, and He has drawn men, women, and children night after night unto Himself. The preaching of the Word has been supplemented by striking anecdotes, mainly drawn from his own experience, and by many telling illustrations. Much of the speaker's power lies, as in the case of Mr. Moody, in pathos. Weeping men and women testified to the use that God was making of his servant's gifts in this respect. But the results were so manifestly due to what is often spoken of as "power in the meeting," which means the unseen convicting agency of the Holy Spirit, that the preacher's part in the blessed work was only remembered and recognised after the meeting was over. The Master gave his messenger the grace to keep himself in the background. Our brother gave his time and services most unstintedly in many other places, public and private, and we believe never without fruit to the glory of God. Last Sabbath he began a month's Mission at Greenock, where his words were blessed three years ago, in an exceptional manner. I would ask your readers to join us in prayer, that hundreds may again be won for Christ in that busy centre.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE NORTH-WEST.—The new branch of the Y.W.C.A. at 19, Patshull-road, Kentish-town-road, was publicly opened on Thursday, January 29. Many ladies, subscribers and others, came in the afternoon to show their interest in the work to be henceforth carried on there among the young women. A social tea-meeting was given in the evening. A large number of young women responded to the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Weatherley.

BRITISH WORKMAN, DARTFORD, KENT.

ON Wednesday, January 28, a very interesting meeting was held, on the occasion of the opening of the enlargement of this Temperance Hotel. The Chairman, Mr. E. S. Hesketh, spoke on the value of such an institution in Dartford in seeking to stem the ravages of drunkenness in the town.

Mr. Stidolph said that though the extension had been forced upon him, he had much to rejoice in. To meet a remaining sum of £150 unpaid, and an old debt of £200, funds are urgently needed. At present he has entire responsibility, but he is exceedingly anxious to be relieved by placing the Mission in the hands of trustees.

Mr. T. C. Johnson, Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. W. Davis, and Mr. Charles Billett, of Sidcup, also spoke. Words seem inadequate to confirm the need of such a place, when we state that in the High-street of the town in a distance of 100 yards there are eleven houses where the drink can be had. There are sixty-five in all to the 10,000 inhabitants.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.

WE are working as an Association, and have much to be thankful for, though funds are sorely needed to put up a laundry, and help us to spread our tent so as to receive more inmates. But we pray and work, remembering that it is our part to gather in the poor wanderers who ask for help and shelter. "Do take me in, Mrs. Wilkes," a girl said to me—the tears were pouring down her face—"you can cure me, you know you can, and I will obey you." She is only fifteen, but so ill, so weak and wicked. We had no room for her, for I am warned by the Inspector of Health not to take more than ten into the house. So I had to send her to the hospital, where she will be cured in body, but will most likely go out and be lost to all good influence. If I had space I could have treated her, and helped her back to her home.

On Wednesday morning a message came that a lady wanted to see me. She sent in her name, and I went expecting to see a stranger. To my surprise it was one of the first girls I had in the Home six years ago, well dressed, and looking all one could wish in a woman. "I have come to see you, for something made me feel I could not pass the end of the street. I have felt ashamed to come before, for I did behave shamefully when I was with you, and I knew you were obliged to send me away. I went to work directly I left, and have never earned a bad shilling since I promised you I would leave off living a disgraceful life. Now I am married, and I think my husband respects as well as loves me." "Bread cast upon the waters, found after many days." I never expected to see the girl again, and it was a gleam of sunshine in these dark days, when I am daily refusing admittance to those I long to save.

I plead most earnestly for means to employ, heal, and teach these poor creatures who come, that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of sinners. Those who do not know what real rescue work is, can have no idea of the joy the sight of a reformed woman gives. One saved from the vilest of the vile, lives with a new song in her mouth. I would urge more emphatically than ever the need of working helpers in this great harvest field—women who will give time, money, perseverance, and prayer to the work. I will gladly teach any lady all I know of the simple method we use; and I ask that anyone who feels drawn to work in this way for the Master, will write or come to me. Surely this cry, "Come over and help us," will not be made in vain.

A VISIT TO THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.—A lecture was recently given on this subject at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, by Mr. T. H. Stockwell, who last year visited Canada and the North-Western States, to the members of the British Association. Vivid descriptions of travel by land and water, personal impressions of the country, its institutions, and the people, with visits to some prominent public men, including Mr. Moody, made up a deeply interesting and instructive lecture. Some articles from Mr. Stockwell's pen, containing reminiscences of his visit, lately appeared in our pages.

GLASGOW SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

IN the record of this society just issued we read the general work of the institution has been zealously carried on in all its branches. The good resulting from the year's work has been greater than in any previous year of the society's history. The institute, at 146, Broomielaw, is so largely attended by the sailors that more room is needed. During the year upwards of 70,000 seamen have availed themselves of its advantages.

The new Seamen's Bethel, in Eaglesham-street, was opened during the year by the Lord Provost. Meetings are here carried on nearly every day, and about 600 attend on Sunday evenings. In addition to the work on shore, the ships in the docks and river are regularly visited, and the men spoken with and invited to the meetings. A system of visitation also among the families of seamen has been organised, and a devoted band of workers go forth to these homes with suitable messages of mercy. Sometimes, alas! they have to break the terrible news to wives and parents of the loss of their husbands or sons at sea. The widows of seamen are looked after. The recently held annual meeting was a great success.

The hon. treasurer and secretary is Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow.

MR. & MRS. HASLAM at TEWKESBURY.

THESE friends left us this morning, after an eleven days' Mission, on which we feel a great blessing has been resting. With my fellow-helpers, I had been longing for a quickening influence from the Holy Ghost, and assuredly this visit has brought what we asked for. From the circumstances of the case, the work has gone on only in Holy Trinity Church and hall. But there has been deep and solemn attention, and notwithstanding difficulties and discouragements, the number of hearers has steadily increased. On week-days at 11 a.m. Mr. Haslam has given addresses on the Christian life—beautiful in their clearness, and most encouraging—full of striking illustrations, uncompromising as to the necessity of a personal transaction with Christ, and riveting those who heard them.

At 3 p.m. Mrs. Haslam has spoken to women in Trinity Hall. Her fame soon went through the whole town, and yesterday the hall was very closely packed. At 7.30 on week-day evenings Mr. Haslam has preached powerful Mission sermons. Both morning and evening sermons yesterday were powerful Gospel expositions, and between seventy and eighty of our people out of the large congregation knelt with God's servant and his wife at the evening communion.

Mr. Haslam is indeed the man, under God, to waken the dead and indifferent, and to stir up workers for the blessed Master.

E. H. F. COSENS.

RUTHERGLEN, GLASGOW.—A large new hall of the Evangelistic and Gospel Temperance Institute has been opened, and the work successfully begun. At the opening ceremony, the Marquis of Ailsa presided; he was supported by Sir William Collins, and a large number of ministers and influential gentlemen. The Chairman delivered an able, earnest, and thoughtful address upon Christian work of the kind intended to be carried on in the Institute. A short dedication service followed, and a most pleasant and profitable evening was spent. The day following the young people interested in the new hall held their opening soirée, and a large and animated gathering it was. The opening services on Sabbath, January 18, were a success in every sense of the word, and must have given much joy to the workers. The inauguration services were continued during the whole week, from January 19 to 24. The attendances were all good, but special mention should be made of Thursday night's meeting, when the hall was filled, mostly with young men, drawn together to hear the testimonies of Mr. S. Stanley Smith and Mr. C. T. Studd. Great pleasure was given, and much good was done by their visit.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN ASIA MINOR.

THIS veteran pastor-evangelist, writes a correspondent, arrived in Smyrna on Jan. 2, in order to conduct an evangelistic Mission among the Greeks of that large city, which reckons a mixed population of more than 200,000. Lying at the head of its beautiful gulf, the city of Polycarp flourishes to-day as the second city of the Turkish Empire, while Ephesus, the greatest city of Asia in its time, and where the Gospel made such strides, is now deserted and ruinous. Dr. Somerville received a most hearty welcome from the different missionaries labouring in Smyrna, and for more than a fortnight carried on a series of services, having delivered during that period no less than thirty-five addresses.

During the first week meetings were held in the "Evangelical Hall," attached to the admirable "Smyrna Rest," about which your pages have frequently furnished details. The meetings were always crowded, and the interpretation was given in Greek by Dr. Constantine with great fluency and force; a considerable impression appeared to be produced. The second week, meetings were held in the American Mission Church, where services are usually conducted in Turkish and Armenian. Rev. Mr. Bartlett acted as interpreter in Turkish for the Greeks who speak that tongue, while Pastor Ginishian interpreted into Armenian. After returning to the Greek Hall for some days, a testimony meeting was held, and it was most delightful on that occasion to hear one after another of the young men rise and express gratitude for salvation received, for a sense of sin forgiven, for assurance experienced, as well as for a deepened conviction of sin, and for a clearer vision of Christ's atonement as the ground of salvation. Meetings were held for Greek and Armenian women, and various companies of young people attending the American schools, and the Kaiserswerth Deaconess Institute, were addressed; nor were the British seamen and railway officials forgotten.

Perhaps the most remarkable meetings were those held for Jews in the Church of Scotland Mission House. The first meeting was largely attended; Rev. Mr. Eppstein, Church of England missionary, interpreted into Judæo-Spanish. The doctrines of Jesus the Messiah, of sin, and atonement by the death of the Messiah, were strongly enforced, and instead of objecting, the greatest interest was awakened. That afternoon the missionary who interpreted was waited on by Jewish inquirers for more than three hours. The Jews made a special request that Dr. Somerville would address them the following Saturday. Accordingly, at ten, a large number assembled, more than the Mission-halls could contain, and listened with most marked attention while the suffering Saviour was shown to be the true Messiah, and that only through the sacrifice of his life could sin be pardoned and put away. That address seems to have greatly deepened the impression made the previous Saturday; indeed, the Jewish community has been awakened, and many are inquiring. At the close of the second meeting Dr. Somerville offered a new Testament in Judæo-Spanish to all who would ask for it; the crush, however, was so great, that after giving away thirty-five copies he had to desist.

A daily meeting for English-speaking people at 10.30 a.m. was instituted shortly after coming, and was carried on for a fortnight in the Dutch Church; this has proved a source of quickening to many, and indeed, to this daily meeting of Christians the success and blessing attending the evangelistic meetings may in great measure be traced. On two Sundays Dr. Somerville preached in English in the Episcopal Church at Bournabat to the English colony resident there.

After concluding the Mission in Smyrna, Dr. Somerville made a short tour in visiting some of the sites of the Seven Churches of Asia. After a journey by rail and road of ten hours up the valley of the Hermus, and across a wide plain, the town of Thyatira was reached. The native city of Lydia contains a population of about 10,000, divided between Mohammedans, Greeks, and Armenians. Traces of people dyeing were to be seen in the dye stuff running down the broad central gutter of some of the streets, and deep down below the débris of centuries of mud-houses were seen temple-ruins, where doubtless things had been offered to idols. Accommodation was found at the house of the "Angel of the Church," that is, the Protestant preacher, in whose small church a densely-packed audience, including several Mussulmans, were assembled, to listen to the Gospel from this stranger's lips. If an estimate can be formed from the warmth of the expressions of gratitude, good resulted from the one message. One of those who came into the house to express his gratitude was a leading Mohammedan in the town.

A Sunday was spent in the large and wealthy town of Magnesia. Three addresses were delivered there to crowded and eager audiences, one with Turkish interpretation, the others with Greek. It appears that a considerable sensation, if not an awakening, has been the result of that brief visit to Magnesia.

On Monday the evangelist proceeded by train to Sardis, up the broad and beautiful valley of the Hermus. The want of population has allowed what might be a perfect garden of loveliness to become a wilderness. Sardis, the once splendid capital of Crœsus, lying at the foot of its picturesque acropolis, on the border of the plain, is given over to desolation. Vast piles of crumbling ruins over a wide area attest the former extent and magnificence of the city. But upon the city which "did not repent" the Lord "came," and all is gone, and nought left standing but two of the pillars of the great Temple of Cybele. Near these pillars is a small cluster of mud houses belonging to a few Mohammedan families. The sheikh of these was spoken to, and courteously invited Dr. Somerville into his house, where shortly a little company of men and women gathered, and to them the Gospel was preached from the Epistle to Sardis. The audience were exclusively Mohammedans. This is the first time Dr. Somerville has been able, during the present Mission, to proclaim the Gospel directly to a Mohammedan audience.

Further up the valley lies Philadelphia, on the slope of a hill, where ruinous encompassing fortifications show how much larger the ancient city was. But the city of "a little strength," which the glorified Saviour "loved," is still a thriving place. Owing to the lateness of arrival, and the heavy rain, it was scarcely possible to hold a meeting; however, a few individuals gathered in the house, and from the Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia the Gospel was spoken to them.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing given at meetings in Grange, Banffshire.

PRAYER.—For blessing during the next few months at the Mission Church, Heeley.——For a faithful pastor whose labours have been greatly blessed, but who, after much suffering for righteousness sake, has been compelled to resign his charge; that the Lord may direct him and supply all his need. ——For blessings on meetings at Tow Laws, Durham, Feb. 15 to March 8, by James Neech, of the Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on a ten days' Mission at Bredfield, conducted by Rev. A. J. Begbie.——That a blessing may be granted on meetings to be held in Cockermouth, during March. ——For blessing on meetings in Aberlour, Banffshire, by Mr. J. A. Smith.——For blessing on meetings by D. M. Cameron, in Chatham Hall, Battersea-park-road.

OTLEY AND WHARFEDALE MISSION.—This Mission, says a local paper, is doing a marvellous amount of good, under the active superintendence of Mr. MacAuliffe. A number of converts and friends gathered at the recent anniversary to praise God for past blessing and receive fresh impulses for the future.

ARMY TEXT MISSION.—Having returned to England from Peshawur, I am desirous of carrying on Mission work here, and would ask the help of your readers. Illuminated texts, tracts, and religious literature will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Major D. W. Whittle has held a series of meetings in Jackson, Mich.

Mr. Henry Varley.—The last account from Mr. Henry Varley reports him at Kansas City, replying to R. J. Ingersoll, the notorious American Atheist.

Mr. Telford, evangelist, has been holding special Mission services at the large chapel, Dudley (Methodist New Connexion), for the last five weeks. Many have been brought to the Lord. The whole town seems moved.

Barnsley.—During last week special Mission services were conducted in this town by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, evangelists. The attendances have been very encouraging, and the addresses, &c., of an impressive character.

Masbro'.—In our last week's notice of the evangelistic work carried on here by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, it was stated, in mistake, that 2000 persons had professed conversion. The correct figures should have been 230.

Auburn, N.Y.—In a letter dated January 25, received from Dr. G. F. Pentecost, he says:—I am in this city preaching to audiences of about 4000 nightly in a large skating rink. God is giving blessing. I expect to go for two weeks next month to Montreal.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have concluded a fortnight's Gospel Mission services in Northamptonshire. The meetings were crowded, and much blessed of God to the saving of souls. Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have agreed, at no distant date, to hold another series of services amongst the shoemakers of this district.

Blackgang, I.W.—A correspondent writes:—"God is doing a very good work here through Mrs. Reade and her co-workers. The responsibility of the work presses much upon her, but God gives her to see of the fruit of her labours. Special services are about to be held; pray that many may be brought to the Lord."

Our brother, Charles Cook, is doing a good work in the West-end. He has lately opened a book store and a restaurant, but his open-air work in Hyde Park, and his Sunday evening services in the Metropolitan Music Hall, are his chief evangelistic efforts. Besides this his prison visitation has done good service at home and abroad.

Mr. Josiah Spiers at Pembroke.—A very successful three weeks' Mission for children and young people has just been held at Pembroke. Mr. Spiers paid his first visit to the town about eight years ago, and the services then held were followed with much blessing to many. Several joined the various churches in the town, and still continue bright Christians. On this account he had a warm welcome this time. The ministers and Sunday-school teachers heartily assisted in the after-meetings, at which large numbers stayed. Mr. Westall accompanied Mr. Spiers, and their services were thoroughly appreciated. It is hoped and expected that the services will result in a general awakening of religion in the place.

Pevensey Sluice.—Dear Sir,—In your issue of October 9 a letter appeared in reference to a Mission work at this place; the result was that half the sum asked for has been sent in. I have lately visited the Sluice, and found it to be an aggressive effort for the spiritual good of the coast-guards, railway employés, and labourers in the district. The bright faces and intelligent answers of those converted speak well for the work done. The fire of persecution has fallen upon the workers and people in a cruel manner, but they stand it well. I would plead with your readers to render the help yet needed. Address Mrs. Matthews, Marine-parade, Hastings.

D. Spencer.
Bridge-chambers, Blackfriars, E.C.

Wood Street Mission, Deansgate, Manchester.—In connection with this Mission a crowded meeting—the first of a series of special services—was held on Sunday week, in Cooke's Royal Circus, Chepstow-street, which is calculated to hold something like 5000 people. The service was conducted by Mr. Alfred Alsop (hon. superintendent of the Mission), assisted by a number of reformed Deansgate men, who, by the power of God, have been rescued from the way of sin. During the past few months the labours of these people have been singularly owned and blessed of God. At the close of the service many remained to the after-meeting. Not a few signed the Temperance pledge; but, better than all besides, some found peace and joy through believing. We earnestly ask prayer for special blessing during these services.

Mr. H. Bright, the blind evangelist, and Hon Superintendent of the North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women, will be glad to make engagements for evangelistic services in London or the provinces. Address: Mansion House, Hanley-road, Finsbury-park, N.

Battersea.—Mr. D. M. Cameron, who has hitherto conducted the evangelistic work in Trinity Hall, Stewart's-road, Battersea, has accepted an invitation to become pastor of the Church now worshipping in Chatham Hall, Battersea Park-road, signed by 253 members and 255 adherents. The erection of an evangelistic hall is in contemplation, for which a building fund has been opened. Mr. Cameron's address is 2, Norfolk Villas, Albert-road, Clapham, S.W.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Geneva is making preparations for observing the 350th anniversary of the Reformation in August next.

St. Louis.—A municipal ordinance has been proposed in St. Louis, Mo., requiring employers to furnish seats, and allow their use, to a reasonable extent, by their woman employés. This is the result of an investigation into the health of the more than 1500 women employed in the manufacturing and mercantile houses in the city.

Mr. Geo. C. Needham has been serving the Delaware-avenue Church, Wilmington, Del., for three months as pastor. He could not, however, accomplish the work for Home and Foreign Missions and general evangelisation he had aimed at, on account of the church's financial embarrassments, and so will engage again in evangelistic work.

A Central African Railway.—Mr. Stevenson, the Glasgow millionaire, who has spent a small fortune putting steamboats on the Central African lakes, and building the wagon road that is to connect Nyassa and Tanganyika, offers to guarantee the building of a narrow gauge railroad past the sixty miles of cataracts in the River Shire. He will furnish the entire funds himself if necessary.

Social Morality in America.—According to a recent statement made by the New York Herald, there are more than 700 divorce suits pending before the courts of the city of Philadelphia. The statement has startled the Philadelphia papers into a variety of comments upon the magnitude of the evil thus disclosed. The fact presents a strange state of morals in respect to the family.

The Kingdom of Bavaria has enacted a law forbidding the marriage of couples who do not possess sufficient means to maintain themselves, or who, during the previous three years, have received help from the public funds, or who have not paid their quota of taxes, or regarding whom there is reason to suspect that trouble will result to the household from the want of sobriety, economy, or love of work.

Jews in New York.—Rev. Jacob Freshman has wrought an evangelistic work among the Jews of this city for three years. His diligence and success have won the sympathy of the Christian people who are most acquainted with him and his efforts. Any who would like to know the nature of his work and methods should send to Mr. Freshman at 25, Seventh-street, New York, for the third annual report of this Hebrew Christian work.

Madeira.—Mr. W. G. Smart, 12, Rua des Pretas, Funchál, Madeira, writes on Jan. 29: "I caught a glimpse of Bishop Taylor and Dr. Summers on their way to Africa during the few hours their steamer lay here. They bought some Portuguese hymn-books and other publications of the Religious Tract Society, from the Depôt under my charge, for use in Angola, where the Bishop hopes to form a station before leaving for the interior."

Sailors in Naples.—Mrs. Campbell writes from the Naples Sailors' Rest: "We are receiving much encouragement by the evident appreciation of this institution as it becomes more known. Nearly every evening we have two or three or more men drop in. They have got more familiar with it, and look on it somewhat as a home. When there are not too many present, I can have a chat with them, and hear about their home life, or their adventures at sea, and so on. Last Sunday we commenced a regular service of song; we kept it up nearly two hours. I made presents to two or three sailors of some of my spare copies of Songs and Solos, for which they seemed grateful. At our Thursday evening gathering, we have latterly had a goodly number present. Of course, an institution like this has expenses, and we look chiefly to our friends in England to help us, as it is for the benefit of our English sailors that it has been established."

Rome.—Two Scotch ladies (Miss McGregor and Miss Smith), who have been labouring amongst the Jews in Constantinople, have gone to reside in Rome, where their special work will be amongst the Jewesses. They are sustained by ladies in Edinburgh. They will establish a school for girls, and will do much by visiting in families.

The Bible in China.—Mr. D. Evans, who is at work in China as a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes from Tien Tsin that he has had a three months' tour in the country; during that time he travelled 1300 miles, and the results have been most blessed. His letter is addressed to Mr. Hall, Secretary of the Y.M. Foreign Missionary Society, Aldersgate-street, through which it may be remembered Mr. Evans went forth to the foreign field.

West Pacific.—Rev. J. Jones, missionary for the last thirty years on Maré, one of the Loyalty Group, in a recent letter, details the efforts of the French to extirpate Protestantism there. Attendance on the schools is made compulsory, but French only is taught, and a systematic attempt is made to stamp out any other language than the French. In the schools the vernacular is not taught; only French is allowed. "The French Resident has appointed as chiefs men who are Romanists, and every effort is being made to intimidate the native pastors, and the English missionary." The whole policy of the French, in fact, is to trample out everything that belongs to Protestantism, and to make all who profess that faith feel that they are under political and social disabilities.—Southern Cross.

Notices of Books, &c.

A packet of little books by Lady Hope, entitled The Way Home Series, comes to us from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. There are few living writers more skilful in seizing the points of an incident or experience and turning them to spiritual account. Tract distributors will find these Gospel messages very helpful. The packet contains twelve books of six varieties (price 6d.)

Sermons. By Rev. G. Walker, B.A. Second edition. Speaight & Co. These sermons are characterised by earnestness and vigour. The later discourses give the impression that future ones will rise to a yet higher level. Occasionally the sense attributed to Scriptural expressions appears scarcely the accurate one, but the sermons as a whole indicate a considerable amount of preaching power.

Faith and Obedience. By Rev. F. Nevill. J. F. Shaw & Co. Ten sermons, all preaching the indissoluble connection between true faith and a holy life. The author does not evidently agree with those who think that holiness is attained by one act of faith, but teaches the old doctrine of "working out our own salvation with fear and trembling,' through the mighty power of God working in us to will and to do good of his good pleasure.

Faith's Triumphs, and other Scripture Subjects. By M. E. Berkeley-Calcott. Partridge & Co. A series of instructive and evangelical chapters on selected incidents in the Old and New Testaments. They are fifty-four in number, and will be found full of plain and practical suggestions, suitable for use by Bible-class teachers and others whose time for study is limited, as well as profitable for private reading and meditation.

What is Spiritualism? a paper by Mrs. McHardie, read at the Glasgow Conference of the Christian Women's Union last November, is published in separate form by Morison Brothers, 99, Buchanan-street, Glasgow, price 1d. Mrs. McHardy briefly discusses four theories with respect to Modern Spiritualism, the last of the four—that it is supernatural and of Satanic origin—being the one she endorses. Whether the evidence she quotes is conclusive, the reader must judge for himself.

Fifty Sermons. By Rev. A. C. Price. Hamilton, Adams & Co. The perusal of these sermons impresses us with the conviction that the preacher was thoroughly determined to know nothing among his flock "save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." There is no frittering away of the Gospel to please the rationalist on the one hand or the legalist on the other. It is evidently the pure milk and wine which he desires his people to drink. The style is simple and clear and the illustrations are well suited to attract attention.

The Gospel Plan in Easy Texts. By the late Hugh Taylor, M.A. 1s. Elliott Stock. An admirable collection of texts arranged so as to give a compendium of Scripture teaching on vital subjects. A few short and simple prayers are added.

Mr. W. C. Miles has prepared a series of tracts in small book form of a somewhat original design. They are entitled the "Loco. Series," the initials of six leading railways being used as pegs whereon to hang the narratives and the exhortations. Thus "G.E.R." (Great Eastern Railway) stands for "God—Eternity—Redemption." They are neatly illustrated, and may be had in packets of twelve from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, N.B. (price 6d.)

Bible Work at Home and Abroad. Cassell & Company. This is a new series under a new title of what was formerly known as "The Missing Link Magazine." It contains records of work done by the Bible-women and nurses in some of the most destitute and neglected parts of London, and should be read by all who take an interest in modern movements for the temporal and spiritual relief of the needy. It is illustrated, and interspersed with short, pithy articles in poetry and prose.

Boston Monday Lectures: Occident. By Rev. Joseph Cook. 3s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Co. Those who are acquainted with Mr. Cook's former volumes, will be glad to welcome another containing his last season's lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston. They deal with the subject of Advanced Thought in England, Germany, and other European countries, and treat also of such important themes as Modern Spiritualism, Christian Missions, Temperance Creeds, and the Doctrine of a Future State. Valuable information, solid argument, and weighty truisms abound throughout the volume, which cannot fail to be very serviceable to the cause of truth. An appendix contains, among other chapters, the lecture delivered by the author in the Metropolitan Tabernacle for the National Temperance League in 1881, entitled "The New House and its Battlement."

MR. T. WOOLMER, CASTLE-STREET, E.C.

Jesus, and other Sermons to Children. By J. V. B. Shrewsbury. 1s. A volume of sermonettes, all on short texts and in simple language, that will fix itself on a child's memory. They were originally preached to the children in the author's congregation, and the little ones were themselves allowed to suggest the texts. It would be well indeed if all shepherds of flocks would devote at least five minutes of every service to feeding the lambs. Afterwards. By Emilie Searchfield. 1s. There is quite a refreshing originality about this little tale, and the lessons it teaches of the after effects of the sorrows and discipline of life are very good. Tom: A Woman's Work for Christ. 1s. Tom was indeed a happy boy to fall into the hands of a gentle, loving woman, who was praying and seeking for some work to do for Christ. The success of this lowly but enviable work is beautifully sketched. Patty Thorne's Adventures. By Mrs. H. B. Paul. 1s. 6d. We meet Patty Thorne first as a light-hearted child, and part with her as a staid, respected matron. Through all the "adventures" that lie between, the interest of the story is well maintained, while sacred lessons are almost unconsciously learned by the reader.

The price of China's Millions, vol. for 1884, stated in a recent notice as 2s. 6d., should be 3s. 6d.

The first volume of the Autobiography of the Late Dr. James Begg, of Edinburgh, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. James Gammell, Edinburgh.

Two little books by F. A. W., issued by Mr. Caswell, of Birmingham—Threefold Rest and All our Needs—are worthy of careful attention of those who are striving after a deeper spiritual experience.

Mr. G. Hefford, 16, Davenport-road, Shepherd's-bush, W., has published some tracts in which the Gospel is unfolded with charming simplicity and clearness. They may be had of the Author at 6d. per 100, and upwards.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AT PORTSEA.

FOR sixteen days Mr. Walton conducted evangelistic services and Bible-readings in St. John's Church, Portsea. Several souls have professed to have been savingly brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour; not a few backsliders have been restored, and halting ones brought to decision for Christ.

The Bible-readings for the deepening of spiritual life have been signally blessed in the leading of many Christians to a more definite state of rest in their Lord and Master. The Bible-reading on the subject, "The government shall be upon his shoulder," was made a special blessing to many, who afterwards were able to rejoice in the full experience of that truth. H. Lindsay Young.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE PERFECT MAN" AND THE "IMPRECATORY PSALMS."

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to a note from a correspondent and to your editorial comment upon it which appear in The Christian of Jan. 29.

I should have taken no notice of the letter, but your comments upon it fill me with astonishment, and my respect for you leads me to offer a brotherly remonstrance. I dare say you read my address, and if so you will remember that my point was that the true type of the Perfect Man was never exhibited until the Incarnation, and that men not only were not perfect, but did not know what the true standard of moral perfection was until Jesus Christ revealed it.

The great principles of non-resistance of evil and of returning good for evil, and so forth, were simply unknown in that less perfect dispensation, and therefore the utterances of Old Testament writers were as little in keeping with these principles as were their acts. "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child," is true of the race as well as of the individual.

You, at least, Mr. Editor, surely do not believe that the Hebrew or Old Testament ideal is the true type of human perfection. I really can't bring myself to believe it of you—acquainted as I have been with the products of your pen for more than twenty years. Surely, to maintain this is to rob the Incarnation of its unique glory, and to represent it not as the revelation of new truth, but as an illustration of what man knew perfectly well without it.

Your correspondent assumes not that the Psalms of David are inspired (that is not the question), but that they are so inspired as to be a suitable and appropriate expression of the character of the Perfect Man. I do not agree with you or with Dr. Kay, in thinking that the man whose last recorded act was to urge the execution of Shimei was singularly free from vindictiveness, but I see nothing to be surprised at in his vindictiveness, considering the imperfect light that he possessed. But the Perfect Man is not and cannot be vindictive, and, therefore, cannot utter vindictive prayers or desires. "Father, forgive them," exclaimed Jesus Christ. "Add iniquity to their iniquity, and let them not come into thy righteousness," exclaims David (Ps. lxix. 27). "Lay not this sin to their charge," cried Stephen, having learnt this from the Perfect Man. "Let those that are my adversaries, and reward me evil for good" (Ps. cix. 5 and 20) "be judged and condemned, and their prayer be turned into sin," says David. "Let the iniquity of his fathers be had in remembrance before the Lord . . . . let them be before the Lord continually." I dare to say that no man, with the instincts and feelings of a Christian, could conceive of our blessed Lord's exclaiming of Caiaphas and Judas, "Let their children be fatherless and beg their bread, and seek it also out of desolate places." You and I would not have been worshipping Christ to-day if He had spoken thus.

The whole subject is a very interesting one, and one from which much instruction may be gleaned, provided it be approached in a calm and candid spirit, and without "indignation," or any other undesirable frame of mind.

A misconception of the fundamental distinctions between Jewish and Christian Ethics produced all that was least to be admired in these (in many respects) admirable men—the Warrior Saints of the Puritan Commonwealth. Perhaps similar mistakes to-day account for the immoderate and censorious language which, alas! so frequently characterises the theological utterances of good men amongst ourselves.

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

W. Hay M. H. Aitken.

33, Lansdowne-road, Bedford.

[We thoroughly agree with our friend Mr. Aitken in desiring that all immoderate and censorious language should be avoided by us all in discussing the sacred and solemn truths of God. Yet, on the other hand, we think that one accustomed to consider the so-called imprecatory Psalms as spoken by the Spirit of Christ cannot help feeling pain, and perhaps also indignation, at their being represented as expressions of human vindictiveness, instead of Divine righteousness. But passing this: the difficulty does not all lie with the orthodox view. Psalm lxix. is quoted as spoken by or referred to the Lord Jesus in John ii. 17; Rom. xv. 3; Matt. xxvii. 34—48; Mark xv. 23; John xix. 29. After his resurrection Jesus opened the understanding of his disciples to understand, in Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalms, the things concerning Himself. And Luke, who records this fact (xxiv.), also records (Acts i. 20) how Peter manifested his understanding of the Psalms by applying the imprecations of the Psalm before us (lxix.) to the betrayer of his Lord. The Apostle Paul also quotes the first verses of the imprecatory portion of this Psalm to enforce his argument in Rom. xi. 9, 10, and shows that it was fulfilled in Israel.

Mr. Aitken would be right if he said that had our Lord Jesus Christ been capable of personal vindictiveness and revenge we would not be worshipping Him to-day; but we believe that he is calamitously wrong in saying that we "would not have been worshipping Christ to-day if He had spoken thus," for inspired New Testament writers show that He did speak the words of this very Psalm.—Ed.]

PROFESSOR EWALD'S "REVELATION."

Dear Sir,—I wish respectfully to say that unfortunately your reviewer has missed the drift and significance of the work, and thereby, no doubt unintentionally, done grave injustice to its author. Ewald aims to show that Revelation is not a product of human reason; that it is prior to all religion, and, beginning in the earliest ages, was perfected in the fulness of time; that it fought, at every stage of its progress, with heathenism, and is in direct antithesis to all human religions; that it was divinely powerful in founding the Old Testament community under Moses, and the New Testament community by Jesus Christ, who is the consummation of all Revelation; and that Holy Scripture is the subsequent sacred record of all this.

No one can read the book carefully without seeing afresh, in the face of all modern scepticism, the unique and imperishable value of the Scriptures. Passages, such as your reviewer quotes, are no doubt as flies in the pot of ointment, but read in the connection in which they stand they are not fairly open to the criticisms of your reviewer as charging immorality upon the sacred writers, which, indeed, Ewald, on a subsequent page, himself distinctly repudiates.

The Translator.

However Ewald may repudiate it, the charge of immorality which his theory seeks to affix to the writer of the Epistle to the Ephesians remains. If some German critic were to write a book assuming the name and imitating the style of H. Ewald, and seek to pass it as if it had been written by him, what could save him from the charge of impudent forgery? Why should there be one code of morality for ordinary literary criticism, and another for what in such case it is surely wrong to call "sacred" writings? Nor is this the only example of the thorough unsoundness of Ewald's treatment of Holy Scripture. He imagines the book of Deuteronomy to have been written after the days of Manasseh, King of Judah, by some one who uses the name and personates the style of Moses. As to this theory it is well observed in the Speaker's Commentary: "Deuteronomy has in a singular manner, the attestation of the Apostles and of our Lord. St. Paul, in Rom. x. and xv., argues from it at some length, and expressly quotes it as written by Moses. "Our Lord . . . thrice resorts to Deuteronomy for the texts with which he repels the tempter. . . . To assert, then, that He who is 'the Truth' believed Deuteronomy to be the work of Moses, and quoted it expressly as such, though it was in fact a forgery introduced into the world seven or eight centuries after the Exodus, is in effect, even though not in intention, to impeach the perfection and sinlessness of his nature, and seems thus to gainsay the first principles of Christianity."

The Reviewer.

SMYRNA AND CONSTANTINOPLE RESTS.—As has been already intimated in Miss West's letter in your columns, the two "Rests" will henceforth be united, and carried on by the same band of workers, one of whom, Miss Green Armytage, has left this city to reside in Constantinople. The "Rest" there re-opens with new premises, near the British post-office in Galata. We shall thankfully receive any periodicals or books, as hitherto, sent for the use of sailors and other visitors. Above all, I would ask prayer that this "Rest" may be owned of God in the salvation of souls. Contributions for the "Smyrna and Constantinople Rests" may be sent to Mr. S. S. Bagster, Conference Hall Office, Mildmay-park, N.; those for the latter to the name of Miss Green Armytage, and the former to my own name as before.

M. Grimston.

Smyrna "Rest."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mrs. Bradley, of Ealing, has been holding Gospel Temperance meetings in Cornwall, with much encouragement.

The friends of total abstinence in London are jubilant at the appointment to the diocese of London of Bishop Temple, who is President of the National Temperance League.

Mr. S. C. Allsopp, M.P., the great brewer, has been elected Deputy-Chairman of the Great Northern Railway Company. The manner in which our great railways are used for the sale of liquor is a national disgrace.—The Democrat.

The Duke of Connaught lately presided at one of Rev. J. G. Gregson's Temperance meetings for soldiers in India. His words of counsel to the soldiers would have carried more weight if he could have added the force of example to that of precept.

A reporter of the New York Sun describes what he saw in one of the many drinking places in that city provided specially for women of the better class. The extent to which New York ladies "enjoy clandestine refreshments" is something alarming to contemplate if this sketch be true.

Mr. A. G. Marment, late of Texas, has been holding a Mission at Swadlincote, with great success. A large number have signed the pledge, some "hard cases" have been reclaimed, and others have been strengthened by this visit; while some have been led to the Saviour and started in the narrow path.

Mr. Francis Murphy, by the latest accounts, had begun a series of Gospel Temperance Meetings in Des Moines, Iowa. He was very cordially received, and there seemed every promise of a successful campaign. A movement has been started to keep Mr. Murphy in Pittsburgh as the minister of a "Church of Gospel Temperance." A fund of 5000 dollars has already been raised in its support.

MALOGA ABORIGINAL MISSION.

In a letter dated Maloga, Victoria, Australia, November 25, Mr. D. Matthews writes to a friend:—

Last Sunday I was explaining to the people the importance of soul-winning. We felt the power of God among us. In the midst of the meeting one man gave his heart to God, so we spent a little time in prayer and thanksgiving to God for this precious soul. I was going to close the meeting, when one and another stood on their feet to confess Christ, and tell what He had done for them.

As we were shaking hands for the night and separating, Aaron, a half-caste, said, "Isabella has given her heart to Jesus." I found that such was really the case. Two months ago we had brought this dear girl from the wickedness and degradation of camp life; she was decided for God. We stopped and spent some time in praise and thanksgiving. While doing so, another black woman, Susannah, cried to the Lord for mercy. She prayed very earnestly, and with tears streaming down her face. In a few minutes she rose rejoicing in the Saviour. I am sure many of our Christian friends in the old country will rejoice with us in these trophies for the Master from among a people who are accounted the lowest on the face of the earth.

It is very consoling and stimulating to us to know there are many Christians praying for us throughout the world. Our work is a great one, for there are 6000 or 8000 Aborigines in the Colony of New South Wales who are totally uncared for. The few we have under our care are very small compared with the great number outside of any Christian influence. In Queensland I understand there are 70,000 poor creatures whose lives in the most of cases are worse than the brutes. In Western and Northern Australias there are tens of thousands who need Christian sympathy and missionary help. May the Lord lay their condition as a burden upon the hearts of Christians everywhere, who have benefited so largely from the pastoral, agricultural, and mineral resources of these rich colonies.

Notes on Daily Readings.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

FEBRUARY 12.–MATTHEW XV.

VERSE 4.—"God commanded, saying, Honour thy father. . . ."—All misgivings as to the Divine authority and genuineness of the Books of Moses vanish in the light of our Lord's frequent appeals to them and endorsement of them as the Word of God.

VERSES 21, 22.—"Then Jesus . . . departed into the coasts of Tyre."—Christ, wearied of Judea, had been grieved in spirit with the hypocrisy of the Pharisees, and the provocation of that stiff-necked people. He was chased away to the profane pagans. The hardening of the Jews maketh way to Christ's first and young love laid upon the Gentiles. Christ doth but draw aside a lap of the curtain of separation and look through to one believing heathen; the King openeth one little window, and holdeth out his face in one glimpse to the woman of Canaan. So Christ's works of deep providence are free mercy and pure justice interwoven, making one web. He departeth from the Jews, and setteth his face and heart on the Gentiles. Consider the art of Providence here: (1) The Devil sometimes shapeth, and our wise Lord seweth; Babylon killeth, God maketh alive; sin, death, and hell, are made a chariot to carry on the Lord's excellent work. (2) The providence of God hath two sides; one black and sad, and the other white and joyful. Adam's first sin was the devil and hell digging a hole through the comely and beautiful frame of the creation of God; and that is the dark side of providence; but the flower of Jesse springing up, to take away sin, and to point out to men and angels the glory of a heaven, and a new world of grace, that is a lightsome side of providence. (3) God, in all his works of judgment, hath his one foot on justice, and his other foot on mercy. This is God's way and ordinary path-road, so that in one and the same motion, God can walk to the east and to the west, and to north and the south.—Rutherford.

FEBRUARY 13.–MATTHEW XVI.

VERSE 18.—"Upon this rock I will build my Church."—Only in this Gospel is the "Church" named. Here in the Gospel of the Kingdom it has a very distinct mention. Rejected by Israel, "He left them and departed." Then from his disciples He receives a confession, in reply to which He names his own "Church;" adding a promise of "the keys of the kingdom of heaven," with power on earth "to loose and bind." Abraham's sons take Him for "John the Baptist, or Jeremiah, or one of the prophets." They cannot echo the prophet's voice, "To us a Son is given." But a poor remnant, to whom "not flesh and blood, but the Father, hath revealed it," can say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This is that knowledge which marks the Church; for of her it is said, that she is to come "in the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man."—Jukes.

VERSE 18.—"Thou art Peter."—Among Protestants there are three views as to the application of these words: (1) That by the Rock our Lord meant Himself; (2) that He meant the confession which Peter had just made of his Messiahship: this is the fundamental truth which lies at the foundation of the whole spiritual structure; (3) that He meant the person of Peter, not, indeed, so as to confer on him any official supremacy, but simply indicating priority in the work of beginning or establishing his Church. Thus the words had their fulfilment in the fact that Peter was the first preacher of the Gospel, both to the circumcision and the uncircumcision. The first of these views accords with fact. The Lord Jesus is the foundation, the only foundation of his Church (1 Cor. iii. 11). The view accords with the grammatical construction of the words. The word πέτρα in this form is repeatedly applied to our Lord, and to Him only, never to the Apostle, as in 1 Cor. x. 4, Rom. ix. 33, 1 Peter ii. 7. The promised security of the Church is also in favour of this view: the Church of Christ founded on the Rock of Ages is safe: this could not follow from the declaration if it referred to the power of Peter, he was a fallible man.—Dr. James Brown, Pennsylvania.

FEBRUARY 14.–MATTHEW XVII.

The attentive and serious reader of the Word will have noticed that in each of the three Gospels which give an account of the Transfiguration, the recital is immediately preceded by these words of the Lord to his disciples: "Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom" (chap. xvi. 28); or, "The kingdom of God come with power" (Mark ix. 1); or, "The kingdom of God" (Luke ix. 27). By this remarkable and thrice repeated similarity does not the Holy Spirit evidently teach us that we must look in the Transfiguration for the fulfilment of the promise made to a few of the disciples, that they should not die before they had seen Him in the glory of his kingdom? The Apostle Peter, one of the happy witnesses of this scene, so himself declares to us when writing to his scattered brethren (see 2 Peter i. 16; also John i. 14). Thus, to Peter, the scene of the Holy Mount was the power and coming, or the coming in power, of his Lord, whose majesty he had then seen. We are, therefore, fully authorised to see in the Transfiguration of the Lord a type, a figure of his coming and glorious reign.—Hector Bettex.

FEBRUARY 15.–MATTHEW XVIII.

VERSE 4.—"Whosoever therefore shall humble himself."—He that is greatest in God's sight is least in his own; as Trapp says, "He that is most humble seeth most of heaven, and shall have most of it; for the lower the ebb, the higher the tide, and the lower the foundation of virtue is laid, the higher shall the roof of glory be overlaid."

VERSE 11.—"For the Son of Man is come to save. . ."—For, not because the children of men have deserved it, nor because the children, before the outbreak of corruption, did already carry it within them, and could enter into the kingdom of heaven by their own innocence. Oh no! They are all the lost; but I am come to save and to bless the lost (Luke xix. 10). What an immeasurable word again, so simply spoken! There stands the ladder of Jacob before our eyes; below are the little ones; then their angels; then the heavenly Son of Man, He who comes as the original Angel, from the presence and bosom of the Father; and then above him (ver. 14) the Father Himself and his good pleasure.—Stier.

VERSES 19, 20.—Precious promise, ever binding on the Promiser; sweet assurance, never failing of accomplishment, wheresoever and whensoever the two or three are met. Zinzendorf says, "He who can say, Thou and I, can speak of a church, and can lay claim to the common grace."

FEBRUARY 16.–MATTHEW XIX.

VERSE 9.—"And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife. . . ."—The Saviour does not explicitly assume that such cases shall happen. But should they happen, the actual moral result, so far as heavenly politics are concerned, is as He states it. Are, then, the annoyances arising from the disparity of dispositions, from disagreeable habits, from weakness and disease, or from dislike and alienation, to be endured? Why not? Why was not the possibility of such incompatibilities and annoyances anticipated? Why were not the needful steps taken to avert them? It is not Christ, or God, who produces them. They have been sinfully introduced within the sphere of the divine institution. . . . Is it not hard to be subjected to such hardships? It is. All hardships are hard; and such hardships are peculiarly hard. But it is not Christ, or God, who is responsible for them. It is sin; and sin is opposition to God and to Christ. . . . The whole of politics, indeed, is perplexed by sin. Emphatically so is the marriage relation. God's law on the subject has never got fair play in society. And no political checks and counterpoises and reliefs will ever succeed in making all things connected with it smooth, sweet, and right, so long as sin is rampant. But still less would perplexity be obliterated by the repeal of God's laws. It would only be intensified into infinite chaos.—Dr. Morison.

VERSE 28.—"Ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration."—The latter words are often misunderstood. The Lord is not speaking of the new birth which He unfolded to Nicodemus, but of the next dispensation, "the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." It will indeed be the season of Israel's new birth; and then the Apostles will be enthroned as the judges or rulers of the twelve tribes.

VERSE 21.—"This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."—All demons are not of equal subtlety and power, nor are all temptations or difficulties equally hard to overcome. Special grace is needed for special duties, trials, and dangers, and this requires, in order to its reception and exercise special prayer and self-denial. The literal rendering of the Greek is "in prayer and fasting," i.e., in the element of. Prayerlessness, or coldness of heart in prayer, is no match for the devil at any time, and fervent prayer can never be the element of a self-indulgent spirit. He who would follow Christ in the pathway of victory and power for service, must follow Him in lowliness and in cross-bearing also.

VERSES 15-18.—"Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee."—No words spoken by the Lord to his disciples are of more importance in reference to Christian conduct than these, none as a rule more neglected. John Wesley tersely asks, in view of these words, "If this be the way to take, in what land do the Christians live?" Yet by such words must we all be judged, and for our possession of them must we all give account.

VERSE 6.—"What God hath joined together."—Our Lord's doctrine of the marriage state demands special attention in these days of licence and moral obliquity. Dr. Morison bids us "Note that it is God who is said to yoke together the united twain. True marriages are thus made in heaven. Whenever marriage is as it ought to be, it is a divine hand that ties the knot." "And they twain shall be one flesh" is emphatically true.

FEBRUARY 17.–MATTHEW XX.

VERSES 1-16.—The Labourers in the Vineyard—The leading thought of this parable, Bengel observes, is, that in God's kingdom no service gives a claim, but all reward is of his free grace. Its object is "to detect and put to shame the evil mind" which envies others and murmurs against God. Luther says, "This parable hits even excellent people; nay, it even terrifies the greatest saints; therefore Christ holds it up before the Apostles themselves."

VERSE 22.—"Ye know not what ye ask."—How often may this be said of the prayers of saints: "and so we have not because we ask amiss." Let none venture to pray without dependence on the help and teaching of that Holy Spirit, whose office it is to help the infirmities of saints, for of the best of us it may be said we "know not what to pray for as we ought."

VERSE 33.—"Lord, that our eyes may be opened."—How touching their request, and how gracious his reply! In view of it, who can doubt his grace, or fear

FEBRUARY 18.–MATTHEW XXI.

VERSE 1.—"Then sent Jesus two disciples."—Then—not before. An entry full of mystery and significance is implied. Bengel notes an interesting and instructive fact when he points out that this was our Lord's seventh entry into the city; (1) in infancy, Luke ii. 22; (2) in childhood, Luke ii. 42; (3) in temptation, Luke iv. 9; (4) at the Passover, John ii. 23; (5) on the Day of Pentecost, John v. 1; (6) at the Feast of Tabernacles, John vii. 10; (7) this, the triumphal entry. In the Transfiguration the heavenly glory of the kingdom had been shown to the favoured three; here the earthly glory of the kingdom is shown to vast multitudes. In this day of his power the people are willing; praise bursts from the children's lips; Jerusalem is all astir, inquiring who is this; the temple is cleansed, and a powerful testimony is borne to the Messianic dignity of the Son of Man. But the testimony is after all rejected, and the King disowned.

VERSE 33.—The parable of the Vineyard let out to Husbandmen.—Observe, it is "the kingdom of God" in verse 43, which is taken from the Jews, not "the kingdom of heaven." They had the kingdom of God, for they owned God as their king, but they never had "the kingdom of heaven," that form of the kingdom of God which was subsequent to Christ's resurrection into the heavens, and which is the peculiar distinction of this dispensation.—Jukes.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN THE CITY.

THE first of a series of monthly meetings of Christian workers connected with the Gracechurch-street Branch of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Thursday evening last, presided over by Mr. J. H. Duncan. Several of the members gave brief accounts of their labours at George-yard, and others promised to help. Mr. George Holland undertakes to provide any amount of work for as many helpers as will go. From the Lambeth Ragged Schools also a deputation was present to enlist the sympathies and services of as many men as could be spared, to help in the Gospel Temperance and other meetings. The open-air service on Sunday afternoons in front of the Exchange was named, as furnishing another field of labour for any living in the City. God is greatly blessing the work of this branch of the Association generally.

Forthcoming Meetings.

EVANGELISTIC.

The Evangelisation Society will send Evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Apply Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send Evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

Mission and other Appeals.

Enniskillen, Ireland.—Some friends here are making an effort to raise £200 for the completion of a Mission Chapel and School. Local resources are exhausted, and they therefore appeal for help, which will be gladly received by Mr. S. B. Humphreys, Fairview, Enniskillen, Ireland.

Clergy Rest House, Bournemouth.—Many distressing cases are constantly applying for admission, but Mrs. Litchfield Langton cannot possibly respond without greatly enlarged funds. There are very many who cannot afford £1 a week. Some who deeply need rest cannot afford anything, and must labour on as best they can without it. These, through the liberality of the Lord's people, it is desired to help.

Ham-yard Soup Kitchen.—The Committee earnestly appeal for increased support for the daily work of the institution. It is open all the year. The hospice contains twenty beds for cases of temporary distress, poor convalescents, and others of good character, who need a helping hand to regain employment. Funds are urgently needed. Penny dinners to poor school children are provided during the winter. The Secretary and Superintendent is Mr. W. Stevens, Ham-yard, Great Windmill-street, Haymarket, W.

Notices.

E. H. D., 37, Longridge-road, Earl's-court, S.W., asks if any of our readers can inform her as to employment in missionary or other religious work for young ladies who have not the means to give gratuitous aid? She is acquainted with some who have a love for the work, and would gladly undertake it in preference to making one of the large number who compete in the already over-stocked market for governesses.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES, SOUTHWARK.—The eighteenth report of these services was read by Mr. Tyler at the recent annual meeting of the Southwark Sunday-school Society. During the past year the conductors of the Children's Christian Band (Messrs. J. and S. Tyler) have had the joy of receiving twenty-three new members; five have been received into church fellowship at Hawkstone Hall and elsewhere. The Children's Scripture Union Branch numbered 131 members at the end of the year. Mr. Tyler's report contained several interesting incidents. Mr. De Voir (Harrow-street, Mint), referring to their services for the young which were held summer and winter, said about eighty attended. By the aid of dissolving-view exhibitions the interest of the children had been increased in missionary work.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—As Secretary of All Saints' Islington Branch of this Association, I ask would your readers to assist us in the formation of a library, or by giving us literature for distribution among young women? We are a poor branch, the girls being factory hands and servants. The Vicar (Rev. A. Wardroper, 21, Cloudesley-square, N.) takes a practical interest in the work by giving a nice Mission Hall, with firing and gas. During two and a half years fifteen have have gone as teachers in Sabbath and Ragged-school work. We are anxious to meet the desire of these for books to help them, and of others who have given up impure literature; we shall be extremely grateful for any help.

Yours very truly, Lizzie Millard.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, February 7, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' and SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing cross.

Patron—Right Hon. Earl of SHAFTESBURY.
President—GENERAL SIR A. J. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

The friends of the soldier are earnestly appealed to for funds for the continued support of the Society. Ninety Scripture Readers are now actively employed in the Army at home and abroad.

With such unquestionable testimony on all sides to the beneficial influence of the Reader in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the Lord's blessing is resting in no small degree upon this Institution; and with this conviction deeply impressed on our hearts, we lay this matter before all who can feel for a soldier's trials, a soldier's temptations, a soldier's devotion to his Queen and country, but, above all for a soldier's everlasting welfare, confident—nay, more than confident, assured—that He will cause unknown supporters to spring up upon the right hand and upon the left, and stimulate old friends to fresh exertions. Two additional Readers are with the Troops in Egypt and one with Sir Charles Warren's Expedition in South Africa.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, V. G. M. Holt, Esq., 17, Whitehall-place; at the Bankers, National Provincial Bank of England, 212, Piccadilly; by the Secretary, Mr. William A. Blake; or by the Hon. Secretary, Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

(Founded by Mr. W. J. Lewis, in the year 1863.)
NOW CONDUCTED BY
MR. JAMES SHARPLESS, Superintendent,
AND
MR. EDWARD GEO. HARVEY, Secretary, 14, Sidney-square, London, E.

This Mission is carried on in one of the most degraded parts of the East of London. The operations consist of Open-Air Gospel Preaching; House-to-House Visitation; Services for Adults and Children; Ragged Night School; Lodging-house visiting. Many have, through this Mission, been delivered from lives of vice and misery. Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at above address, or at the Office of The Christian.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

IN aid of the funds of the proposed LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, received One Hundred and Ninety-nine Shillings from "Appeal," per Christian. Many thanks. Several friends have requested to have Shilling Collecting Cards forwarded. Will kindly Readers extend this easy method of helping the quiet poor? Included in the above 199s. is One Pound each, from Mrs. B., Mrs. G., D. H., and A. T.

Hon. Sec., JULIA CORKE,
120, Ledbury Road, Bayswater, W.

"WOMAN AND THE SCRIPTURES."

Lecture by Miss Corke, published by request.

To be had post-free, price 9d., from the Author, 120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

The entire profits to be devoted to the funds of the "Luther Memorial Home."

ALSO BY MISS CORKE,

"WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THEM?"

With Preface by the Earl of Shaftesbury.
"A book for all the year round."

To be had as above, price 2s. 6d., post-free.

Profits to be devoted to sending over-worked women, free, to Mrs. Mashman's London and Brighton Convalescent Home.

DR. CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE'S LETTERS from EGYPT and PALESTINE.—The first of this series will appear in the CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH on the 5th instant, and will be continued weekly for at least twenty weeks. Dr. Alexander Maclaren's current sermons also appear in the "C. C." weekly. Every Thursday, One Penny. Of all Newsagents.

By the Author of "THE STARLESS CROWN."

THE LITTLE HARP OF GOLD.

Price 3d. per dozen; 2s. per 100.

But beyond the grief and weeping,
Far beyond the skies so cold,
Clad in white and shining raiment,
Bertie held his harp of gold.

And above the sounds of mourning,
Bertie's spirit seemed to say.
"Weep no more, for I am learning
On my golden harp to play!"

"NOT IN VAIN;"

OR, THE TEACHER AND HER SCHOLARS.

Price 3d. per dozen; 2s. per 100.

"I have laboured in vain," a teacher said,
With sorrowful look and tone;
"I have laboured in vain!"—and she bowed her head,
And bitter and sad were the tears she shed,
As she sat in her chamber alone.

"I am weary and worn, and my hands are weak;
My courage has well-nigh flown:
For none give heed to the words I speak,
And in vain for a promise of fruit I seek,
Where the seed of the Word is sown."

A CHILD'S FAITH.

Price 6d. per dozen; 3s. 6d. per 100.

The tide of grief
O'er the widow swept;
She dropped her sewing,
And moaned and wept;
And the cloud of sorrow
So veiled the sky,
She scarce remembered
The God on high.

But one of her children
Just four years old,
With her pale face pinched
With hunger and cold,
But a sweet soft light
In her fair blue eye,
Crept close and whispered,
"Why do you cry?"

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this Edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages. The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.
Rephidim.
Damascus.
Mount Tabor.
Tyre.
Hebron.
Jerusalem from the South.
Shechem—Sychar.
Tiberias.
Bethany.
Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. Porter, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. Porter.

"It is beautifully got up, carefully edited, and all has been done to make the work as useful as possible. Every Christian home ought to have a copy.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

REMARKABLE CASE AT SHAFTESBURY, WILTS.

This case was introduced to me by Mrs. M. J. Bragg, the wife of an evangelist at Shaftesbury.

My medicine had been first recommended to Mrs. Bragg by my old friend. Rev. T. King, of Semley, who was my correspondent for many years (see Case VI. of my book. Mrs. Bragg being greatly benefited by the taking of my medicine herself, tells me that since coming to Shaftesbury she has recommended it to many, who have recovered, and cites this remarkable case:—

The name of the patient was then Miss Burr, of Shaftesbury, but now Mrs. Perrell, of Hindon, Wilts. She first took cold by sitting in a damp room. She lost her voice for two years. She consulted different doctors, and last of all attended the Salisbury Infirmary, where she was pronounced incurable; also a doctor in Bournemouth declared her case to be hopeless.

"I found her (says my correspondent) apparently in the last stage of Consumption, violent cough, profuse expecturation, her voice gone, her eyes protruding, and greatly reduced. I advised your treatment, telling her that it had been the means, in God's hand, of my own restoration, after having been prostrate for months. She hesitated: said she had 'tried so many things without effect, and she had given up all hope.' However, she did commence, and the result of one supply of medicine induced her to continue. She gradually got better, her voice was restored. She has continued quite well ever since. Her father, residing at Shaftesbury, is deeply grateful, and will be pleased to confirm the statement of her case."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Cocoa

"IT is often asked, 'Why does my doctor recommend Cadbury's Cocoa?' The reason is, that being absolutely genuine and concentrated by the removal of the superfluous fat, it contains FOUR TIMES THE AMOUNT OF NITROGENOUS OR FLESH-FORMING CONSTITUENTS than the average in other Cocoas which are mixed with sugar and starch."

"Nonpareil"

The "Nonpareil" is the richest, softest, and most becoming Velveteen ever produced, and is preeminently suited for Ladies' Indoor and Outdoor Costumes, Boys' Suits, and Children's Dress.

The "Nonpareil" Velveteen suits old and young, boys and girls, brides and chaperons. The woman does not exist whom this lovely fabric does not become. It well merits the name "Nonpareil," for it has no equal in grace and beauty.

The finer qualities are equal in appearance, and wear better than the very best Lyons Silk Velvet, and cost only a quarter of the price. Can be purchased of all leading Retailers at from 2s. to 6s. per yard.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

RESCUE WORK AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS,

AN UNEXPECTED DIFFICULTY

Our Christian Home for hopeful men, No. 10, Brooke-street, Holborn, which has been such an untold blessing in this Rescue Work, is about to be taken down, and we are compelled to get out almost at once; but, just at this moment of embarrassment, large and most suitable Premises have been offered to us on advantageous terms immediately opposite the house we are leaving, but some £500 at least will be needed for necessary alterations and repairs. This sum we are most anxious to raise altogether apart from our General Funds, so that our Daily Work of Rescue may not be hampered in consequence of this extra expense. Golden opportunities of winning the Criminal Classes for God's service are before us. Who among our many Friends will help us at once to raise this £500?

Sincerely yours,
GEORGE HATTON,
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission,

12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & CO., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

This work has been carried on by the Bros. Young and helpers for the past seven years, and has been from the commencement self-supporting.

We have secured the whole of the premises for a term of twenty-one years, and purpose making extensive alterations in order to accommodate the people that are pressing us on all sides. To carry out this object we earnestly appeal to warm-hearted Christian friends for help. A Finance Committee has been appointed to supervise the income and expenditure.

This Work is recommended by Mr. C. H. SPURGEON.

Extract of Letter from C. H. Spurgeon: "Just now help is needed, for the friends must get a lease of their premises and "meet many expenses, and I am sure that any money put to this work by the Lord's stewards will be well laid out, and will "yield a large interest in the good of men and the glory of God.

"It is with peculiar pleasure that I commend the work in Collingwood-street, New-cut, to the generous help of all Christian "people.—(Signed) C. H. SPURGEON."

Donations will be received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN; or may be sent direct to the Treasurer or Superintendents at 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars, S.E.

LET US DO LIKEWISE.

"They lifted up their voice to God with one accord."—ACTS iv. 24.

"THEY lifted up their voice" did this little company, whom the Apostles had straightway joined, after their summary dismissal by the rulers of Israel, and whom they rightly regarded as their "own" (there is no word in the Greek answering to "company")—their own friends—fellows (as one of the oldest versions renders it), fellows alike in the faith, as in the sufferings of Christ.

No sooner had Peter and John "reported all that the chief priests and elders had said to them," than all present lifted up their voice—"voice," not "voices." The voice was one, though many prayed. One spoke as the mouth-piece of all the rest. Every heart beat to the same tune. One and the self-same spirit inspired each. "They lifted up their voice with one accord" (lit. one mind).

"They lifted up their voice." This was the one only weapon left to them—united, believing prayer. They had not withheld their testimony to their fellow-men, and that in the face of stripes, imprisonment, and death itself. Now, however, but one thing remained, to cry to "the living God." It was the time of their extremity, and they felt shut up to God, and to God alone. He was their "refuge and strength, a very present help" in the time of their trouble. So to Him "they lifted up their voice." They lifted up their voice. It was an upward, heavenward movement, not of the voice only, but of the heart. "They looked unto Him, and were lightened." "They lifted up their voice, and said, Lord, Thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that in them is." In view of the mighty confederation, both of the religious and the irreligious world against them and the Gospel cause, they eyed the great power of God. They committed themselves to Him "as unto a faithful Creator." Not only here, but in still later books of the New Testament, special prominence is given to the "creatorship" of God (1 Peter iv. 19; 2 Peter iii. 5; Rev. x. 6, &c). How significant this, in view of the many false theories about creation by which even God's own children are being beguiled.

"They lifted up their voice." For what? That they themselves might be spared further sorrow, and suffering? No. They cried for increased boldness in the faith, for greater manifestations of the power of God's anointed "Servant," through their instrumentality. "And now, Lord, behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness, they may speak thy word, by stretching forth thy hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy Child (Servant) Jesus." This was their prayer. They were willing to lose themselves, if only Christ and his Gospel might triumph.

"They lifted up their voice." And what followed? Did the Most High regard their cry? He did. "The place where they were assembled was shaken." Not the city, or any part of it, but only the room where those praying ones were assembled. For this was no mere earthquake, but a supernatural sign or token of the power which should yet attend their testimony to the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, by which the powers both of earth and hell should be shaken—an earnest, too, of that mighty shaking, in a future day, not only of the earth, but of the heavens also. (Hag. ii. 6; Heb. xii. 26.)

Did this company of disciples do well to "lift up their voice to their Creator"—God—at such a time? And shall we not do well to do likewise, in the crisis which has come upon us and our nation? Shall the present "company" of the redeemed on earth not lift up their voice to the same Creator—God—as did these primitive believers? If the time being is not a time for crying to the living God, how could we suppose such a time could come in our day? Oh, let us who "call upon the Father" lift up our voice just now; not the voice of reproach and ridicule of our rulers; nor of resentment, revenge, against our enemies; nor of arrogant boasting of our military prowess and daring; but the voice of united believing prayer to the "King of Heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment; and who is able to abase those who walk in pride."

It is vain to expect that our rulers will appoint a day of humiliation and prayer as did their fathers.

Yet must the people of God together lift up their voice. Even if but two or three gathered together, would not God hear and answer, and grant a "lengthening of tranquility" in our time, and save our soldiers from pestilence and the sword? Could not those who assembled at that remarkable and blessed missionary farewell meeting at Exeter Hall, and lifted up their voice in thanksgiving for all they then saw and heard, assemble for adoration, prayer, and confession? Such a suggestion as this was made in THE CHRISTIAN of that week, but events have happened since which give extraordinary emphasis to such a proposal. God grant it may come to pass.

Canon Hoare has set a good example at Tunbridge Wells by issuing the following notice:—

"The War in the Soudan.—There will be, if God permit, a meeting for prayer every day during the present great anxiety, in the Trinity Parish-room, commencing at 4.30 p.m. "E. HOARE.
"February 9, 1885."

May not all ministers elsewhere appoint either congregational or district meetings for confession and prayer in reference to national concerns, assembling of Parliament, &c. I am arranging for a meeting at Powis Hall, Powis-gardens, at the back of my Tabernacle, for Thursday, the 26th, at noon, and evening at 8, and intend to preach in reference to it on Sunday, the 22nd. We read (Dan. ix. 23), "At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth." Let, therefore, there be a "beginning." Who shall say where it will end? Surely "it is time to seek the Lord," to "take" with us words, and turn to the Lord and say unto Him, "Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Asshur shall not save us;" nor can Lord Wolseley, brave and skilled as he is. What is man?

"The world is very evil,
 The times are waxing late,
Be patient and keep vigil,
 The King is at the gate."

THE END OF THIS AGE.

THE MAN OF SIN.

THE Methodist Times seems to be of the same mind as John and Charles Wesley concerning the end of this age and the coming of the Lord, though this view has ceased to be generally held by modern Methodists. The editor says:—

"The Expositor for this month opens with an article by Dr. Godet on the Epistles to the Thessalonians. It is specially interesting, as it gives that great, we ought perhaps to say greatest, living expositor's view of 'the Man of Sin' and the 'Antichrist.' He believes that this mysterious personage will be an outcome of degenerate Judaism, and that the Jewish nation, putting itself at the head of the great falling away or apostasy of Christian humanity, towards the close of its existence, will then give birth to its false Messiah, the very ideal of man's natural heart, which has rejected the true Christ. With a daring impiety such as can only belong to him who has turned his back on a holy destination, a Jew wonderfully gifted will, by raising the standard of Atheistic Pantheism, proclaim himself the incarnation of the absolute, and draw after him the great mass of mankind by promising a golden age; for he will have no trouble in obtaining credit in the midst of the dissolution and anarchy then prevailing in the world. And how will this state of things have been brought about? Doubtless by an interior social revolution, which will be no other than the overthrow of the restrainer?"

The remainder of the passage is interesting as showing Dr. Godet's view as to that which hindered in the Apostle's day, and still hinders, the manifestation of the final Antichrist:—

"We know what the opposing force was which annihilated every attempt on the part of the Jewish false Messiahs at the time when the Apostle was living; it was the strength of the Roman legions which crushed every appearance of revolt among the Jews. Since that time the laws which regulate society have maintained themselves on much the same basis as the one imposed by the Roman power; but should this present order of things come to be overthrown, room would thereby be made for the despot who could turn to advantage the anarchy which would be the natural result of such a revolution. One glance at the course pursued nowadays by mankind in general is sufficient to convince us that the fatal term prophetically spoken by St. Paul is fast approaching."

TYRE, VENICE, ENGLAND.

The mind of Dr. Stoughton has been running in a similar direction, though he is more hopeful as to the end. In the current number of The Quiver he tells us his thoughts on a Sunday in Venice, and takes the words of Mr. Ruskin in his "Stones of Venice" for a text: "Since first the dominion of man was asserted over the ocean, three thrones of mark beyond all others have been set upon its sands; the thrones of Tyre, Venice, and England. Of the first of these great powers only the memory remains; of the second, the ruin; the third, which inherits their greatness, if it forget their example, may be led through prouder eminence to less pitied destruction."

"True, most true," says Dr. Stoughton. "We see how the fulfilment of prophecy has been wrought out by providential law, through the operations of secondary causes, originating in the conduct of men one towards another. . . . The overthrow of Tyre, as predicted by the prophets, is attributed to the sins of the inhabitants. . . . Our destinies are, under God, in our own keeping. If we imitate Tyre and Venice in their habits, we shall resemble them in their doom."

A KINGDOM OF POWER.

By Rev. Dr. HOGE, of Richmond, Va.

"My kingdom is not of this world."

WHILE Christ's kingdom is spiritual and inward, it is not one of secret experiences only, or confined to the affections; it is one which kindles a new life, and becomes a kingdom of power. In the estimation of men of the world, this kingdom is an airy, imaginative, unreal thing—a theological fiction—a kingdom of cloud-land. They can understand a kingdom that has a visible king in it, with a palace, a court, halls of justice, revenues, telegraphs, postal arrangements, and a standing army. All this is real enough; but a spiritual citizenship, an ethical brotherhood—that to them is an empty, abstract ideal, as unpractical and visionary as the speculative republic of Plato, or the dreamy Utopia of Sir Thomas More. Nevertheless, it is a kingdom of power, as is proved by its early triumphs. When its earliest heralds went forth in accordance with their great commission proclaiming the Gospel of this Kingdom, it accomplished the mightiest revolution which the world has witnessed. Its first triumphs were in the land where it originated; under a single sermon preached by one of its apostles thousands of men were converted to a new faith, and entered upon a new life. It pervaded Judea; it irradiated Asia Minor; it crossed over to the shores of Europe, that, first having risen like the sun in the East, it might ascend to its zenith and illumine all the kingdoms of the West, and that by becoming European, it might, through the enterprising nations of that continent, become universal.

It seized upon the great cities of both continents. It captured Antioch, and converted its name to Theopolis, the city of God, made it the home of Ignatius and Chrysostom the golden-mouthed, and the place where the honoured name of Christian first originated. It entered Ephesus, the magnificent city which once crowned the heights of Mounts Prion and Coressus, and whose gay gardens once bloomed on the banks of the Cayster, and there a church was gathered to which Paul addressed one of the most delightful of all his epistles. It flew to Thessalonica, that commercial city, that ancient Liverpool of the Levant, from which sounded out the Word of God through Macedonia and Achaia, and whose honourable title was the orthodox city; the city of Theodosius and of Ambrose, the city outside whose wall was a cemetery with inscriptions on the tombs such as that lamentable line from Æschylus, which tells us that "after death there is no hope for the body," sounding in the ears of the living like a dirge of the insatiable sea, until Paul sent them another line, which came to bereaved mourners like a strain from heaven, saying, "I would not have you to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep." It captured Corinth; it called at Athens long enough to deliver the Athenians a nobler oration than Demosthenes ever spoke from the Bema. It came at last to Rome, and left its converts in Nero's household.

It proved itself to be a kingdom not in word only, but also in power, when its heralds went everywhere, scattering Polytheism to the winds, sending the idols to the moles and bats, laying its proudest temples in the dust, and on the ruins of the fallen fabric planted the immovable foundation, and raised the eternal temple of the Christian Church. It demonstrated its power when it triumphed not only over Polytheism, but over persecution; and as aromatic trees yield their odours faster when their sides are gashed; as palms lift their heads higher when the greatest weight is laid upon them; as the burning forest kindles with a fiercer flame when the tempest beats upon it; so Christianity, under the sword, under the heel, under the storm of persecution, only the more mightily prevailed and grew. The good seed of the Gospel had been sown all over the world, and when the blood of the martyrs fell upon it in fertilising showers, then came the brightest verdure and the richest fruits, so that the wilderness and the solitary place were glad for them, and the very desert blossomed as the rose.

Such were its ancient triumphs. Nor has the kingdom lost its power. It is still the mightiest of the forces at work in the world. The only progressive nations are the Christian nations; by which I mean, the colonising, enterprising nations; those which are making advances in arts, useful inventions, sound learning, the science of right living, the things which constitute the highest civilisation.—Pulpit Treasury.

HOME MISSIONS IN GLASGOW.

FROM Glasgow there comes news of unusual importance. Not long since a society called the Glasgow Home Mission Union was formed. It was to give a practical solution to the question: "How to reach the lapsed masses." "By means of existing evangelical churches working territorially and in harmony," is the answer now being given by this Union. It mapped out the city into five sections, and these again have been, and are still being, divided into sub-sections, each of which is committed to the charge of some neighbouring church, to be worked as its special mission sphere.

Of results it is too soon to say much, the work of allocating the sub-sections not being quite complete. Yet already the success is remarkable. In one sub-section sixteen non-church-going families have become regular attenders of the church; and in another twenty-six families of this class have attached themselves to a mission station as regular hearers. In one section the work of five churches has resulted in winning 109 persons from neglect of public worship to regular attendance at mission services; while, in another section, six churches have together succeeded in winning 731 non-church-goers to the regular meetings of their respective missions.

Altogether, about 200 churches of Glasgow have undertaken districts, which, for the most part, they are working very diligently. It is hoped that by the end of another year, through the development of this plan, the entire city will be under the thorough systematic supervision of the united Evangelical churches; and that it will then be possible to give some account of the religious position of every household in the city.

These facts have tremendous significance. If Christians can unite in Glasgow, why not elsewhere? This plan of work is so manifestly the outcome of sanctified common-sense—i.e., of central Christian principles applied to the direct needs of the actual present—that it calls for our most earnest attention. Let evangelical churches of every name, and in every place, ask themselves why they should not unite with one another in such a scheme as this.

Still, even here, a word of warning is needed. One section of Glasgow reports that seven of its churches have received 136 non-church-goers into their communion. If these 136 give evidence of the new birth, we sincerely rejoice. But, considering the short time allowed, and the awful prevalence of the dry-rot of a mere Christianised morality, in very many of the churches of Scotland, we stand in fear. Is the sacred table of our Lord to be prostituted into a mere means of attachment to the Church, in the pious hope that men will be blessed by this attachment? Shall we permit outward reformation and formal attendance at the sanctuary to qualify for a place at the communion table, and for that solemn profession of personal love to Christ which presence there involves? The idea is heathenish, yet warning is needed—it is prevalent in some quarters.

THE CRISIS IN THE SOUDAN.

ENGLAND is proud of her heroes, and Christians rejoice in the noble self-sacrifice of our Gordon, whose endurance and resource have been the wonder of the world. He has fallen murdered at his post. There are few who will not sympathise with the spirit of the poetess who thus extols him:—

GENERAL GORDON.

Ah, brave and true and faithful to the last
He stood alone amid the traitor crew!
Alas! it was their saviour that they slew;
Their friend, whose life they flung into the past,
Like some rich jewel that a child might cast
Into the sea: for him they never knew.
His land has thrilled with horror through and through,
And everywhere indignant tears fall fast.
But he now rests in peace from earthly strife;
The victor needs no more the soldier's sword;
The martyr, gaining by the cruel knife
A hero's fame as his well-earned reward;
And, better far! the Christian's faithful life
Has won the gracious "Well done" of his Lord.

A. M. C.

But while our tears may fall together with those of the gentle lady who thus writes, let us distinguish between things that differ, between admiring the qualities of Gordon and crying for revenge.

Do those who sit in their arm-chairs at home think what war means:—

> "With fire and sword the country round
>   Was wasted far and wide,
> And many a childing mother then,
>   And new-born baby died;
> But things like that, you know, must be
> At every famous victory."

Let not the Christians of England swell the savage cry for vengeance which is being heard. We rejoice that many faithful men are trying to preach it down. Amongst similar utterances we quote from the Rev. Newman Hall:—

> "He left to others the political aspect, but as a Christian minister he thought it right to ask them to weigh such considerations as the following: That revenge meant the slaughter of some thousands of brave Arabs and of some hundreds of our own valiant soldiers; that those Arabs of the Soudan had by Gordon himself been proclaimed free, and therefore were no rebels; that they were in arms against the vile and oppressive tyranny of Egypt; that they were in their own land protecting it against foreign invaders seeking to bring them back to bondage, and were doing just what we should do in their case; that throughout our land prayers were that day offered to God to deliver us 'from battle and murder,' to 'give peace in our time,' to help us to 'forgive our enemies,' and to 'incline our hearts to keep this law, Thou shalt not kill,' and that Christ had taught us that we should do to others as we would that they should do to us. The people if urged to support the continuance of war should ask themselves whether there was sufficient necessity in this case to justify a departure from the plain meaning of the teaching of the Prince of Peace."

If England leads the van of the nations, she could prove her supremacy and exalt her prestige in no more effectual way than by setting her face against the war spirit which is abroad.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

FEBRUARY 19.—MATTHEW XIII. 31–43.

v. 32.—"Which indeed is the least of all seeds."—Great results often spring from small causes. It is so both for good and evil. A great tree grew from a small seed. God can use very humble instruments to do great things. Little children sometimes think they cannot do any thing for Christ, but it is not so. What seems very trifling to us is often of great importance in God's sight. We must be faithful always in little things, watchful against little sins, and leave results to Him who knows how to order all things for his own glory.

v. 43.—"THEN shall the righteous shine forth as the sun."—An aged man was sitting before the embers of a fire in an almshouse. He was very deaf, and every limb shook with palsy. Deeply poor was he. "What are you now doing?" said a friend who called upon him. "Waiting, sir." "And for what?" asked his friend. "For the coming of my Lord." "What makes you wish for his coming?" "Because, sir, I expect great things then. He has promised that when He shall appear He will give a crown of righteousness to all who love Him." "On what foundation do you rest for such a hope?" again questioned his friend. Rubbing and putting on his spectacles, he read, "Therefore, being justified by faith," &c. (Rom. v. 1, 2). Happy old man! so poor in this world's goods, yet so rich in faith.

FEBRUARY 20.—MATTHEW XIII. 44–58.

v. 49.—"The angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just."—Good and bad things and good and bad men are mixed up together in this world, and we cannot always tell one from the other; but God can. Sometimes God winnows and separates good men from bad men, even in this world. I will show you how. Once, on board ship, there were two sailors. One of them was rather quiet, and the other very noisy and boastful. The second used to laugh at the first for his quiet ways, and used to tell long stories about his own bravery and boldness. So it came to be thought that the noisy man was very brave, and the quiet man rather cowardly. But one night a fire broke out in the ship. Everyone hurried upon deck, and the boats were lowered. There was just room in them for the women and children and a few rowers, but not for all the crew. So the captain said, "Hand on the women and children to the boats." The crew all obeyed. Some of the sailors were ordered to jump into the boats to row. The rest remained in their places. But just as the last boat was nearly filled, and only one woman remained on deck, the noisy sailor rushed before her and tried to leap into the boat. But the quiet sailor, catching the coward by the collar, threw him back upon the deck; then he helped in the poor woman, and bade her good-bye, pushing off the boat from the burning vessel. Thus God winnowed the good from the bad, and the brave from the boastful. We believe that in the end of the world God will winnow all that is bad from all that is good, and will destroy the bad and preserve the good for ever.—Dr. Abbott.

FEBRUARY 21.—MATTHEW XIV. 1–12.

v. 1-3.—See how a guilty conscience troubled the wicked king. There is a species of poplar whose leaves are often rustled by a breeze too faint to stir the foliage of other trees. Noticing the fact one day when there was scarce a breath of air, Gotthold thought within himself, "This tree is the emblem of a man with a wounded and uneasy conscience, which takes alarm at the most trifling cause, and agitates him so that he knows not whither to fly." We should pray,

"Order my footsteps by thy Word,
And make my heart sincere;
Let sin have no dominion, Lord,
But keep my conscience clear."

v. 12.—"Went and told Jesus."—This is the great privilege of all who know and love the Saviour; they may go and tell Him everything, and will always find in Him sympathy and help in every time of need. There is no friend like Jesus.

FEBRUARY 22.—MATTHEW XIV. 13–21.

v. 21.—"Beside women and children."—One of the constituents of that company by the Galilean lake was children. It is one great glory of Christianity that its merciful mysteries can find their way to the hearts of little children. The sum of all Gospel mysteries lies in the words which we learned at our mothers' knees so long ago that we have forgotten they were ever new to us. "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The little child who has learned his earliest lessons of what father and son, loving and giving, trust and life mean, by the sweet experiences of his own father's home and his mother's love, can grasp these blessed words. Wonderful the word which blesses the child, and yet transcends the angel before the throne.—Dr. Maclaren.

FEBRUARY 23.—MATTHEW XIV. 22–36.

v. 23.—"He went up into a mountain apart to pray."—If we imitate the example of Jesus, we shall often go alone to pray. He said, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

v. 30.—"Beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me."—He who sinks in the waters does so in the calm as well as in the storm, and he who can walk upon them will do so in the storm as well as in the calm. Faith overcomes circumstances.—Darby.

Faith keeps on looking to Jesus, and does not look at the waves, and so triumphs over all difficulties.

FEBRUARY 24.—MATTHEW XV. 1–14.

v. 4.—"God commanded, saying, Honour thy father and mother."—This is the first commandment with promise. There are many examples of such honour and obedience recorded in the Scriptures. Joseph bowed with reverence before his aged father. Solomon the king, bowed before his mother, and gave her a seat at his right hand. And of One "greater than Solomon" it is said, "He went down with his mother and Joseph, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them." Though the consciousness of his own dignity and mission had opened before Him as a bright gleam of sunshine through the rifted clouds, yet He was not eager to fling away parental restraint and authority. He was willing to go down and dwell in the obscurity of Nazareth, to bury the great secret for a while in his own breast, to live a quiet and unostentatious life, and without a murmur, to put Himself once more under the yoke of parental discipline.—Rev. Jas. Owen.

FEBRUARY 25.—MATTHEW XV. 15–28.

v. 15.—"Peter said unto him, Declare unto us this parable."—When you cannot quite understand anything you read in the Word of God, pray for light, and the Holy Spirit will teach you (see Jas. i. 5.) The Rev. Murray McCheyne once wrote to a little boy, "Pray that the Holy Spirit would not only make you a believing and holy lad, but make you wise in your studies also. A ray of divine light in the soul sometimes clears up a mathematical problem wonderfully. The smile of God calms the spirit, and the left hand of Jesus holds up the fainting head, and the Holy Spirit quickens the affections so that even natural studies go on a million times more easily and comfortably."

v. 22.—What a blessing is a praying mother!

v. 25.—"Lord, help me."—A short prayer, but one God is sure to answer, and one all may offer at any time. As Trapp says, "Few words, but very forcible."

MR. TOYE AND HIS ORPHANS.

It was on a damp, cheerless day in January that I found my way from Lewisham Station to Mr. Toye's Orphan Home in the Lewisham-road. My ring at the door was answered by a bright little girl, in a warm linsey frock and clean pinafore, who showed me into a small room evidently set apart as a waiting-room. Very soon the venerable man, who has been as a father to 453 little destitute children, came in, and with great pleasure we met as old friends after the lapse of nearly ten years.

Except that his long beard and hair were yet more snowy white, I noticed but little alteration in his appearance, and he still had much to tell of the love and faithfulness of his Heavenly Father in supplying all his needs day by day, both for his own family, who are all engaged in the work, and for the 126 children now in the Homes; but often his faith has been sorely tried when there has been nothing for the next meal, though in answer to the prayer of faith it has always come in some way.

I learned, in response to my questions, that last year had been one of greater trial than any before from lack of funds, and as Mr. Toye makes his appeals to none but God, marvellous indeed is the history he can tell of deliverance and help when most needed.

Mr. Toye now has six small houses, one of which he and his family occupy, and the rest are literally filled with little wooden cots for the children, nearly all of which Mr. Toye has made with his own hands, and painted dark red. The beds are stuffed with torn-up letters and paper, and have been nearly all made in the Home. Most have little white quilts, but a few have coloured and patchwork ones which were given by friends. Twenty-five of the boys sleep in a long, airy room, which Mr. Toye built with his own hands, above the storeroom. Behind the houses is a considerable space for playgrounds for boys and girls, at the end of which is a large schoolroom divided up for boys, girls, and infants. This Mr. Toye, with only the assistance of the boys, has built and fitted up.

Here was the best sight of all, the large rooms filled with busy little learners, all beautifully clean, and the girls dressed in dark linsey frocks and print pinafores. As I asked to hear them sing, the girls and infants all marched into the boys' room and took their places on a raised platform. Mr. Toye's son (who teaches the boys) played the harmonium, and they sang with great spirit some really difficult pieces. It was a wonderful sight, those 126 destitute orphan children clothed, fed, taught, and trained for future work and usefulness, and the dear "Father" in their midst, so loving and beloved. The girls are fitted for service, and there are always situations open for them, but it is more difficult to place out the boys, as so few are willing or able to find a home as well as work for a boy. Mr. Toye now has two who are fifteen years old, for whom he would be very thankful to find an opening.

As I came away, it was with feelings of deep thankfulness for what the Lord had done through his humble, trusting servant; and of earnest desire that many more might know about the work and have the joy and privilege of helping to care for the fatherless little ones. C. H.

The Eighth Report of this Home is just published, and can be had by sending four stamps and a directed wrapper to Mr. Toye, 64, Lewisham-road, S.E.

THE JEWS IN 1884.

WE have received from Mrs. Finn, Secretary of the Syrian Colonisation Fund (41, Parliament-street, S.W.), some striking facts as to the present condition of the Jews in Europe. She says:—

Persecution is still active, and is increasing. The Jews in Roumania are suffering under the oppressive laws recently brought to bear upon them in that country. The unfortunate people are driven out of every industry by which they could earn their bread, forbidden to live in rural districts, precluded from working as artisans, or trading in the towns. Many distressing cases could be given to show the brutal manner in which the law is carried out.

At Odessa the Jewish merchants suddenly received notice of expulsion at the New Year unless they paid the fee of 1000 roubles (about £100) annually for licences as first-class merchants. The date seems to have been purposely fixed to interfere with the usual getting-in of trade debts at the end of the old year. The Jews will have to go, pay all their debts, sell off at a loss, and leave before getting in the payments due to them. In two great provinces a cruel law of Emperor Nicholas is now revived, driving all Jews near the frontier into the interior. All this in the depth of Russian winter!

Matters are not much better in Austria. There has been a serious outbreak, with loss of life, in Cracow. In Hungary outrages still continue; and though the Austrian Government is by no means unfriendly, local judges and officials join actively in illtreating Jews.

Mr. J. D. Mocatta reports that in the capital of Bulgaria, where the Jews till lately have been at peace, they are now in fear of disturbances on account of Russian and German influences. He adds, that the position of Jews in Servia and Turkey is everything that can be desired. In Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia there is nothing to be complained of, so far as the law is concerned; but the pamphlets industriously circulated, often with sensational illustrations about the "Blood Accusation," are doing much harm, and the Jews are very much depressed about their future.

In Germany the anti-Semites are busy with active propaganda against the Jews, both there and abroad.

A terrible persecution has long been going on in Morocco unchecked.

Emigration is the only resource left, but whither shall Jews go? Most European States, as well as American, now refuse to admit refugees unless they bring funds with them. The tide of destitute Jews is again setting in to this country, almost the only country still open to them. But an indefinite number of foreign Jews cannot be received in England, even if they could find employment. Turkey and the Land of Promise are again open. Hither the homeless wanderers must and will assuredly turn their steps. Many have already gone there.

We feel assured that Christian sympathy with persecuted Jews will not fail, and that in view of the increasing distress, increased help will be afforded for relief given by British Christians.

HACKNEY AND CLAPTON Y.W.C.A.—The need of a branch Association has been much felt here. The Committee have felt particularly encouraged not only by the wide-spread general interest shown, but especially by that of the clergy and ministers of every denomination, and the employers in the large business houses. Suitable and commodious premises, now known as Seymour House, Portland-place, have been secured in the main road between Hackney and Clapton. On Monday, the 2nd inst., the house was opened to the young people. The chair was taken by Mr. W. G. Habershon; and many interesting and earnest addresses were given. Further help is absolutely necessary, and will be thankfully received by the Manager of the London and County Bank, Hackney; or by the Treasurer, Mr. Matthew Rose, Hackney.

AMONG THE FRENCH VILLAGERS.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to thank again those of your readers who so kindly sent help to the sufferers through the hailstorm in June last? Our friend, the Maire, through whom the help has been given, has acted with great prudence, feeling the responsibility incurred by those who distribute "the Lord's money." His personal knowledge of every one in the neighbourhood enabled him to distinguish between those who needed help, and those who, though suffering from the hail, could with a little patience and self-denial, get on till next harvest. Waiting till the old stores were exhausted, he began with giving to those who needed seed-wheat; for, even where there was not a total destruction of the grain, it was utterly unfit for seed. Through inquiries made in the three neighbouring communes, he ascertained the most needy, and quietly sent word to them to come to the mill with a sack for flour. In our own commune he gave the promise a few weeks earlier, thus relieving many hearts of a heavy burden.

One thing has struck me as unusual here: the hearty gratitude expressed by those who have received nothing themselves. "Ah, it is so good to have given something to this poor Frederic; he has really need," someone said the other day. Having suffered too heavily themselves to be able to give, they can and do rejoice in the joy of others. Monsieur Helarie rejoices above all in the open doors for the Gospel which these gifts have made. One or two who have been helped had been opposed to the Gospel and to ourselves as bringing it. For the present, at least, they are silent.

We have read with deep interest in THE CHRISTIAN the sad histories of distress and the brave and self-denying efforts made to feed the hungry by the Lord's people. At a time when some have been constrained to give almost beyond their power, I have thought that a lesson which came to me in a dream last summer might gladden some hearts beside my own. I had been calculating my own resources, and pondering whether I could afford to give help towards the support of a missionary who goes constantly among the neglected villages of the Drôme mountains. One night in my dream I stood in the place of one of our French towns; many were standing there beside myself, and several diligences were on the point of starting for their different destinations.

Suddenly I saw one among the crowd whom I recognised at once as our risen Lord. No one seemed to notice Him. He came straight to me, and said, pointing to the diligence beside me, "I am going in that diligence, and you are to pay my fare." I am glad that in my dream my heart was true to Him. One swift thought to my almost, as I believed, empty purse, and then unhesitatingly I said, "Certainly I will." He said nothing, bowed as if accepting, entered the diligence, and was gone; leaving me exclaiming, "He is risen!" Then came the thought of the fare I was to pay. I took out my purse, looking at the "sous" there, and the solitary half-franc among them. I began to turn them over, hoping to find another, when, lo! the silver began to grow amid the copper; the "sous" changed into francs, the pennies into five franc pieces, gold pieces gleamed amid the silver, and I exclaimed, "And they say He is not risen." I have seen Him, and He can work a miracle today as well as ever He could; He has multiplied the money as He multiplied the loaves! Then I awoke.

How the Lord has gone with that missionary, sustaining and blessing him, is known to many; the full record will be known in eternity. I trust I have not done wrong in telling my dream. So vivid was the impression that it is as clear to-day as six months ago. May the Lord by it encourage some doubting ones to pay their Lord's fare to China, to the centre of Africa, to New Guinea, not doubting that He will supply all their need according to his riches in glory.

Yours very gratefully, S. R. GELDARD.

THE KING FOR EVERMORE.

THE Lord Jehovah reigneth. Then let our
In humble faith, now kneeling [hearts adore
With deep and contrite feeling,
Each heart alone
Before his throne; [more.
The Lord Jehovah reigneth, the King for ever-

The Lord Jehovah reigneth. All bow his sway
The angry waves of ocean, [before;
And man's most fierce emotion,
The mighty cry
Of each on high, [more.
O'er all Jehovah reigneth, the King for ever-

And still Jehovah reigneth, as when in days of His Spirit whispered, telling, [yore
"I make man's soul my dwelling,
Each contrite one
Is my own throne." [more.
There God Jehovah reigneth, the King for ever-

The Lord Jehovah reigneth. But do I Him
Is my love true and fervent, [adore?
And am I his own servant?
And is his will,
For good or ill, [more?
The loved will of my Father, my King for ever-

Yea, God Jehovah reigneth. In faith his feet
I pray that for Christ's merit, [before
His gracious holy Spirit
May dwell in me
Eternally, [more.
And there, my Lord Jehovah, be King for ever-

MR. HENRY THORNE AT PORTSMOUTH.

THIS earnest evangelist has conducted a most successful Mission at Portsmouth under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. there. The whole of the meetings were characterised by much brightness and thoroughness. The interest of Christians generally had been thoroughly aroused by a series of prayer-meetings held in different parts of the town before the Mission commenced, and it was manifested in the splendid attendances at the mid-day meetings and the after Bible-readings.

Large numbers have testified to the great blessing that has come into their hearts from these meetings. Souls have been converted, lukewarm and lazy Christians stirred up to work, backsliders restored, and earnest Christians encouraged and invigorated. Soldiers and sailors attended in large numbers, and many of these have enlisted under the banner of King Jesus.

One night was set apart to a special address on the perils of a young woman's life, while another was devoted to young men. At the close of these meetings numbers declared themselves on the Lord's side. The great times of the Mission for numbers were the Sunday evening services, when the hall was taxed to its utmost.

The Mission lasted fourteen days. The workers and converts met on Monday week with a praise meeting, and a blessed time it was. Testimonies for Christ formed the principal business of the meeting, with some faithful words to the converts. The Committee of the Association met Mr. Thorne at a farewell breakfast on Tuesday, February 10, and with many a God-speed and hearty shaking of the hand, he left for London. Miss Robinson deserves our best thanks for placing her beautiful hall at our disposal free of cost for fourteen days.

W. W. FULLER, Hon. Sec.

SERVICES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AT BLACKHEATH.—We would draw special attention to the services for young people which Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith proposes to hold at the Rink, Blackheath, from February 20 to March 29. He will give addeses on Fridays to parents only at 3 o'clock, to young ladies at 4.30, to boys at 7; and on Saturdays to young ladies at 3.30, to Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers at 7. There will be addresses to young men on Sunday evenings at 8.45. Will our readers remember all these efforts in prayer?

A GOOD WORK IN BILLINGSGATE.

FEW localities in London are better known or possess a more unenviable reputation than Billingsgate. The place is associated in many people's minds with much that is low and coarse in language, if not with that which is vicious and demoralising in life. It was the prevalence of bad language on the part of those who habitually frequent the market, that led to the appointment of a missionary, ten years ago, by the London City Mission. From that time Mr. T. Vicary has zealously laboured in visitation and the various duties devolving upon a missionary, and has witnessed great results.

About five years ago a deep longing to see even greater results led Mr. Vicary to secure two rooms at 98, Lower Thames-street, as the headquarters of a Christian Mission to be hereafter known as the Billingsgate District Association. During a recent survey of this good enterprise we were shown into one of the rooms, which we found to be a library containing 1000 books. No small part of the salutary influence exerted by the Mission is effected here. And whatever the supposed object of its promoter in establishing it may have been, the real design was to secure personal interviews with the men themselves in coming to and fro for books. Nor has this buttonhole work been in vain. One man who went for a book was conversed with about his soul, and was almost immediately convinced of sin. The key of the door was turned, earnest prayer was offered, the way of salvation portrayed, and the stricken penitent led to trust in Jesus as his Saviour. The most striking feature in the case is that this new and happy convert has since been the means of leading every one of his fellow-workmen to Christ.

Turning next to the Mission-room, we see a number of poor men simply sitting there. They are mostly from the country, have come to London hoping to get work, and are in danger of starving. Here, however, they come; by the time that the dinner-hour arrives the cases are severally investigated, and, where necessary, food is provided. Gospel services are held twice a week at noon. This room is also known as a "Rest," and if it were only a means of providing these poor destitutes with a place to sit down in, it would be a great boon, for it keeps them out of a worse place.

The Lord's Day is the great day of the feast. Early in the morning, or else on the previous evening, the members of the Association go forth in search of the poor and the needy, offering tickets of invitation to the free breakfast. This is a great success. The breakfast and service that follows occupy about one hour and a half, and present an opportunity every Sunday morning for meeting the needs both of body and soul. Glad to meet with loving hearts, these poor tramps and casuals (many of whom have spent the night on London Bridge) unburden their minds to the missionary and his helpers, who have the joy of giving permanent help to some, of finding honest employment for others, and of seeing not a few turn to God. Then comes the afternoon school for children, and the Gospel service again in the evening, when the great salvation is proclaimed, and testimonies borne by the Christian band.

Conspicuous among the branches of this Mission are the two coffee stalls which stand at the two extreme ends of the district. In the absence of a restaurant this forms a kind of outdoor relief. Those who appeal for help are furnished with a free ticket, which sends them to one of the stalls for two pennyworth of coffee or soup and bread. During the past year 2300 tickets have been distributed. Friends of the Mission purchase the tickets and distribute them among the destitute. All may help the poor in this way who are so disposed. Not the least interesting part of the "stall" departments are the managers themselves, both of whom are converts, the fruit of the Mission. One of these was originally met with by Mr. Vicary in a half-starved condition, in the act of picking up some orange peel wherewith to stay the pangs of hunger. He was taken to the coffee-stall, then to the mission-room, where he unfolded his past history and confessed that drink had been the main cause of his ruin. After prayer and Bible-reading, with conversation, he was led to trust in Jesus, and soon became an earnest and useful Christian.

The Temperance section finds plenty to do. The members of the Blue Ribbon Army are all alive and active. Two or three teetotal meetings are held every week, and the number of abstainers is continually increasing. A women's prayer-meeting, held weekly, is a further means of drawing down blessings on the various departments, and serves as a bond of Christian unity among the female workers.

It may be well to note that the expenses of the Mission are by no means heavy, the total of last year being only £100. Of this sum, however, only a part has been contributed, so that at the present time about £40 are due to the treasurer. A report of last year's work appeared in the December number of the City Mission Magazine, and several remarkable instances of Divine blessing are there recorded, for which we have not space in our own columns.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

ON Monday, February 9, a lecture was given by Mr. James B. Wookey, of the Gospel Purity Association, to a meeting of men assembled in St. Michael's Hall, Radford, Nottingham. Rev. C. Lea Wilson, the vicar, was in the chair. Mr. Wookey fascinated his audience as he brought home to them the responsibility laid upon all men to protect every woman as they would protect a daughter or a sister, and the miserable way in which that responsibility has been disregarded. Over fifty signed the Purity pledge at the close, and great interest was aroused. Mr. Wookey has promised to pay a second visit on March 8.

The Chairman, in a few opening remarks, dwelt upon the terrible fact that a great reformation was needed amongst men in high position in the town. He also spoke of the very low standard of morality which was to be found in the parish. He mentioned that on the previous Saturday afternoon he found a large concourse of people—chiefly women—going to his churchyard to witness the funeral of a young woman of twenty-one years of age borne to the grave, and immediately preceded by the body of her illegitimate child, nine months old. The mother, grieving over the loss of her character, had sickened and wasted away; the little child died within a day of its sorrowing parent. Such sights spoke with silent eloquence to the heart. A Purity Association is to be formed in the parish.

A large amount of interest in the Social Purity movement is being manifested in the Cathedral cities of Canterbury and Rochester. Last week Mr. Alfred S. Dyer addressed a successful public meeting at Canterbury, under the presdency of the Mayor, supported by the Dean, Canons Rawlinson and Holland, and others of the clergy and ministers of the city. A few days previously Mr. Dyer addressed a large meeting at Rochester, under the chairmanship of Canon Jelf.

On Friday evening a crowded meeting, composed of men only, met in St. Paul's Church Schoolroom, Haggerston, to listen to an address from Miss Ellice Hopkins. Rev. R. W. Wilson, of Stepney, occupied the chair, and in a few suitable words introduced Miss Hopkins to the meeting. It would be quite impossible to give any accurate description of Miss Hopkins' address. For an hour she kept the audience spell-bound while she pleaded with the strong to protect the weak. Her address was deeply sympathetic, and more than once we noticed that nearly every eye in the meeting was bedimmed with tears. At the close of her powerful appeal, which was deeply spiritual, she was loudly applauded. The Chairman afterwards called upon Mr. J. B. Wookey to read the obligations of the White Cross Guild; in doing so Mr. Wookey urged them especially to be faithful to the second obligation, which was: "I promise by the help of God to endeavour to put down all indecent language and coarse jests."

AMONG THE AMERICAN INDIANS.

DEAR SIR,—The last few numbers of THE CHRISTIAN have been for special reasons very interesting to me. The accounts of the Gospel services conducted by Mr. E. Payson Hammond, now labouring on your shores, have very vividly brought to my mind the fact that some nine or ten years ago he was the one, under God, who thrust me out into the evangelistic field, in which I have continued, by the mercy of God, almost uninterruptedly ever since. God bless him, and may his sojourn on British soil be made a blessing to thousands of souls, as I have no doubt it will.

For over two months I have been assisting Mr. W. P. Haworth, pastor of the Indian Presbyterian Church of Vinita, in the conduct of one of the most intensely interesting works of grace it has ever been my lot to witness. Vinita is the leading town or city of the Cherokee nation. It is a railroad centre of no mean importance, destined at no great distance of time to become a large and flourishing place. Like all new Western towns, this has been the theatre of tragedy and bloodshed in its earlier days, and was considered one of the wickedest places in this far-away territory. But God has come to the rescue, and what was once considered the hiding-place of black-legs and gamblers, and the haunt of murderers, is now one of the most law-abiding communities to be found anywhere in the West. All this has been wrought by the sovereign grace and power of God, through the preaching of the blessed Word. Eternal praises to the Triune God.

Among the many converts are numbered Cherokees, Shawnees, whites, and blacks. Gamblers, abandoned women, desperadoes, and all sorts have been reached and won to the Saviour. On New Year's night the Mayor of our little city was converted, and is now one of our most faithful workers. One of the most pleasing features of it all is the eager desire of the saved ones for more of the Word. Oh, how the hearts of many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN would be thrilled if they could but witness what I nightly see and hear. Such glowing, loving testimonies, falling now from the lips of a full-blood Cherokee or Shawnee Indian, and then in the confession of the Saviour by some redeemed white brother.

There are about 75,000 Indians in the territory, and the vast majority are without the Gospel. Were it not for the parsimony of rich professing Christians of our country they might be reached and won to the Saviour. I know of tribes that might be evangelised, who are entirely destitute of the Gospel. They are begging for ministers of the Word. My cry is, "God send help, ere they perish." How I wish the Lord might touch the hearts of some of the readers of your paper, to send me tracts and little Gospel books to scatter among this people. It would be a big investment for eternity. I could use a couple of hundredweight of such material. Pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom in the Indian territory.

Yours in the Lord Jesus,
J. E. WOLFE (Evangelist).

WALDENSIAN CHURCH MISSIONS.—The report of this Mission, issued by the Central Committee for England, mentions a large increase in the number of communicants. The contributions of the members have more than doubled in the last decade, and nearly one-half of the children in the Sabbath schools are from the families of Roman Catholics. The most memorable event of the year, however, is the initiation of measures for bringing about a federation of the various societies and churches engaged in Italian evangelisation, and for effecting a union between Waldensian Mission Churches and those of the Free Church of Italy. From most of the stations interesting extracts appear with the report, telling of the progress and depth of the work both among adults and children. The secretary is Major M. Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

HOUSE OF REST, WINCHESTER.

I WAS invited recently to be present at the dedication of a house in Canon-street, Winchester, to be used as a Faith Hospital in connection with rescue work. More than a year ago Mrs. Butler was feeling deeply the reproach levelled at her and her fellow-workers by the supporters of the Contagious Diseases Acts, that she was indifferent to the physical condition of these poor women, who ought to be under medical care and supervision, and she cried to the Lord to show her some way of helping these most despised and helpless of his blood-bought creatures. He brought to her knowledge that Miss Judd in Buffalo-street, and Dr. Cullis in Boston, had proclaimed the Gospel of healing through faith in Jesus to this class with blessed results.

This encouraged her faith to expect similar blessing in England, and step by step, she was guided to take a little house for the reception of a few poor creatures who wanted to escape from their shameful life, but were too diseased to be admitted or to remain in any ordinary Refuge. God showed her that she could trust Him to be the Physician of their ruined bodies, as well as of their lost souls; and He provided her with a certificated nurse, herself healed of the Lord, as matron.

In April, 1884, this little work was begun; Mrs. Butler refused no case, however hopeless, that was sent her, and trusted the Lord to send the funds to maintain the work. And gloriously has He responded to her confidence in Him, in respect to blessing granted both to the bodies and souls of those who have passed through the house in various stages and forms of disease. Only two have left it unhealed. Now a larger house has been taken in Canon-street, and was dedicated on January 30 of this year.

It was a most touching sight to see these faces, some so bright and glad, others still bearing deep traces of their past life, and to know how the Lord's hand had been at work amongst them. One rosy girl, who looked the picture of health, had come to the house three weeks before, far gone in consumption, the consequence of vice. She was too weak to rise; her cough was distracting; there was much hæmorrhage from the lungs and severe pain. After she had been two or three days there, making no progress, the matron said to a friend, "Poor D—— is very bad; we shall have to take healing for her, as she cannot take it for herself." So they knelt by her bed, and committed her to the Lord, and claimed and accepted healing for her. The next morning she came down to breakfast free from pain, and said she was healed, and now she is doing housemaid's work with ease. Nor is the healing only in her body, for her soul is saved.

Another, who had been many years in sin, was rescued through the Salvation Army, and went to Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Refuge in Whitechapel. Her friends made some efforts to draw her back to her old life, but God used the love and patience of Mrs. Booth and her helpers to confirm his work in her soul, and she remained firm after a time of great wavering. But she was very ill, and went to hospital for a time. Finally she came to Winchester, seeking the "house of faith healing," and found a "House of Rest" indeed.

Another bright-faced, neatly-dressed, respectable-looking girl attracted me, and I found she had passed through the Home, and is now in a situation in Winchester, and doing well in it.

Another came with twelve years' bad character, and subject to epileptic fits. She also is healed, and is working for her living in the town, attending the meetings still, as others do who have gone to situations near. I had heard of E—— some months previously as being a peculiarly repulsive object, covered with disease, weak and suffering, and inquired after her. Praise the Lord, she was converted to God, and then believed He could heal her. She was prayed with, and put into his hands for healing. Soon afterwards her skin became as pure and white as a child's, and she is now in a Home doing well.

What most struck me in hearing these and similar details of the last year's history was this: the wonderful tenderness and pitifulness of our Father over these, the most outcast, degraded of human beings, whom most people will hardly suffer to come near them. Yes: He seems to be brooding over them, ready to bestow on them a wonderful healing at the faintest cry; the uplifting of their little finger, so to speak, seems to draw down such a large blessing, and that just of the kind that they can comprehend—relief for the suffering body; drawing them on to ask and receive blessing for their souls.

The larger number of these healed ones seem to have been truly saved from their sins, though there are some cases who have gone away still hardened in heart, and have returned, at least in some degree, to their former life. Yet we need not despair of them. Something has passed between them and the Lord—they have received a touch from Him which they, and still more surely which He, will never forget. He has, as it were, branded them as his property, by healing them; and the lost one will most surely be the found one.

God grant that many may be led to open similar Houses in every garrison town in England.

SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

AMONG the various agencies having for their object the reaching of the masses, none have been more popular, and few more successful, than "The Special Religious Services for the People," in theatres, halls, and Mission-rooms. The Report just issued shows that the success of the past year has not been a whit behind its predecessors either in the interest shown, the amount of work done, the aid provided, or the permanent spiritual results achieved. The Committee announce that the past series of services (the twenty-fifth), have been attended by nearly 350,000. The expenses for the year amounted to £3000, the greater half of which was required for the hire of the several theatres and halls; a number of grants of money were made to various Mission-rooms where the Gospel is preached and the objects comtemplated by the agency are met.

In appealing for continued aid, the Committee are supported by a number of testimonies bearing upon the extreme value of the work. Foremost among these is that which is borne by the report of the Evangelisation Committee, presented to the London Diocesan Conference during its second sitting in March last. That report says: "Thousands of our fellow-men and women have reached a depth of heathenism and misery almost beyond belief. Churches are near them, but they are not entered, and the means of grace provided are not sought after or accepted. "In a group of seven poor East-end parishes, containing 60,000 souls, the average attendance in all the places of worship is only 3000. Out of 3000 persons living in consecutive houses in the neighbourhood of Bow-common, less than a hundred adults and fifty children ever attend any place of worship. Out of another group of 4000 persons living in another part of East London, only forty go to a place of worship."

In the same report there is a statement by the Bishop of Bedford, who says: "I confess that in many instances I have felt our Church services are unsuited to the mass of the people living around our churches. For such classes we ought to aim at the simplest forms we can."

Such is the testimony borne to the need for such an agency as the special services in theatres and halls provides. The Report before us is full of absorbing interest in the details given by those who have conducted the services. Numerous cases of conversion are recorded, in some instances including whole families. The headquarters of the Committee are 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.; and the Secretary is Mr. C. M. Sawell.

DOCK LABOURERS.—Will your readers kindly send me some tracts for the poor dock labourers? They have now many solitary hours upon their hands, and will be often glad to read a tract or book.

HOMES OF HOPE.

A NUMBER of the friends and helpers of these Homes in Regent-square, assembled on Monday evening, February 9, for a devotional service; a pleasant hour was spent in prayer and praise. The Secretary, Mr. Hornibrook, suggested as one reason for thanksgiving, the fact that some who were once in the Homes were now engaged in the work of rescuing others. He asked the friends also to remember in their prayers the increasing need of funds.

Some brief but excellent addresses were delivered. Rev. R. H. Bradley, rector of the parish, said he really knew not how they were to cope with the abounding sin which continued to be rampant, notwithstanding all the remedial measures adopted. The missioner who accompanied him said there were persons living in the country who dreaded coming to London, because of the depression which the sight of so much glaring vice caused them to feel. The sins of the flesh were in a special manner sins against the Holy Ghost, for the sanctified body is his temple.

The presence of the girls themselves, each having a sad history, served to evoke sympathy, and to add fervour to the intercessions offered. As ever and anon the cry of the innocent, helpless babe was heard, it was impossible to forget the sorrow, and shame, and ruin, which these infant voices represented. It was very interesting and encouraging to learn from the matron that no difficulty is experienced in finding situations for the inmates, while the mistresses who have had them are prepared to speak highly in their favour.

GOSPEL WORK IN PLYMOUTH.

A FEW months since, in answer to the question, Does it last? an account was given in The Christian of the blessed work which has continued in this hall, from the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in October, 1882. A most successful fortnight's Mission, which has been held in Plymouth, conducted by Mr. George Clarke, has just terminated. Mr. Clarke's experience in connection with the Railway Mission in London stood him in good service in giving him a very hearty welcome amongst the railway employés. From the first Sunday great blessing was manifested. Out of the vast congregations that packed the hall, a large number, on being appealed to, rose for prayer; many of those who were dealt with in the inquiry-room seemed to be truly converted to God. The same blessed power was given at all the meetings, and the interest increased from day to day. The noon Bible-readings have been most profitable.

One of the interesting features of the Mission has been the way in which those who have been brought into the light have come again, bringing others with them, and sought, either personally or through the workers, to show them the way of salvation; several female assistants from one house of business were thus brought to the Lord.

Miss Burford, from London, by the singing of the Gospel has been much blessed; her rich voice told out with deep tenderness the sweet words of truth in the songs of the Christian Choir, bringing tears to the eyes, and, we trust, repentance to the heart of many a son of toil.

QUARRYMEN.—Mr. Edward J. Hill, of Aberfoyle, Stirling, N.B., wishes to thank our readers for the liberal provision of periodicals sent in answer to his appeal. He now has an abundant supply of back numbers of The Christian; but from time to time such periodicals as the British Workman, Sunday at Home, Quiver, or Home Friend, would be gratefully received.

A BLOW AT KING ALCOHOL.—On a recent evening at the lecture hall of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., Rev. J. Ossian Davies gave a very rousing deliverance on the drink question, in connection with the City of London Abstainers' Union. His blows at King Alcohol were many and severe; the only drawback, we fear, was the absence of the representatives of that social demon. The lecture was received with such rapturous assent on the part of the large audience that it seemed as if Mr. Davies was only slaying the slain. There may have been some waverers who were brought to take a decided stand. The eloquent treatment of the subject in its physical, social, and moral aspects left nothing to be desired.

THE COLONIES AND OUR WAIFS.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.Ed.

SINCE my return from Canada last fall, the preparations for continuing our work of emigration to the Dominion have been going on quietly but steadily. An experienced staff of fellow-workers (five in number), resident at Peterboro', Ontario, our chief centre, have been taking all needful measures to provide good homes for many of the little rescued ones now in training here. The demands for our children continue, and every day brings fresh applications from well-to-do farmers and others for English boys and girls, who must of course be healthy, without physical taint or vice, of industrious habits, and amenable to control.

From the very large number now in training in our "Homes" it is not a very difficult matter to select those whose conditions answer to the above requirements. The advantages of thus annually depleting our English "Homes" have been often stated, but may be briefly summarised here:—

(1) Really good homes, with pure, healthy surroundings, are at once obtained, at the smallest possible cost, for children much too young for employment in England.

(2) The vacancies created by their departure are thus available for the rescue and training of an equal number of other poor children, now dragging out miserable existences in squalor, ignorance, and perhaps in vicious surroundings.

(3) By so much are our own thickly populated islands and overcrowded cities freed from the incubus of young lives which taken at the very best, must, if permitted to continue here, make the struggle for existence among the labouring classes more difficult; while Canada, possessing abundant room, and each year producing more and more of the commodities essential to life, needs more than anything else just such a population as our carefully trained and carefully selected children supply.

Much more might be said as to the numberless advantages to be conferred on all by a wise and carefully carried out scheme for emigrating orphan and destitute boys and girls; but I shall, I think, be pardoned if at present I confess I am chiefly concerned by the immense, the almost incalculable advantages conferred upon the children themselves. Pure, healthy surroundings, where vice, drunkenness, and harsh treatment are unknown. Homes, too, where family life and religious life are a blessed reality, situated in a fair garden-like country, yielding abundantly "seed to the sower, and bread to the eater!" The change to all this from the narrow courts, pestiferous alleys, and vice-breeding dens of the metropolis seems almost too good to be true. But, thank God, IT IS ALL TRUE! I have seen it myself. I have visited these Canadian homesteads, lodged with the frugal, industrious, God-fearing people who own them, and had my heart fairly melted as I witnessed day after day the blessed transformation going on in the bodies and minds of dear young boys and girls who a comparatively short time before my own hands had gathered out of positions of imminent peril, or of the greatest suffering and want.

The cost to us of the material agency in this work of transfiguration is so small as to be of itself a stimulus in its accomplishment. By the exercise of the most rigorous economy, I have reduced the total expense for outfit, railway and ocean passage, to £8 10s. per boy or girl, and I have now almost completed arrangements for the emigration to Canada alone this year of 420 children, as follows:—Our first party, to consist of 150 boys, will (D.V.) leave on March 26; 70 girls will follow in April, 100 boys in June, and our fourth party of 100 girls will probably leave in July.

But small as the before-named cost per child is, the aggregate expenditure will necessarily be very large; and unless the Lord, whom we serve in the persons of these little ones, graciously inclines the hearts of his servants to aid us, we may find ourselves at the very last stopped by the very prosaic difficulty, "Want of funds!" I cannot think this will be so, for never was a work more needed, or more hopeful in its almost national bearings, than this, and I know of none at present that is more suggestive of blessing to the children. Certainly in no other way can a destitute child be saved at so small a cost, and with so sure a prospect of immediate temporal and spiritual good!

Many of the boys and girls to be sent out this year are, I believe, true, earnest young servants of the Lord Jesus, and will, I have no doubt, continue as his witnesses in the land of their adoption. I entreat the daily prayers of all readers of THE CHRISTIAN, that every young emigrant may know of a truth the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I have purposely said nothing here of my scheme for young men of the destitute class in connection with the Industrial Farm of 5000 acres to be formed in the far North-West, as I am hoping, a little later on, to have an opportunity of setting this forth in detail before my kind co-workers in sympathy and prayer who read these pages. Nor must I take up space now to relate my plans for the emigration of yet other lads and lassies to Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa; but I may at least intimate that I have on hand now a hopeful scheme for the establishment in South Australia of a Branch whereby many young folks, quite unsuitable for life in Canada, will, I believe, find an industrious and independent career opened up to them. I am hoping, if God spares my life, to visit Australia soon with a view to the organisation of the good work.

All communications on these subjects should be addressed to me at

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

A LARGE and interesting Conference of the friends and workers of this Mission took place recently at the Institution, opposite the London Docks. Captain Dalrymple presided, and the workers were addressed by Mr. James Townley. From brief reports given by Rev. G. J. Hill, and about twenty of the workers, it appeared that at no period of the Society's history had there been so large a work, or so much blessing as during the past quarter.

The work at the various sea-coast stations is prospering; the shipboard services have resulted in the conversion of many seamen. At the Seamen's Chapel, in Ratcliff Highway, the meetings take place every night, and scarcely a meeting has been held without some seamen either signing the pledge or giving their hearts to God. The temporal wants of distressed seamen have also been attended to, and in addition to pecuniary help, nearly 2000 free meals and over 200 beds have been supplied. It was also mentioned that one who had been converted in this chapel many years ago, would be leaving Liverpool next morning to join Bishop Taylor, as a missionary to Central Africa. During the evening a number of English and foreign seamen, briefly testified to the benefits they had received from the Society's labours, both on shore and afloat.

It is proposed to extend the work for the next quarter, and it is hoped that the friends of "our sailors" will supply the needed help.

THE GOSPEL ALL NIGHT.—In the Rose and Crown Coffee Palace, Knightsbridge, there was lately held one of Mr. Pye's anniversary meetings in connection with his Mission to the poor destitute and fallen to be met with on the streets of London at night. The speakers dwelt with singular unanimity on the theme of female poverty, and the sadly inadequate earnings of the industrious poor women at the East-end; upon the temptations to sin arising from their sunless, toilsome lives; and upon the solemn and fearful responsibility resting upon those to whom God has given power, influence, or wealth. It was urged that the little work of Mr. Pye deserved to be better known, and that it is capable of being greatly developed on its present lines. Testimony as to its blessed results was given by friends who are acquainted with Mr. Pye's efforts. The reports of the Mission may he had from him at 324, Fulham-road, S.W.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND IN DUBLIN.

THIS evangelist has now been a week with us in the Metropolitan Hall conducting three meetings a day—the noon meeting for prayer, praise, and Bible-reading; the children's service at 4.30; and the evangelistic meeting for young and old at 7.30.

The Mission began by Mr. Hammond meeting the Committee of the Dublin United Services, the members of the choir, the stewards, and the workers on Saturday evening, at a preparatory conference and prayer-meeting. Here we were encouraged to wait, and expect the promise of the Father and power from on high to carry on the great work before us. Rev. Dryden Smylie led in earnest prayer for the gift of the Holy Spirit to make each worker a fitting instrument in the hand of the Lord for the salvation of souls. Mr. John R. Fowler, who presided, welcomed Mr. Hammond once more to Dublin on behalf of the Committee, and Mr. Hammond, as a skilful general, explained the method of attack which he purposed to lead against the ranks of the enemy.

On Sunday there was a very large meeting at 4 o'clock, and again at 8.30, many of the ministers of neighbouring churches having kindly consented to close their services somewhat earlier than usual, and bring their congregations to the Hall.

The noon meetings during the week have not been very different from our usual noonday gatherings, except for increased numbers and interest, and the more lively and newer melodies of the Gems of Praise. Mr. Hammond has at these meetings impressed strongly upon Christians the need there is of having more faith in the conversion of children, and in God's power and grace to keep them from falling.

The afternoon meetings have been attended by hundreds of children from the schools in the City, especially the schools of the Irish Church Missions, where the children are so well grounded in Scripture knowledge. A fine body of sailor boys from the Marine School have been constant attendants, a large proportion of them professing to be Christian boys. Mr. Hammond frequently dwelt on the sufferings of Christ, to move these young hearts to respond to the great love wherewith He loved us. Many were the telling anecdotes he gave to illustrate the great sacrifice. Then he led them to join with him in prayer, repeating after him a short confession of sin and of trust in the Saviour of sinners.

The greater gatherings, however, have been in the evenings, and the after-meetings give clear evidence that God has been blessing the Word preached in awakening and converting the adults as well as the children.

Perhaps in next week's issue we may be able to give some instances of the mighty power of the grace of God.

Mr. Hammond is supported by the Dublin Evangelistic Choir, under the leadership of Mr. Roxburgh, and he has quite an array of musical instruments on the platform to give greater volume and effect to the attractive melodies of the Gems of Praise. We will ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray for the Mission in Dublin, that there may be great joy in that city through the preaching of Mr. Hammond. J. R. F.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.—The seventh annual report says the past year has been the best of any. Miss Perks thanks God for perfect restoration to health, after long prostration and weakness. During part of the year good service was done by the Gospel tent, meetings being constantly held, and many souls won thereby to the Saviour. "Some of these saved ones," says the report, "are now helping all they can in testifying to others." At Eastleigh a new hall has been built, and much blessing is continually experienced in the services. The entire Mission, in its aggressive Gospel work, embraces many country places, and brings under the sound of the Word upwards of 2000 persons weekly. Any friends wishing to have fellowship in this good work for the Master may apply to Miss Perks, the Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

THE STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.

We are glad to present our readers with an engraving of the new Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. premises lately opened at West Ham-lane, Stratford. As reported at the time, this building is the direct outcome of the special Mission held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the early part of last year. Some additional particulars as to the building itself, and the varied work of which it is the centre, will be of interest to our readers.

Architect and builder have combined to produce a very commodious, substantial, and attractive structure—an ornament to the neighbourhood, as well as admirably adapted for the purposes in view. The lower floor is devoted mainly to the work of the Y.M.C.A., of which Mr. E. Fox Butlin is the active and earnest Secretary. This young Association has already some 230 members and associates; now that the accommodation is so ample it is expected that there will be a rapid development of the work. There is a large and comfortably appointed reading-room, well supplied with current literature, games, &c.; a library is in course of formation, and gifts of suitable books will, we judge, be most welcome. A room has been set apart for a parlour, which, for the present, awaits its furniture. The educational facilities of the branch are not as yet developed, but next autumn these will doubtless be in full swing. Meantime there are Bible classes, evangelistic meetings, French and singing classes, and other engagements filling up every day of the week; so that young men joining themselves to the Association will be able not only to get good, but to give it out again to others. The advantages of the reading-room will, we understand, be made available, at a small charge, to a limited number of gentlemen not actually enrolled on the books of the Association.

F. BOREHAM A.R.I.B.A. ARCHT. LONDON

CONFERENCE · HALL · & · YOUNG · MEN'S · CHRISTIAN · ASSOCIATION · STRATFORD · LONDON

One of the most important handmaids of the work is the Evangelistic Choir, under the leadership of Mr. J. W. Godfrey. It is the permanent outcome of the choir which worked with Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It has been doing a good and vigorous work through the winter in Stratford and the neighbourhood singing and preaching the Gospel.

Among other agencies that now find a home at the Hall is the Mizpah Band. This was formed, as our readers may recollect, towards the end of the Mission under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and was greatly aided in its inception by the earnest testimony and effort of Mr. Robt. Simpson, of Glasgow, who indeed may be called the father of all the London Mizpah bands. It is an association of those who have been redeemed by God's grace from the bondage of strong drink, and who are thus united for the purposes of mutual help and aggressive effort on behalf of others. Since its formation the Stratford Band has done noble service in the cause of Gospel temperance, not only in Stratford but further afield; for instance, they have held several very successful meetings at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry among the lodging-house pariahs of Spitalfields. The Male Choir, under the efficient leadership of Mr. Thomas, powerfully sings out the Gospel, and altogether the Band is a splendid instrument for the evangelisation of the lapsed masses of the people. Mr. C. Boardman is president, and Mr. Attwater is hon. secretary.

The United Weekly Prayer-meeting, Great Eastern Railway Prayer Union, Metropolitan Police Christian Association (Eastern Division), and other local Christian agencies, also find a home on the premises.

The upper part of the new building is entirely occupied with the large hall, in which evangelistic and other services will regularly be held. It seats 1900, and has a very comfortable auditorium as well as a large choir platform. The Lord has set his seal on the Gospel meetings already held, and there is every assurance that, in the good providence of God, the Hall will in days to come be the spiritual birthplace of many, and the feeder of all the evangelical churches in the district. The work being a united and strictly unsectarian one, there will of course be no provision for the supply of Church "ordinances." The converts will be advised to join themselves to some organised Christian body, according to individual conviction and preference, and the interests of all the churches will be served, as far as may be conducive to the well-being of those who are brought under the saving influence of the Gospel.

It only remains for us to add a few sentences as to the financial position of the Hall and Y.M.C.A. The total cost of building is £6250, and the estimated cost of furniture still to be provided £750—in all £7000. Of this amount about £1500 has yet to be subscribed; and it is earnestly hoped by the Council that by the help of the friends of evangelistic work among the masses this deficit will soon be wiped out, and their unhindered energies given to the active prosecution of the work. Subscriptions may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. C. Boardman, Magnolia House, The Green, Stratford, E., or to this office.

Notes and Comments.

We give on page 12 an engraving of the New Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. at Stratford, with some particulars of the building, and the uses to which it is being put. As we took occasion to remark, when recently reporting the opening services, this Hall is the finest and most imposing memorial of the last London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. The friends at Stratford are very earnest in their deep desire to make the most of this new instrument put into their hands. In order to do so, it is necessary that the small balance of debt should be removed. A thank-offering towards this from the thousands who received blessing through the evangelists could not be better bestowed.

All the districts visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey have not been so fortunate as Stratford. Our earnest young friend, Mr. W. A. Boyd, of Westfield, Limerick, writes to say that the need of some neutral ground in that southern Irish city, for carrying on Gospel work, is very pressing indeed. He has received some help towards providing this, in answer to a late appeal, but more extended efforts will have to be made before any Conference Hall for Limerick can be reared. The friends of evangelical work in the south of Ireland have many difficulties to contend with, and they need the practical sympathy of those more happily situated.

The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette, in a leader on educated candidates for the ministry, observes:—"It seems to us that the science of geology has rectified our ideas in regard to prophetical time. Geology has enlarged our ideas of time, just as astronomy did of space." This reflection may be well borne in mind by those who are waiting for the coming of the great day of the Lord. Nature is a book of God, and we should let it teach us what "time" is to Him.

The same article observes, on the subject of "Conditional Immortality," that it is less terrible than the Calvinistic idea of hell, but that it is incredible that the Almighty will torment souls for penal purposes, and then annihilate them. Does not, however, this new phrase "Conditional Immortality," which has not a shadow of warrant in Scripture, suggest what is more terrible than the old idea? This did at least lead men to warn, but to offer no explanation; but the new doctrine seems to offer a view of God which is inexpressibly painful and even degrading. Would that preachers would go no further than Scripture plainly teaches. There are thousands of impenitent persons among us who, through controversy on this subject, are held fast in utter indifferentism.

A writer on the staff of The Rock lately spent a Sunday evening among the Secularists at the "Hall of Science," and gives an account of his experiences in a recent issue of that journal. Speaking of the composition of the audience, which appeared to be divided into first, second, and third class, according to social position, the writer remarks:—

> "The majority were labouring men, who looked as if unbelief had heralded little gladness for them, at least. It was sadly depressing to glance round the front row of faces lining the balcony, and notice the haggard, hopeless, and joyless cast of countenance. Probably they had not experienced more of life's toils and troubles than falls to most men's share—but then—and it is a significant distinction—they had no hope beyond."

After publicly naming a baby, and hoping it would be "kept free from priestly influence," Mrs. Besant gave a lecture on "The Natural History of the Devil." This, according to the reporter, was little more than a rehash of Persian myths and Hindoo legends. Speaking of the lecture, the writer says:—

> "I may not fail to note that 'the offence of the Cross' has not ceased; the slightest allusion to the atoning work of Calvary was received with noisy derision, and any sneer thereat with ringing acclaim."

All this would be very saddening and very ominous if we believed that such doctrines were widely received by the industrial masses. We are somewhat reassured, however, by the same writer, who repeats a conversation between two rough working men as the meeting dispersed: "Tell ye what, Dick, they don't expect them that come here are a goin' ever to read the Bible, and they says what suits them." "That's about it; I'll stick to the old Book yet." "Same here; anyhow, till some 'un finds summat better, and they don't seem nigh that by a long chalk yet."

We learn with much satisfaction that considerable success is attending the efforts which the friends at Mildmay are putting forth to cope with open and avowed infidelity. At the Secular Hall in Ball's Pond-road, which has been secured for the Lord's Day mornings during this month, lectures are being delivered on Christian evidences. Similar lectures are being given in one of the rooms of the Conference Hall. Unbelievers are invited to attend these lectures, and questions are permitted at the close. Hitherto these special efforts have been signally owned in meeting the objections of sceptics and in confirming the faith of believers. Our good friend Mrs. Ashworth sends us particulars for which we regret we have not space.

An able writer in The Guardian says he has lived for forty-five years, and has never heard a word from any church pulpit, nor any witness or protest in relation to the present awful national danger from immorality, and the want of chivalry in men. An unbroken silence on this subject must sooner or later lead to the reflection,—"We are verily guilty concerning our brother."

All who are able to take part, by petitioning or otherwise, in the work of securing better legal protection for minor English girls, should place themselves in communication with the Hon. Sec. of the Minors' Protection Joint Committee, 30, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

The Bishop of Bedford has written to the public journals calling attention to the great need there is for larger support to be given to efforts made to rescue the fallen. "Trying and difficult work" it surely is, and it is a cause for much thankfulness that "many devoted ladies are ready to help" in such a mission, but all the more regretable that for lack of money their labours should be retarded, and work promising successful results necessarily left undone.

On Thursday next, 26th inst., Dr. Parker will preach at the City Temple at noon, on behalf of the Stockwell Orphanage. A number of the orphans will be present, and will take part in the service. We hope there will be a large muster of sympathetic friends.

There is a sentence in a letter of Mr. Blackwood, the publisher, in a correspondence respecting one of George Eliot's novels, which might fittingly be adopted by present publishers of fiction: "I hate anything of a sneer at real religious feeling."

We learn from a recent report from Brooklyn, that Mr. Sankey took part in a meeting of the Sunday School Union of that city. Says the reporter: "The clarion-voiced Sankey sang several of his favourite hymns." He was joined by Mr. Stebbins in some of them. Dr. Pentecost's brother, Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost, expounded the Sabbath-school lesson.

From a copy of the Church Manual, issued in connection with the Heath-street Chapel, Hampstead, pastor Rev. W. Brock, we copy the following words found in the pastor's address:—

> "The great religious event of the year has been the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the spring. The Hall in Fleet-road became a sacred spot to not a few of us. The wave of blessing which passed over the neighbourhood we believe to have been deep and strong. Case after case has been mentioned in our own church meetings, in which those services were the means of awakening, consolation, or decision to serve God."

Such testimonies, now that our beloved brethren have left us, and after so long a time has passed since their Mission, are peculiarly gratifying and joyful, as evidencing the Divine power which attended their work.

A note of distress, of hard times, of want, is sounded through the old world and the new. In London there are forty thousand workmen out of employment, in Paris it is about the same, while in Spain there are trouble and destitution. In Montreal, Canada, there are over six thousand men out of work, and in America hunger and want are being painfully felt.

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." As the voice of distress is heard through the land, it were well that the voice of intercession on behalf of suffering thousands ascended to Him whose law is perfect. As we ask in our perplexity, "What can be done?" the oft-forgotten words are remembered, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee." And has not He commanded us to "unloose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free"?

Prayer is continually ascending from Christ's servants for the advance of his cause. Let us not fail to notice the answers. An American Review tells us in a letter from Berlin of the work of our good brother, M. Von Schlümbach in that city of Rationalism. He is active in Gospel labours; persons of rank and influence are joining him; the poor and the degraded are gathered by social efforts, and hear the saving message. Two Court preachers lately took part in one of these evangelistic meetings.

The same letter speaks of three ladies who are doing a stirring work among German workmen. One, a baroness, although a great invalid, drives out and interests herself to take the simple Gospel among the drosky-men. We need to encourage ourselves in the serious times we live in.

The new departure in aggressive Christian work inaugurated by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and his family and fellow-workers in Lime-street, Liverpool (referred to in our last issue), is very suggestive. An untenanted shop has been secured for a brief term in this crowded thoroughfare; ladies and gentlemen sing Gospel songs and solos, while the passers-by are invited in by word of mouth and by printed invitations to a short, bright Gospel meeting. At the close the anxious and inquirers are invited to another room, the congregation is dismissed, and a fresh gathering is secured. We most heartily commend this extension of the methods of the "Strangers' Rests" aggressive work amongst the general public, especially to the secretaries and workers of Young Men's Christian Associations in our large towns.

A correspondent informs us that the policemen in the London public parks are instructed, "under the revised regulations," to forbid and prevent the distribution of tracts and other religious literature. This strange decision becomes all the more inexplicable when we are told that the programmes of the Sunday instrumental bands are allowed to be sold during the performances. We can scarcely credit the statement that in free England, in a public park, a ban has been laid on the circulation of leaflets containing portions of Scripture. It would seem that the "regulations" need to be re-revised.

A Belfast correspondent writes:—There is a considerable stir in spiritual matters in the North of Ireland. Conferences to discuss Christian life and Christian work are numerous, and evangelistic meetings are being held all over the province. Wherever these meetings are held blessing seems to follow. Lately, I was in the immediate vicinity of where the '59 revival began, and numbers willingly remained to speak about the one thing needful. It is the same in many other districts. Brief Missions to the south have been lately arranged, and during the present month Mission preachers will preach in Tipperary, Limerick, Clonmel, Waterford, Wicklow, and Bray. The Presbytery of Belfast has arranged to hold a week of meetings simultaneously in its thirty churches in Belfast, beginning Sunday, March 15. This is the first time that united action has been proposed by any of the leading denominations here. We seek prayer for the divine blessing to rest on the coming campaign.

As to the Imprecatory Psalms, Dr. Watts somewhere makes a suggestion which I have found profitable for above forty years: "Apply them to Satan and our spiritual enemies."—Thomas Johnson.

Recent Parliamentary elections in Brazil show signs of an increasing movement in favour of abolishing slavery throughout that great empire.

We are on the eve of the Anniversary season. The Young Men's Christian Associations are leading the way. Mr. Atkinson, of the Islington and Highbury Branch, has fixed his annual meeting for Monday next, 23rd inst., when a strong array of speakers will appear on the platform of Myddelton Hall, Upper-street. On April 9 the Aldersgate-street Branch will have their yearly review in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, and a week later Exeter Hall will be the scene of a similar assembly in connection with the Association having its quarters there.

We are glad to report considerable progress in the newly-formed South Midland district of the Y.M.C.A. New branches have been recently inaugurated in Marlborough, Newbury, and Wallingford. Mr. Hind Smith, as representative of the National Council, attended the inaugural meetings. He has also visited and conferred with friends at Windsor, Basingstoke, Slough, Maidenhead, Aldershot, Wokingham, Guildford, Staines, Swindon, Hungerford, Abingdon, Reigate, Harmondsworth, &c., with a view to the formation of branch associations.

"If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves," says the Holy One. It has been added: "But we do not deceive anyone else." This, however, is only man's word, and is not always true. There are many who believe the assertion of those who publicly profess that they have no sin, but who, even if sincere, expose themselves to moral wreck from neglect of watchfulness. We have before us some terrible facts of unspeakable sorrow caused in families into which deceivers, or those who are self-deceived, have gained access on the credit of their professed sinlessness.

In his Sword and Trowel "Book Notices" Mr. Spurgeon sometimes displays less of the suaviter in modo than the fortiter in re. There are two striking specimens in the February issue. Referring to the change in the editorship of The Expositor, he says:—

> "Each man is bound to circulate the truth as far as he knows it, and he is equally bound not to spread what he believes to be error. In this case Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton followed their consciences, but offered Dr. Cox fair terms; and yet certain of the thin-skinned 'liberals' lift up against them the shriek of 'persecution.' We are not in the least surprised at this, for no true idea of mental liberty ever enters the brain of the advanced school. Superciliously they reckon that they do us honour by allowing us the privilege of being snubbed. Know ye not that the orthodox fools are bound to let their enlightened opponents say whatever they please, and to thank them and pay them for saying it? The orthodox have, in fact, no right but that of being exterminated. The men of advanced views have a right to take their pulpits, edit their periodicals, and in general play all the tricks they please; and if this be in the least objected to, the protester is a persecutor!"

In the review of an American theological work of the "advanced" school we also read as follows:—

> "We have too much already of this article home-grown, and there was no need to go to America for more of the rubbish. This volume will suit the modern school of doubt, for it is pretentious, and talks a good deal about faith, and yet has nothing in it, and, above all, nothing for faith to rest upon. Here are some 300 pages of sublime balderdash, and there was no earthly reason why the author should not have made them 3000. You have nothing to do but muddle your brain, and set your tongue going, and the result is unbounded nothing in big words."

In vigorously extending his work of child-emigration, most thoughtful people will consider Dr. Barnardo is exhibiting true wisdom. The statements contained in the article he contributes to our pages this week are amply corroborated by the testimony of others engaged in the same work; but that he should be able for so small a sum as £8 10s. to open up immediately a useful career to a child trained in his "Homes," is a fact which ought to stimulate hundreds of Christian people, all over the land, to come to his aid. As he himself says: "In no other way can a destitute child be saved at so small a cost and with so sure a prospect of immediate temporal and spiritaul food!"

Our earnest-minded and devoted friend, George Smith, of Coalville, continues to exemplify the text, "This one thing I do." He wrote lately to the Times, describing some fresh experiences among van and gipsy children:—

> "A few weeks since an old rickety van and tumbledown pony cart, full of rags and sticks, and poor, ragged, neglected children, drawn by a bony horse and a staggering pony, drove up to my door, with a train of attendants that would disgrace the Soudanese. The object of the big and little van dwellers was not to solicit alms, but to shake hands with me, and to ask me for some little picture-books, cards, and Testaments. These were handed to them, and they went on their way rejoicing. Connected with these two wretched moving abodes there were three men, two women, and twelve children, and nearly all these present-day English gipsy children were of school age, but not one could tell a letter. Two of the men and one woman could read a little.
> "It is hoped that the free education and welfare of 30,000 van and gipsy children will not be overlooked in the Parliamentary fights and commotion that are soon to take place. Our present day van and gipsy children stand in as much need of moral and social elevation as the children in Africa do, and should have an equal share of attention and help shown to them."

We heartily echo Mr. Smith's sentiments. We further hope that the movement to furnish him with some substantial token of public appreciation, so happily inaugurated by the Pall Mall Gazette, will not cease just yet. A good many of our readers have contributed, and we have received altogether £62 12s. 2d. We should like to see further additions to the fund before it closes.

Those who have not already seen and read Mrs. Spurgeon's "Book Fund" Report for the past year, have a rich feast in store. It is published by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, price 6d. We hope to refer to it in our next issue.

The Postmaster-General deserves the hearty thanks of all lovers of righteousness and morality for his recent action with respect to gambling and betting. He has dismissed a superior official who had encouraged these practices at his office, and during official hours. Several subordinates have been either dismissed or reduced in rank and pay. We hope the lesson will not be without effect; but while betting is freely permitted in higher circles of society, there is little consistency in attacking it in less formidable strongholds.

A writer in the daily Press has lately framed a heavy indictment against the gambling practices allowed on board certain steamers plying between England and America. The proprietors of these vessels will have to be on the alert in the suppression of this crying evil, if they would retain the respect of their Christian fellow-countrymen. As a contemporary remarks, we cannot with any good grace agitate against the abominations of Monte Carlo, while we permit similar evils to run riot within our own jurisdiction.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—At a well-attended meeting of workers on 6th inst. Mr. Denham Smith delivered an impressive and stimulating address on "The probable speedy coming of our Lord." The needs of the work carried on at the Rest have much increased of late, and the help of Christian friends is earnestly invited. Book-bags made of strong material, 14in. by 12in., to give to seamen leaving the port, filled with good reading, are in much request; no doubt some of our lady readers will hasten to supply this want. Address, Secretary Strangers' Rest, St. George's-street, E.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

ST. STEPHEN'S, WESTMINSTER.

BY request of the clergy, the Open-air Mission sent preachers to Christ Church, North Kensington, Christ Church, Somers Town, and St. Stephen's, Westminster, for open-air preaching during the Mission. My own share in this work was confined to the last-named parish.

The Mission preachers were Rev. Prebendary Grier and Rev. E. E. McCreery. As in other parishes, a multiplicity of services were arranged, and no class or age overlooked. No less than sixteen meetings were exclusively for soldiers. The preaching services in the church were very well attended, and the addresses of the preachers very impressive. Prebendary Grier, being an earnest Temperance worker, gave an address thereon on Friday evening. I noticed also that he wore the Blue Ribbon.

Among the outside helpers was the Dean of Windsor, who, at the 9 o'clock service on Thursday evening, gave an address in the church on Infidelity to an audience of 700 or 800 men. This was both a remarkable assemblage and the occasion of a remarkable address, and the outcome must be beneficial. Lady Elizabeth Biddulph (bedchamber woman to the Queen, and Order of Victoria and Albert), also gave two addresses to women, marked by much earnestness. Being a total abstainer, her ladyship took a number of pledges at the close of her first address.

Each evening there was an hour's work in the streets prior to the 8 o'clock church service. The two curates and assistant missioner took the lead in these perambulations, but in the middle of the week the mode of working made some of us hesitate as to its propriety. It was neither more nor less than a surpliced choir, headed by a banner, and accompanied by six lamp-bearers. In an experience of street preaching, extending over 28 years, I had never seen such a procession before. But though personally I should have preferred these twenty-eight choristers in their ordinary dress, I am bound to say that as far as my observation went, the impression produced on the people was good; and if by this means souls were brought under the sound of the Gospel, I will at least hold my peace till my judgment is more matured.

But the meetings which interested me above all others were those held in Artillery-row, near the Army and Navy Stores, during the dinner hour. It was a sight to see the tall figure of the vicar, Rev. William Macdonald Sinclair, standing day by day on the kerb-stone, joining heartily in the singing, and speaking to the people thoughtful, earnest, and loving words. These noon-tide crowds have left a lasting impression on my memory, and, I trust, were used of God to gather souls to the Saviour.

The freedom for personal dealing with souls by the helpers, which I noted in the November Mission, in the East-end, was wanting here. At the close of the service in church the missioner intimated his willingness to see enquirers, either then or next day, but the lay-helpers were not requested to do anything in this direction. This, I thought, was a matter for regret.

G. KIRKHAM.

ST. MATTHIAS, EARL'S-COURT.

The Mission preacher at this church was Rev. R. J. Ives, and his coadjutors, Rev. H. D. Romeston and Rev. J. Todd. The services have been well attended. The attendance of men at the daily communion was an especially hopeful sign. At one of the Children's services the missioner gave an instructive address on the cultivation of the garden of the soul, with its flowers to cherish, and its weeds to eradicate. On Thursday night the Church of England Working Men's Society supplemented the local branch, and a procession, accompanied by the Vicar and his coadjutor Mr. Stathers, started through the streets, during the course of which four addresses were given.

One rather striking feature to a thoughtful mind in this Mission was the waves of thought which, as it were, went over the congregation. A box for intercessions was placed at the north door, these intercessions (numbering over 200 cases) to be used at a daily service of prayer. A common impulse seems, in a great measure, to have guided the desires and petitions, one day for one thing, another for another. There is every reason to hope, from the number of cards given out, that the Mission will bear good fruit.

A MEMORABLE RECOGNITION SERVICE.

AT Trinity Hall, in the populous district of Battersea, a good evangelistic work has been carried on for the last seven years by a zealous, sturdy Scot, Mr. D. M. Cameron, in connection with Dr. McEwan's church in Clapham-road. After the Battersea Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in which Mr. Cameron took an active part, there was a considerable accession to the ranks of the faithful at Trinity Hall. Up to that time they had been sponsored by the Clapham-road Church, but as the numbers increased they concluded that they were strong enough to have some share in the management of their own affairs.

Accordingly, the congregation, exceeding 500, and equally divided between "members" and "adherents," made known their desire to be formed into a full-fledged Presbyterian Church, with Mr. Cameron as their pastor. He had not, it is true, passed through a full course at the Divinity Hall, or taken any theological degrees; but he had been the instrument in leading many of the people to a saving acquaintance with Jesus Christ, while others had been greatly edified and encouraged in the Christian life by his ministry. Who so well fitted, therefore, to become their regular pastor, counsellor and friend? Thus argued his attached flock, and good logic it was we should imagine. For some reason or other—we really know not what—this arrangement did not gain the approval of the Mission Board of the Clapham-road Church. Because Mr. Cameron did not frown upon the project, his official connection with the Board and with Trinity Hall was severed, as we understand, at less than a week's notice. Probably this was all in correct form according to orthodox Presbyterianism, and we do not call it into question. The five hundred, however, appeared to think that they ought to have some voice in the matter. So it came to pass that since Mr. Cameron had compulsorily seceded from Trinity Hall, they voluntarily seceded with him. They took Chatham Hall, adjoining the Battersea-park-road Station, for temporary use, called a meeting, and resolved formally that Mr. Cameron should become their pastor in the Lord.

The "recognition" service took place last Thursday evening, and a very remarkable and altogether delightful occasion it was. The hall was well packed from end to end with a congregation of working men and women that any man might be proud to have the privilege of ministering to in spiritual things. They seemed to us just the sort of people who would come out from week to week to get their souls fed and refreshed, not to satisfy the claims of custom, or to wipe out the worldliness of the bygone week by a sort of pleasant penance on the Lord's Day. There were plenty of mothers with young babies, many of whom seemed anxious to have a voice in the recognition of Mr. Cameron. In this respect and in some others, too, it was quite a Moody and Sankey meeting.

Mr. ROBERT PATON presided, and on the platform were a number of neighbouring ministers and others who came to accord their sympathy to the young church and its pastor, and to extend to them the right-hand of Christian fellowship. The speeches from first to last were in excellent tone and temper, and there seemed no disposition to refer in any disparaging or resentful way to the immediate past. The Chairman said he liked the word "recognition" that appeared on the bills of the meeting. All the colleges in the world could not constitute any man a minister of Jesus Christ. It was abundantly clear that God had already made Mr. Cameron a minister of his Gospel, and they were there to say Amen to the work of God.

Mr. WARD, one of the pillars of the little flock (and who was converted from a sceptical life through the labours of Mr. Cameron), as their mouthpiece, detailed the steps that they had taken in connection with the settlement. They would need a site, he said, on which to build a church, but that and everything else pertaining to the future they confidently left in God's hands. Mr. Ward concluded by stating that on behalf of himself and his household, he then and there recognised Mr. Cameron as his pastor. The Chairman requested all who had been connected with Trinity Hall and who now desired to join in the recognition of Mr. Cameron, to stand up. The audience rose en masse, and so the thing was formally ratified, in the presence of God and of one another.

We should like if we had space to repeat some of the warm and brotherly words of sympathy, of cheer, and of counsel, as well as hearty appreciation of Mr. Cameron's work and personal worth, that fell from the lips of the succeeding speakers. We must be content to mention their names — Rev. R. Bulmer, Mr. Jos. Smith, Mr. Townley, Dr. E. Cronin, Dr. Dunbar, Rev. Mr. Jarrat, Mr. Boyd (Presbyterian elder), Rev. E. Henderson, and Rev. T. Lardner. All of these heartily welcomed the new pastor, and spoke wise words to the people. We were peculiarly gratified when at a certain stage of the meeting Mr. Paton called for testimonies from the audience. One after another, and not confined to the sterner sex, stood and told in a few simple, sincere sentences how they had profited by the past ministrations of Mr. Cameron. Many of those who spoke dated their conversion to the late meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in the South and West of London.

Last of all, Mr. CAMERON spoke, but he did little more than acknowledge the heartiness with which he had been welcomed, and asked the prayers of his friends for future guidance. We feel sure that guidance will be given and that the events which have transpired, though to the eye of sense they seem strange and indefensible, will yet turn out to the furtherance of the Gospel in a locality where it is greatly needed.

In a brief paragraph last week an error occurred in Mr. Cameron's address, which is 2, Norfolk-villas, Albion-road, Clapham, S.W.

"OUR LITTLE LADS," 1884.—This volume contains the monthly Records of Christian work in connection with the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley. It is edited by Mr. A. O. Charles, and is obtainable at the office in Ludgate-circus, E.C. The doings of the boys in the entertainments they have given both in London and the provinces, and in Scotland too, are here narrated; indeed, general information concerning all that pertains to the good work represented by these well-known Homes is bound up in these interesting "Records," which will be read with pleasure and profit by all who have not seen the monthly parts.

"BRITISH-ISRAEL IDENTITY ASSOCIATION."—We are asked to state that this Association has just been established at 24, Newington (corner of Renshaw-street), Liverpool, having for its object the glory of God and of our Saviour Jesus Christ, the King of Israel, in the more careful study and teaching of the Holy Scriptures in connection with the discovery of the Ten-tribed House of Israel in the British people. To further this object a room for reading and study, conversation with inquirers, for Bible-class and lectures, was opened on Tuesday, January 27. The meeting was attended by a large number of ladies and gentlemen interested in the work. The president (Mr. C. W. Elam) delivered an address expressing his sympathy for the cause of "Identity" truth with much earnestness and deep Christian feeling. Other speakers followed, and the secretary explained the nature of the work intended to be carried on.

[It seems to us a great waste of time to pursue inquiries where proof is impossible; besides which we believe the mischief of these speculations to be very great, for in this age of the Gospel the one important question is not whether any one is an Israelite or a Gentile, but whether he belongs to Christ, apart from whom Israelites and Gentiles must alike perish.—ED.]

OUR BIBLE-CLASS SUPPER.

By J. W. C. FEGAN.

OUR Bible-class is held in my room here every evening. All the boys who attend profess to have embraced the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour. They come to the class for an hour or so out of their scanty play-time when the day's engagements are over. The room is packed with young Bible students. Besides the writer and two friends deeply interested in these "babes" in Christ, no adults are present. The subjects we take up are just those we know were made a blessing to ourselves after our conversion—the authority of the Scriptures, our obedience to the same, the personality and offices of the Holy Spirit, the confession of sins, the Lord Jesus as our High Priest and Advocate, the second advent, &c.

When we met a few weeks ago in a preliminary chat the writer mentioned that as all Sunday-schools, Gospel Missions, mothers' meetings, &c., were wont to have some treat—tea, supper, entertainment, or what not, in the year. it might be well for our Bible-class to have a little soirée, but on further consideration, so that no one might misconstrue this into a bribe to attend, we unanimously resolved to act upon Luke xiv. 12, 13: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper," &c. We resolved that our greatest pleasure would be to gather in the most ragged, uncared for, woe-begone gutter boys we could find on London streets, and give them a good hot supper, and afterwards let some of the older Christian boys tell them the story of redeeming mercy.

The appearance of the assembled company at the supper showed that the invitations had been given with admirable discernment. Our only difficulty was how to provide the menu. All of us had entered upon a month's experiment of "vegetarianism," as a scientific dietary without meat is inaptly styled. But on the morning of the important day news was brought that an immense pig had arrived from Devonshire. Such an enormous carcase! You will not wonder that some juvenile scientific dietists had their new-formed principles rudely shaken by memories of roast pork. At any rate here was the material for our guests in the evening, who had not yet been educated up to the point of appreciating our own simpler and cleaner ménage, but still indulged their grosser tastes.

When the company arrived, they were first shown to our bath-room, and invited to enjoy a fine warm bath in batches of twelve or fifteen. How they revelled in the water, how they were waited on when they came out by our Bible-class with heaps of towels, how difficult it was for some of them to hitch together their tattered rags afterwards, words fail to depict. After the bath they were allowed up to the gymnasium, and desported themselves on parallel and horizontal bars, trapeze, ladder, &c., till the signal was given for supper. Roast pork, baked potatoes, jam-tarts, figs and apples, were soon cleared away. Then several of the Christian boys spoke briefly, entreating their guests to come to Jesus.

One of our masters—himself rescued from the streets, through our Homes, when a mere boy—followed. How those rough, wild Ishmaels fairly gaped with rapt attention as he told them he had been just like them—perhaps worse off—never in bed a single night for six months at a stretch; how when he had got on well in the Home his heart was still hardened against God's love, and he used to think some Christian boys merely professed to serve God to "crawl round the masters;" how afterwards he himself was led to Christ, and found in Him a Saviour from sin's power, as well as sin's penalty, and how he longed for them to know joy and peace through believing. The writer closed with a few incidents to make plain the way of salvation, and by commending all those poor lads to our Father's care and mercy.

The guests were given perfect freedom at meal-time, but behaved splendidly, and a few words of counsel before the after-service began were taken in good part, so that their conduct all through the meeting would not suffer by comparison with the most reverent congregation of church-goers.

When the guests had gone, we lingered together, exchanged notes, and joined in praise and prayer before we went to our beds—all the happier because we had been able to give all the homeless boys the money to get a bed that night besides a plentiful meal. What was left of the pig was sent to two other struggling Homes, where we knew the meat would be acceptable. We sent word to the gentleman who sent us the pig, and he cheered us on our way with a cheque for £100.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER AT LIMEHOUSE.

SINCE January 5, the Edinburgh Castle has been taken possession of by the veteran evangelist, Richard Weaver, and nightly his sonorous voice has been proclaiming to deeply impressed audiences "all the words of this life." Though his health has of late been anything but robust, Richard has been speaking with much of his old-time energy, and the nature of the after-meetings in the large hall of the Castle is convincing proof of the presence of God's Spirit confirming the word with signs following.

On entering the hall at any of the evening meetings, a stranger would be struck, first of all, with the excellent adaptation of the interior to such purposes as Mission services. The lofty roof is studded with lines of Edison lamps, whose glow light up the amphitheatre with a soft radiance. The preacher, well above the heads of his hearers, looks them all in the face, from the gallery in front of him to the raised benches ranging down the sides of the hall. The area is well broken up with cross-gangways, so that exit and entrance without disturbance are more easy than in the majority of public buildings. A gallery, facing the speaker, runs along the back of the hall. Both the Castle and its approaches are flooded with light, for Dr. Barnardo believes in the attractive power of cheerfulness.

Amid these surroundings Richard Weaver has for the past month been delivering the Gospel message. On Sundays part of his audience has consisted of Dr. Barnardo's boys from the Stepney Home, and Leopold House, and youths from the Labour House. A hopeful characteristic of the congregations, too, has been the preponderance of men—these sometimes being in the proportion of two to one. Dr. Barnardo himself has preached at least once every Sunday—usually to congregations that filled every nook and corner of the hall; he has also taken an actively prominent part in the week-evening inquiry-meetings. At the afternoon service on Sunday (at which, by the way, Mr. Harry Guinness this week delivered the address) a striking feature has been the half hour devoted solely to sacred singing, led by Professor André's Alpine Choir; an average of over 2000 people attend these services.

Richard is in his element in the midst of these varied forms of evangelistic effort, and though, as already hinted, the state of his health interferes somewhat with his usual activity, there is little abatement of his old fire. Last Thursday evening, for instance, when we dropped in at the Castle, he was conducting a service quite in the original fervid style of the days when "the converted collier" went about, as we have heard him described, "as a flaming fire-brand." The address reminded one of the dictum of old Christmas Evans, whom, if account be true, Richard Weaver must, in more than one respect, resemble. Old Christmas used to affirm that the preacher's first duty in dealing with his text was to take the shortest road to Christ from it. "If there is not a plain road, then he must break through hedges and ditches to get to the Saviour." Richard Weaver avoids hedges and ditches by always choosing a text which lies close to the heart of Christianity. He has no patience with those who sift the sands for gold dust when solid nuggets are to be had for the lifting in every page of Scripture. On this particular night he took a subject quite after his own heart in the words: "Who loved me and gave Himself for me." For a considerable space the mingled tide of appeal and pathos and personal experience flowed on, compelling attention, and not unfrequently winning tears. At the close several hearers came up for inquiry.

Saturday was an "experience" night—"one of the most refreshing and stimulating nights that we have ever had," as Dr. Barnardo described it. Some fifty persons set to their seal that God's promises had been true in their experience during the past few months. Five-minute testimonies occupied the first part of the evening; then the recruits in the service of the Master presented themselves with more frequency, and the allotted period dwindled to four, to three, and finally to one minute. The tenor of the closing testimonies was simply the pregnant statement: "Thank God that I've found the Saviour." Throughout the evening there was a ring of genuineness in the little speeches of the converts, and an entire absence of any spurious excitement.

On Sunday evening Richard addressed a packed audience, mostly of working men, and all eager to hear the word spoken. The text was the well-known one, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." The speaker, as usual, abundantly used these best of arguments—plenty of illustrations. He is saturated with the Bible, and his glances at the sacred record of angel appearances were more than a mere introduction. He found the Gospel in the story of the heavenly visitant to Hagar, to Abraham, to Daniel, to Jacob, as well as to the shepherds of Bethlehem. "They put a greater estimate upon us than we do ourselves," was Richard's deduction, and then the flood of that Gospel message in which he so delights, flowed in with a personal force that made it impossible for any hearer to hand over the appeal to his neighbour. A pathetic story of a prodigal daughter pointed one of his paragraphs with such unaffected eloquence that one saw scores of eyes quietly wiped at its conclusion. "God help you to come to Christ just now"—was the peroration and the summing up of a long address which rivetted attention throughout.

At the after-meeting many stayed for inquiry, and an appeal for decision was made by Dr. Barnardo. At a late hour the gathering dispersed, with many signs of deep and solemnised impression. Mr. Weaver will conclude his Mission at the Castle on Sunday next.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR abundant blessing on Mission to be held at Churchdown (Gloucestershire), from Feb. 22 to March 8, by George Tuffen.——For much blessing upon evangelistic meetings by Rev. George Campbell, in Chalmers Church, Dundee.——For a fortnight's special Gospel work by Mr. J. A. Vicary, at the Assembly Rooms, Kingstown.——For evangelistic meetings among the students in Edinburgh University.——For blessing on meetings for young people at Pembroke Dock, conducted by Mr. Spiers and Mr. Westall.——For a young woman, a professing Christian, who seems to be deliberately choosing a sinful course, in spite of earnest warnings.——For blessing on the Mission by Messrs. Mateer and Parker, in Godalming, March 9—18.——For a Bible-class of lads; that they may be led to decide for Christ before going out into the world.——For a great blessing on a children's Mission at St. Clement's, Bristol, by Mr. George Banaster, from Feb. 21 to March 1.——For the conversion of three husbands, whose worldly course is causing much anxiety.——That it may please God to convert a young man who is rebelling against his parents.——For a family in great perplexity.——For blessing upon an eight days' Mission at Dunton-green, commencing March 8.——For one who earnestly desires to be delivered from the snare of drink.——For blessing on a coming Mission in Brighton by Mr. Spencer Walton.——For great blessing at Walsall, Staffordshire, on Gospel services conducted by Mr. John Elliott.

STUDENTS' MEETINGS IN EDINBURGH.

By Dr. D. A. MOXEY.

A WONDERFUL work of grace has begun, and is going on, in our University. Premonitory symptoms of the blessed outburst had not been wanting, and many a true child of God within and without her walls had been instant in prayer on her behalf. Our gracious God, who never can long resist the united cry of his people, has, like Himself, done exceeding abundantly above all we have asked or thought.

It had been a matter of remark that the different Christian societies among the students had of late increased in number, and developed in interest and spirituality. Subject to correction, I feel inclined to trace the distinct rise of the tide back to Major Whittle's meetings with the students in 1880. Mr. Moody's meetings in the following year helped on the work; and since the first-named date, I have had the joy of knowing a band of consecrated young men, chiefly from the Arts Classes, who met together for one night a week, to cry to God for the salvation of their Professors and fellow-students, and who encouraged each other in the Lord, and sought grace so to order their own steps, and so to influence their fellows, that a deep and real revival of religion might be the result. A system of visitation was commenced, two generally going in company to the lodging of one, and many individual souls were thus won to Christ.

But the event that has precipitated the shower of blessing that has, and is, falling in our midst, is the recent visit of the two young Christian athletes from Cambridge, who are now on their way to preach Christ to the Chinese. Students, like other young men, are apt to regard professedly religious men of their own age as wanting in manliness, unfit for the river or cricket-field, and only good for psalm-singing and pulling a long face. But the big, muscular hands and long arms of the ex-captain of the Cambridge eight, stretched out in entreaty, while he eloquently told out the old story of redeeming love, capsized their theory; and when Mr. C. T. Studd, a name to them familiar as a household word, and perhaps the greatest gentleman bowler in England, supplemented his brother athlete's words by quiet but intense and burning utterances of personal testimony to the love and power of a personal Saviour, opposition and criticism were alike disarmed, and Professors and students together were seen in tears, to be followed in the after-meeting by the glorious sight of Professors dealing with students, and students with one another.

In looking over the long list of the Professors in our University, it is a subject of the deepest thankfulness to find what a goodly proportion are avowedly on the Lord's side, and how few are openly his enemies. Indeed, we only know of one who persecutes the Lord Jesus, but we are praying that, like Saul of Tarsus, he may be brought down to the dust, with the cry, "Lord, what will Thou have me to do?"

On Friday, January 23, Messrs. Studd and Stanley Smith addressed the students for the last time in the Free Assembly Hall. About 600 only out of 3000 would be present, but the impression produced was deep and widespread. Professor Grainger Stewart presided and engaged in prayer, and as the men were leaving, he called on them that were impressed to throw aside unmanly shame, and to decide there and then for Him who was never ashamed of them. The stampede was arrested, and many young souls were entrusted to Jesus, the lover of souls.

On the following Sunday night, January 25, Professor Henry Drummond addressed the students in the Oddfellows' Hall, when probably 1000 were present. Students are essentially hero-worshippers, and hard muscle and fertile brain seem to be the gods they specially revere. They had already found two of their muscular heroes in vital union with the Lord Jesus Christ, and now they listened to an intellectual giant, who looked no older than themselves, glorifying this same Jesus—a scientist preaching the Gospel. This last surprise seemed to have been the means used by God to topple over the absurd idea that Christ meant cant, and the devil meant manliness; and when Professor Greenfield, M.D., who is regarded as a man of brain-power and of scientific attainments second to none in the University, stood up, and in tearful and broken sentences, almost child-like in their simplicity, urged the students to come to Jesus, a scene ensued which everyone who saw it declares to have been unexampled in his experience. Whole rows of weeping men were dealt with, the difficulty being to find a sufficient number of workers.

Many graduates, and other lovers of our University, have been observing how manifestly God has been using means to the blessed end that has now dawned upon us. Several teachers, whose Christianity was doubtful, have ceased to be Professors, and in several cases men of pronounced evangelical views have taken their places. Of course this has not always been the case, but I think I may venture the assertion that there has been a distinct gain of recent years to the cause of Christ. The appointment of Sir William Muir to the Principalship is a matter of deep gratitude to God.

The Ter-centenary Anniversary, and the magnificent celebration of it, frightened many of the Lord's dear people, especially when they read, among the list of invitations, the names of well-known sceptics and freethinkers in the literary and scientific world. But God overruled it to his own glory, and the outcome of the extraordinary gathering focussed in an unmistakable testimony (from the foremost intellects of Europe) to the truth of, and need for, the glorious revelation to man, contained in God's blessed Book. Students went off to their homes all over the United Kingdom with this testimony, surviving all the excitement, and doubtless in many hearts speaking with a still, small voice. Then the death of our late Principal, so tragic in its suddenness, was another link in the chain of God's providences, all helping to render the words of the two Cambridge students doubly solemn and doubly real.

In Professor Drummond we seem to have found, or rather God sent us, the very man most likely to draw the students to a meeting, and to preach the Gospel to them once they were there. His present scientific popularity made them curious to see him; his youthful face and unconventional, almost boyish manner, won their goodwill, and inclined them to hear him; and his simple and striking way of lifting up Christ, apart from any thought-distracting considerations about Him, such as the naming of repentance, faith, &c., concentrated their attention on the Son of God; and as they saw his love and their own ingratitude side by side, hearts were broken, and wills surrendered.

On the second Sabbath evening, February 1, I took the meeting, and told the story of my conversion. Dr. Woodhead, one of the medical tutors, was Chairman, and he and Professor Greenfield led in prayer. The meeting was comparatively a small one, but the work was evidently of God, for several found peace during the address, and a number were dealt with at the close.

On Sunday, February 8, Professor Drummond again addressed a crowded assemblage, Professors Grainger Stewart and Simpson being present; and the presence and power of God the Holy Ghost were even more manifest than on the former occasion. I came in after my own meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, and although we had many anxious souls to deal with there, yet I found numbers not yet overtaken in the students' after-meeting, and I had the joy of pointing several willing souls to a more willing Saviour. I was told that the Professor's text had been "Come unto Me," &c. (Matt. xi. 28—30); that he had spoken simply, naturally, quietly, and earnestly, dealing largely in illustration and anecdote, and appealing to their manliness, and sense of honour, and gratitude. One anecdote seemed to have touched them deeply. Substantially it was to this effect: Some years ago, in the University, there was a fine manly fellow, a medical student, a very Hercules in strength, but as gentle and loveable as he was strong. He was immensely popular, the Captain of the football club, and not a cricket match was considered complete without him. He was a man of good intellectual gifts as well. He caught typhoid while attending the Royal Infirmary, and soon he lay dying in a private ward. One of the house physicians, an earnest Christian and successful soul-winner, spoke to him about God and eternity. The dear fellow listened, became anxious, and eagerly heard the story of redeeming love. "Will you give yourself to Jesus?" asked the doctor. He did not answer for a space, and then earnestly regarding the man of God, he said, "But don't you think it would be awful mean just to make it up now, at my last gasp, with One I have rejected all my life?" "Yes, it would be mean, but, dear fellow, it would be far meaner not to do it. He wants you to do it now, for He has made you willing, and it would be doubly mean to reject a love that is pursuing you even to death." The dying man saw the point, and apprehending the excess of that exceeding love, he launched his soul into the ocean of it.

Professor Drummond sought to drive home the point by asking, Don't you think it was sad, that this grand young life could return to God, as the fruit of its earthly existence, only a few half-conscious dying hours? Would you like to meet a loving Father, who rewarded you with an eternity of bliss, with such a record? Would it not be mean? But, dear friend, if you leave this hall to-night without Christ, is not this just what you are doing? You won't treat this amazing love like that, will you? you will not be so mean!

On Sabbath, February 15, Professor Drummond was again the speaker, but I must leave a notice of that to another report. In the meantime, "Pray, brethren, pray."

WORKING BOYS' CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.

THE building, No. 8, Endell-street, Long Acre, has for long been used as a Christian Institute. In it the Y.M.C. Institute, now transferred to the Polytechnic in Regent-street, commenced its career; now the premises are occupied as an Institute for boys. Saturday last was the day fixed for the annual meeting, and there was a large muster of the members. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, the treasurer, took the chair.

The Secretary, Mr. Ford, read the Report, showing good progress during the past year. There is now a membership of nearly 250. The Bible-classes on Wednesday evening, conducted by Lady Robinson, and on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Hon. T. Pelham, have been well attended. Mrs. Quintin Hogg presented the prizes for regular attendance at these classes.

Hon. T. Pelham expressed his pleasure at the general good conduct of the members, who gave a number of recitations, &c. This in stitute is doing an excellent work; many lads have been helped forward, and many can testify to the blessing received in this place.

THE BIBLE ON THE SEA.—During the last year, 1258 seamen of twenty different languages, and of still more numerous nationalities, purchased from the Missions to Seamen Chaplain, of Queenstown Harbour, on board their ships, Bibles, New Testaments, and Prayer-books in their own tongues, paying out of their hard-earned wages £112 17s. 6d. for these sacred books. This was exclusive of gifts of Bible portions and other publications to the crews. Comparatively few Englishmen were among the purchasers.

TABEETHA MISSION, JAFFA.—The report of this Mission, under the superintendence of Miss Walker-Arnott, states that two Sunday-schools have lately been opened and are well attended, specially by Jewish girls. The health of the pupils has been remarkably good, considering the great amount of sickness that has prevailed. The cost of support and education of one girl is £10 per annum. The education given is of a simple, Christian character, with a thoroughly industrious training, which, however, is very irksome to the native character. Miss Arnott's home address is 24, St. Bernard's-crescent, Edinburgh. An account of the progress of the Hospital and Medical Mission has been written by Miss Mangan, and may be had of Miss Agar, Deaconess House, Mildmay-park London, N.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Brunswick Road, Poplar.—A five-days' children's mission has been held at the Mission Hall here by Mr. W. R. Brailey, of the Children's Evangelistic Mission. The results were most gratifying, over 125 young people and children having given in their names, as surrendering their hearts to Jesus.

Weston-super-Mare.—Mr. Spencer Walton, who held a Mission here in November last, has again paid us a brief visit. He was cheered to find that those who were then brought to the Lord are standing well, and testifying, by their daily lives, that they are indeed new creatures in Christ Jesus. Others have been won for Jesus, and many of the Lord's children received help and blessing. N.

Manchester.—Gospel services, very largely attended, continue to be held in Cooke's Circus, in connection with the Wood-street Mission, Deansgate. Last Sunday Mrs. Auty, a Yorkshire evangelist, spoke afternoon and evening, and a deep impression seemed to be made. Several reformed Deansgate men also gave their testimonies in the evening, when many signed the pledge, and a number were seeking salvation.

Blackhill, Durham.—The work of revival in this neighbourhood in connection with the labours of Miss Wilson and Miss Watson has been a very remarkable one. A local paper, in reporting the close of the special services, states that 1500 adults and children are computed to have been converted. A Mission band has been organised among the young converts. The lady evangelists will next conduct a Mission at Brampton, Cumberland.

Edinburgh.—A Mission week was conducted in St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, from January 25, to Febuary 1, by Rev. J. Dawson, Vicar of Trinity Church, Torquay. Bible readings were given every afternoon with the view of growth in the spiritual life; and evangelistic addresses were delivered each evening. All the services were well attended, and almost all who were present remained to the after-meetings, which were conducted by the incumbent. The numbers steadily increased to the end of the week, and a deep earnestness was manifested, which augurs well for the permanence of the results.

Cardiff.—We have just been privileged to receive an impromptu visit from Messrs. Edward Hurditch and F. C. Spurr, of the London Evangelistic Mission, covering twelve days, during which time services were held at the Y.M.C.A. and in three of the chapels. There was little time for arrangement, but the visit was marked by much blessing. Mr. Hurditch's powerful grasp of truth and Mr. Spurr's gifts for preaching and singing were owned of God in carrying conviction and blessing to many hearts, especially at the Y.M.C.A. An earnest request has been sent to headquarters that these beloved brethren may arrange to return in the early autumn for a fortnight's work in connection with the Association.

W. A. Southwell, Secretary, Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Moody in the Southern States.—Mr. R. Garret, of the Y.M.C.A., Asheville, North Carolina, who attended Mr. Moody's recent meetings at Richmond, writes to us that a great blessing is being poured out upon this Virginian city. The services were being continued under Mr. G. C. Needham and his brother Thomas Needham; both of them were preaching daily to crowded congregations, with large result. To meet the strong desire of many friends, Mr. Moody has agreed to devote some time to Gospel work in the Southern States next autumn. With respect to Asheville, Mr. Garrett writes that a series of union meetings in connection with the Y.M.C.A. was to commence the week following the date of his letter. He asks prayer for much blessing on their little mountain city.

Mr. G. Soltau reports that the meetings held in Brooklyn during the month of January have been very encouraging. At a Mission-room in the lower part of the city by the docks a number of sailors have confessed Christ. Some of them, Swedes and Norwegians, have sailed rejoicing in the Lord. Drunkards have been reclaimed, and are giving some evidence of the change of heart. In Dr. George F. Pentecost's Church a series of children's meetings have proved very successful; and at the Westminster Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Dr. Ludlar is pastor, there have been hundreds attending the evening Bible-readings to Christians. Other addresses, given at the Y.M.C.A., Brooklyn, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Fulton-street, have been followed by very blessed results. Mr. Soltau purposes continuing with afternoon children's meetings and evening Bible-readings.

OBITUARY.

MRS. HENRY SMITH.

On the morning of Sunday, January 25, Mrs. Henry Smith fell asleep in Jesus at Beyrout, Syria, the home of her adoption. She had laboured for twenty-five years in the British Syrian schools, specially devoting her energies to the Bible Mission. She will be mourned by the Syrians as a beloved mother. Very manifestly the Lord has blessed her work among them; almost her last wish was that every Syrian who could read should possess a Bible.

MR. TOM JONES.

This evangelist, who has laboured for many years in May's-lane, near Barnet, among the agricultural population and also among many gipsies who frequent the neighbourhood, entered into his rest last week at the age of sixty-one. His death was referred to by Colonel Puget at Oakleigh-road Schoolroom on Sunday afternoon. He stated that Mr. Jones was born in a workhouse, and brought up under evil influences, his first awakening being brought about through the sister of his present wife, who, on her dying bed, made him promise that he would meet her in heaven. He was eventually led from a gang of his evil companions by a Methodist minister who was present at his sister's death, and this led to his conversion. His evangelistic labours have been greatly blessed to many among the humbler classes.

SCEPTICISM, TRUE AND FALSE.—We would advise any who are troubled with sceptical doubts and misgivings to hear two lectures to be delivered at 186, Aldersgate-street to-day (Thursday), and Thursday next, at 8 p.m., by Dr. Robert Anderson.

BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—Great activity is manifest at this Association. Besides the Gospel work of the Association in both senior and junior sections, additional attractions are provided, such as musical evenings, lectures, gymnastic displays, residential accommodation, &c.

SYRIAN ORPHANAGE AT JERUSALEM.—Miss E. Hué, Merton House, Teddington, S.W., desires us to thank the many kind friends who have sent her English and foreign used stamps, to be sold for the benefit of this excellent institution. She will be grateful for further contributions.

THREE RECENT REVIVALS.—The Church is to-day developing features of the Christian life under the impression that they are new, whereas they are simply the ordinary ways of the early apostolic Church. Three recent revivals of primitive practices are—feeding the hungry, the ministry of women, and the service of song.—Christian Leader.

TILBURY DOCKS.—Mr. G. Simons, the missionary of the Thames Church Mission at the East and West India Dock Extension, Tilbury, Essex, writes to say that the men are soon to be put on full time, when there will be opportunities of having services with them during the dinner hour. He would be very glad if some friend could lend or give an harmonium for use in these meetings.

THE TROOPS FOR EGYPT.—All our readers must deeply regret the necessity which, in the view of the Government, has arisen for despatching more troops to Egypt and the Soudan. As they are going, we feel sure we may ask a prayerful sympathy for the Thames Church Mission in its work of distributing Christian literature among the departing soldiers. Every man is receiving, through the chaplains and lay agents of the Mission, a copy of the New Testament (the gift of the British and Foreign Bible Society), some illustrated periodicals, and a "Gospel target." 2200 men are being thus supplied this week at Southampton and Portsmouth, in addition to those leaving the Thames.

A NEW PRAYER-MEETING ROOM.—As many of our readers well know, we have long been inconvenienced for want of a larger room for our weekly meeting at Pyrland-road, N. Prayer was offered for a new room on January 3, and on January 7 a letter was received, from which we give an extract: "Enclosed is some money which I believe the Lord means me to send to you. I had been asking Him for some time (till last Saturday) what to do with it. If you are not needing it for anything special, might it be used for the new room? . . . . I do thank God for those prayer-meetings. I shall think of you specially next Saturday, and all next week." Enclosed in this letter were five £10 notes. A few gifts, amounting in all to £25, had been received before.—China's Millions.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

The Indian Christian Herald deprecates the prevalent habit of extravagant marriage expenses among Native Christians

Italy.—From the last budget we learn that Italy spends in one year £1,600,000 on its prisons, and £960,000 on public instruction.

In the year 1884, at the Port of New York, 380,000 persons landed from different countries, nearly all of whom were emigrants.—Evangéliste.

Chili.—The Chamber of Deputies in Chili proclaimed in August, 1884, liberty to all religious worship, ceasing to regard the Roman Catholic as the State religion.

Pastor Stocker, Court Preacher at Berlin, is publishing a weekly journal, "The Sunday Friend" (Sonntagsfreund), intended to support the Berlin Home Hission.

It is a very odd suggestion of The Catholic Mirror, that the sole cure of the "hideous moral plague" which France has communicated to American society is the Catholic confessional.

France.—Chaplains are to be withdrawn from the military hospitals, it not being possible to provide the necessary stipends. Henceforth the parish clergy will attend to this service, a certain sum being appointed for the extra duty.

Spire.—A new Evangelical Deaconesses' House was inaugurated here in December last. The building is made to receive fifty patients and a hundred deaconesses, and is the gift of M. and Madame Henry Villard, of Huguenot origin.

Switzerland.—The Roman Catholic Commune of Erstfeld, Uri, have allowed the Protestants to use a schoolroom, in which to celebrate their worship. A home for epileptics is being established at Ruti, near Zurich, to receive forty children.

Brandenburg.—A Home for the care, cure, and training of epileptics, of whom there are at least 3000 in this province, is being established in Berlin. In Germany there are from 70,000 to 75,000 epileptics, for whom many institutions exist.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

Pesth is just now greatly moved by the conversion of Father Elisaus Bass, Prior of the Fathers of Charity, who has left his Order, his convent, and the Romish Church, to become a Protestant. Well known and loved in Pesth, we pray he may be used to bring others to the Saviour.

China.—Whilst the war between France and China excites in some places, Canton, for instance, strong opposition against the missionaries, in others, notably in Foochow, the colporteurs now sell hundreds of Bibles where they sold dozens before the war; the chapels are filled with attentive listeners.—L'Evangéliste.

Vaud.—Pastor Stockmayer has been visiting various towns, going as far north as Memel, on the Baltic Sea. With some helpers he has conducted meetings for the edification of Christians, and evangelistic services have been held every day. The audiences have been increasingly large.—Journal Religieux.

The Converted Catholic is a monthly review, published under the direction of Father O'Connor, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, who is seeking to bring about a reform among the Irish Roman Catholics of the United States. The review speaks of much progress in New York, Brooklyn, and Newark.

A Council of the Churches in Tahiti ordains the observation of Christmas-day, Good Friday, and Easter Sunday, and strongly urges people and pastors to put down the vice of drunkenness by abstaining altogether from intoxicants; they are also exhorted to industry, especially in the cultivation of land.—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

The Church of Aaran, Switzerland, has long been used by Protestants and Catholics. On New Year's Eve every seat was occupied. The whole assembly first sang together, then the Catholic choir performed. The priest, and Pastor Wernley spoke alternately on the religious thoughts which should inspire each heart at the close of the year, and on the good relations that should exist between all Christians.

Lessouto.—The French missionaries have been seriously exercised as to the result of the withdrawal of all pecuniary aid to the teachers of their schools by the Cape Government. At a meeting in Thaba-Bossion last November the situation was laid before the native teachers—the total suppression of their salaries. Out of ten only one withdrew, the other nine declared they would, from love to God and the work, continue to preach and conduct the schools, seeking at the same time to support themselves by cultivating their fields.

Notes on Daily Readings.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

FEBRUARY 19.—MATTHEW XXII.

v. 2.—"A certain king, which made a marriage for his son."—The Gospel of St. Matthew is that one to which we owe, more than to any other, our complete idea of our blessed Lord as the promised Messiah, the Holy One of God, the King and Head over all to his Church. It is from this first and best known of the Gospels that that image of Him especially arises, which is so much in the thoughts and hearts of all of us who believe– that chosen One in whom centre all the ways and works of God; perfect in majesty, perfect in mercy; the King's Son for whom is made the great marriage of heaven and earth; the Bridegroom into whose feast the wise and virgin souls shall enter. . . . Reader, would you use this Gospel aright? Seek ever the King and Saviour in it; and mayest thou find Him to thy soul's everlasting health.—Alford.

v. 11.—"Not having on a wedding garment."—Bengel and others interpret the wedding garment to be the righteousness of Christ; Alford, more fully, "the imputed and inherent righteousness of the Lord Jesus, put on symbolically in baptism (Gal. iii. 27), and really by a true and living faith (ibid. 26), without which none can appear before God in his Kingdom of glory (Heb. xii. 14; Phil. iii. 7, 8; Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10). Dr. Bruce ("Parabolic Teachings of Christ") says, "the fathers generally made the robe holiness," and himself explains that "the wedding-robe represents Christian holiness; and the demand is that all believers in the Gospel shall sedulously cultivate it." Gal. iii. 27 includes all: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Christ is the wedding garment, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom—both righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor. i. 30).

FEBRUARY 20.—MATTHEW XXIII.

v. 8-10.—"Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master."—Three titles are forbidden by our Lord to be applied to men in a religious sense, or as indicative of spiritual authority—Father, Teacher, Leader or Guide. The Greek terms are πατήρ, διδάσκαλος, καθηγητής. Alford points out that we have here an allusion to the Holy Trinity, as related to the Christian Church, and to each believer. God is the Father of all, the Holy Spirit is the Teacher of all (see John xiv. 26; 1 John ii. 20, 27), Jesus Christ is the Leader of all (Isa. lv. 4). Olshausen well observes: "The point of view from which the teacher is to be regarded must ever be that, according to which his hearers shall learn to say, with the inhabitants of Sychar, 'We believe now, not on account of thy saying, for we have ourselves heard Him, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.'"

v. 13.—"But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees."—Eight woes are pronounced by our Lord in this his last discourse to the Pharisees, in contrast to the eight beatitudes with which the Sermon on the Mount commenced. The first four of these "woes" refer to outward evil, the pernicious effects of their sin; the next three, to inward evil, the nature of their sin; the last (ver. 29—35) gathers up the iniquity of the whole race into one culminating point, and seals upon Israel a solemn doom. (Comp. Isa. v. 8—25.)

v. 39.—"Till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh."—This was the "farewell" and the parting of Israel's Messiah from Israel, and its Temple. Yet a farewell which promised a coming again; and a parting which implied a welcome in the future from a believing people to a gracious, pardoning King.—Edersheim.

FEBRUARY 21.—MATTHEW XXIV.

This chapter is prophetic throughout, having reference mainly to the events connected with the nearing return of our Lord, the period when "He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Dr. Tregelles remarks: "In Matthew xxiv. 3, there are three questions proposed to the Lord by some of his disciples relative to what He had told them as to the destruction of the Temple, 'Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming? and of the end of the world (rather, age)?' In his reply, He brings before them moral truth which bears on the conscience. From verses 4—14, He gives an outline of what would be the characteristics of the dispensation; He shows how the hopes which the ancient prophets of Israel had set before the people must be deferred as to their accomplishment, until this dispensational period should have closed; wars, rumours of wars, evil increasing, the people of Christ hated and persecuted for his name's sake by all nations, and the Gospel preached for a witness to the same nations; such is the general picture, putting the child of faith into a position of waiting for a deferred, although secure, blessing." From this may be learned the practical value of this chapter to ourselves. "The more a soul sees to what this present dispensational period is tending, the more will it (if rightly submitting to the guidance of God's Spirit) find its own proper place in the midst of present things, seeing what it can have fellowship with, and what it cannot."

FEBRUARY 22.—MATTHEW XXV.

v. 1-13.—The parable of the Ten Virgins.—Dr. Marcus Dods remarks that "this parable is not addressed to those who have never made any preparation for Christ's coming, but to those who have not made sufficient preparation. The foolish virgins are a warning to all who are tempted to make conversion everything, edification nothing; who cultivate religion for a season and then think they have done enough; who were religious once, can remember the time when they had very serious thoughts and very solemn resolutions, but who have made no earnest effort, and are making none, to maintain in themselves the life they once began. . . . Let us, then, be sure that we are living in constant communication with the Source of all spiritual life; that the very Spirit of Christ dwells in us richly."

v. 14-30.—The parable of the Talents.—Here we have a lesson on spiritual diligence, the duty and responsibility incumbent upon us as servants of Christ to use faithfully and earnestly whatever capacity or opportunity we may have for doing his will and glorifying his name. Trench well observes on the order of this parable, as following that of the Virgins, which relates to the inner life, that "It is the sole condition of a profitable outward activity for the kingdom of God, that the life of God be diligently maintained within the heart."

v. 31-46.—The parable of the Sheep and the Goats.—Practical benevolence springing out of faith in and love to Christ is the great point of this parable.

v. 40.—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least. . . ."—Here is the practical way to show your love to Christ. We have not now the opportunity of ministering to Christ's physical necessities, as Martha and Mary did of old, but we can by rendering assistance to the poor and distressed of the human family. What you do for "the least" He regards as done for Him. He regards a cup of cold water given to the poorest of his disciples as given to Him. (See also Isa. lviii. 6, 7; Mark ix. 41; Gal. vi. 2; Jas. i. 27.)—Dr. David Thomas.

FEBRUARY 23.—MATTHEW XXVI.

Seven incidents of our Lord's closing hours of earthly life are presented to view in this chapter, each one calling for earnest and devout reflection. We have Jesus in the house of Simon the leper; at the paschal feast; instituting "The Lord's Supper;" in Gethsemane; betrayed; in the hall of Caiaphas; denied by Peter.

v. 13.—"Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world. . . ." Dr. Hanna remarks: "It was the intensity of the personal attachment to Jesus that her act expressed which drew down upon it this encomium of the Lord. The nearer the time for losing, the more intense became the clinging to Him. Her whole heart of love went out in the act, therefore Jesus thus spoke of it, the only case in which He ever spoke of the earthly fame of any service rendered to him, predicting for it a widespread reputation and an undying remembrance."

v. 47.—"Lo, Judas, one of the twelve."—Everywhere, he is a Judas, with whom his worldly interests, his worldly ambition, prevail over his attachment to Christ and to Christ's cause; who joins the Christian society, it may not be to make gain thereby, but who, when the occasion presents itself, scruples not to make what gain he can of that connection; who beneath the garb of the Christian calling pursues a dishonest traffic; who, when the gain and the godliness come into collision, sacrifices the godliness for the gain. How many such Judases the world has seen, how much of that Judas spirit there may be in our own hearts, I leave it to your knowledge of yourselves, and of the world, to determine.—Dr. Hanna.

v. 64.—"Jesus said unto him, Thou hast said."—This was a solemn moment. The titular high priest of the Jews, and their eternal High Priest, are now face to face. The substance is arraigned before the judgment of the shadow. One is the representative of the Jewish nation; the other is its Messiah and its true King. The representative in whom for the time being the nation is embodied, puts the great question, "Are you the Messiah?" The Messiah "witnesses a good confession." He pronounces the solemn affirmative, "I AM." And He IS REJECTED. The great act is consummated. Well might the high priest rend his clothes. Not because his prisoner had spoken blasphemy, but because himself had denied the Lord that bought him.—Dr. Whedon.

FEBRUARY 24.—MATTHEW XXVII.

v. 3.—"Judas . . . repented himself."—Rather, "was filled with remorse." He "rued it," as Zinzendorf expresses it. There was no prayer, no confession Godward, no true contrition, only remorseful despair.

v. 9.—"Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremiah."—The passage quoted is, however, really in Zechariah xi. 13. Calvin's honest remark on this place is the right and best way of treating the difficulty. He says: "How the name Jeremiah crept in, I confess I do not know, nor do I concern myself anxiously to inquire. It is certain that the word Jeremiah has been put down by mistake for Zechariah." Just a clerical error in MS.

v. 33.—"A place called Golgotha."—The hill of Golgotha is a portion of the mountain of Moriah, upon which Abraham was bidden to offer his son Isaac. It was here that Isaac allowed himself to be bound like a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and was by his patience and willing obedience, as well as by his unexpected return to life, a type of the Son of Man (Heb. xi. 19). Nothing happened by chance in the history of Christ. The secret guidance of God which adheres to his Word, is everywhere perceptible. Everything occurred that the Scripture might be fulfilled. The history of the Passion pre-eminently is a web woven out of prophecy and fulfilment. In each feature of Christ's sufferings some prophetic word of the Old Testament is fulfilled.—Prof. Lehmann.

FEBRUARY 25.—MATTHEW XXVIII.

v. 6.—"Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—There is no part of the history of Jesus which is either unimportant in itself, or uninteresting to those whom He shed his heart's life-blood to redeem. Matters which are seemingly trivial have couched in them a grave significance, and bear directly and impressively upon the great purpose for which He came into the world. And yet—save that death which is the foundation of our hopes of life—there is no spot more hallowed to the affections of the believer, more sacred to his pilgrim feet, than the garden in which there was a sepulchre—where, amid the flowers of the opening spring, the body of Jesus was laid. Oh! surely the heart will kindle, as we visit it, with thoughts of triumph, not of terror, for it speaks to us of a destroyed destroyer—of a mighty despotism shattered for ever—of a Deliverer, whose victory were not complete unless a rejoicing people share it.—Dr. Punshon.

v. 6.—"He is risen."—Dr. H. Bonar writes:—

"Yes, He is risen who is the First and Last;
  Who was and is; who liveth and was dead;
Beyond the reach of death He now has passed,
  Of the one glorious Church the glorious Head.

"The tomb is empty; so, ere long, shall be
  The tombs of all who in this Christ repose;
They died with Him who died upon the tree,
  They live and rise with Him who lived and rose."

v. 18.—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth."—It is a blessed thing to know that all things are under Christ's control. Dr. Baker, of Philadelphia, well observes: "How is it possible not to see that—long, and slow, and reactive at times as it has been—all history has really been under supreme control of the Christ, and toward his own interest. The trend, the converging, the culminating of all the myriad lines of events toward is proof of that. Down to date, is this great Captain the sole but sufficient explanation of all events. And what of the future? Who can say what is to come to Russia, of its struggle between Nihilist and Czar? In what way are the many millions of India to be saved? What is the Africa which shall bloom out of an Africa whose sunburnt husk has been so lately torn open? Can France remain free alike from Monarchist and Commune? Mohammedanism—what is to be the outcome of this? Dynamite, in Irish hands, is blowing asunder its own partisans, and people from priest—what is to come of that? And of Palestine—what? So of our own land: capital in contest with labour; Communism, Mormonism, political corruption; the inflowing of an enormous emigration—how are these to result? What seems a thriving revolt against faith, the allied Canaanites of Materialism, Agnosticism, Atheism, Positivism, Secularism—how are these sons of Anak to be subdued by faith so feeble as ours? As He did to Joshua, so let Christ but show Himself to us, saying, 'Nay, but as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come!' and what ghost of a dead doubt as to the future can darken the soul of the feeblest of us?"

'the one divine event
To which the whole creation moves'

Notices of Books, &c.

Echoes from Paris. 2d. Partridge. They are cheering echoes, and should lead all readers of this little paper to support Miss Leigh's work and labour of love in the French capital.

Healing Leaves for the Nations of the World. 1d. By Rev. C. G. Baskerville. Partridge & Co. A masterly pamphlet on the growing and devastating results of England's great curse.

Woman's Work in the Great Harvest Field. 4d. Partridge & Co. Besides a cheering record of work, the February number contains a brief paper on "The Name of the Lord," which will be especially comforting to workers.

The Monthly Tract Society have issued, as one of their tract series, a brief memoir of the late Sir Charles Reed. The chief facts of his busy and useful life are collated, and the tract will prove useful for circulation among the well-to-do classes of society. (New Bridge-street, E.C. 1d.)

Health Lectures for the People. Fifth Series. Macniven & Wallace. Cookery, marketing, insanity, disease, the bath, &c., are among the topics of these lectures, delivered under the auspices of the Edinburgh Health Society. All are ably dealt with by qualified gentlemen belonging to the medical and other professions.

Home Words and Day of Days. 1d. each. "Home Words" Office. The current issue of the former has an autograph and portrait of Prince Victor at eleven years of age, a very striking likeness of Archbishop Trench, and much instructive, pleasant reading. The latter is full of good matter, including an interesting paper on "Mission Work in Ireland."

The Breastplate of the High Priest. A memorial card in aid of private intercessory prayer, presenting a beautiful illuminated copy of the jewelled breastplate worn by the High Priest, interlined in each space for the insertion of the names of loved ones "according to their birth," and any other fit subjects for private intercession. On the reverse side are a number of Scripture texts affording encouragement to prayer. The idea has been suggested by lines written by the late Miss Havergal, which are also printed on the sheet. It is published by Mr. Alfred Holness, 14, Paternoster-row; price 6d.

Men Worth Remembering: John Knox, by Dr. W. M. Taylor; John W. Fletcher, by Rev. F. W. Macdonald. 2s. 6d. each. Hodder & Stoughton. These two books very worthily wind up this valuable series of brief biographies. On reading Dr. Taylor's vivid sketch of the great Scotch ecclesiastic and politician, one is tempted to exclaim with Carlyle: "Glory to John Knox; our isle never saw his fellow." As for Fletcher of Madeley, his name will ever be synonymous with saintliness of life, and Mr. Macdonald has given a very clear presentation of him. The whole series is much to be commended for Y.M.C.A. and other popular libraries.

Scenes from the Life of Jesus. By E. Lehmann. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. A choice volume of lectures delivered by Professor Lehmann, Director of the Inner Mission at Leipsic, and translated by Miss Sophia Taylor. They are entirely devotional and expository in their character, and will be found full of instruction and comfort for the people of God. The author's aim is thus expressed by himself: "To attract those afar off, to draw near . . . . and to earnestly point out to believers their responsibility as disciples of the Lord." The purpose is so well executed that the volume cannot fail to answer these important ends. There are seven lectures in all, setting forth Jesus as a Home Friend, the King of the Heart, Stilling the Storm, the Physician, the Conqueror of Death, and the Sufferer for Sin.

6000 Illustrations of Moral and Religious Truths. By Rev. John Bate. 7s. 6d. Jarrold & Son. A new edition—the ninth—of a volume which has been found of special value to preachers and writers. With infinite pains Mr. Bate has brought together these six thousand extracts from various authors, ancient and modern, on topics quite within the range of any ordinary preacher or teacher. Take, as a single example, the words "Dead," "Death." Under these heads there are six-and-twenty pages, giving no less than ninety different aspects of this one subject, and illustrating the theme by two hundred and thirty-seven extracts from various sources. To a busy and over-burdened minister this thesaurus of thought must be a useful acquisition; and to many a hard-working evangelist the book would prove a most serviceable gift.

Temperance Home Thrusts. By Rev. Charles Courtenay. Two packets. 6d. each. Church of England Temperance Society. The Vicar of Upper Armley has laid the Christian Church under an obligation by the production of these admirable Temperance tracts. To all sorts and conditions of men, and of women too, his searching words are addressed; and we know of no series of Temperance appeals more likely to produce a plentiful crop of good results, if sown broadcast over the land.

The Healer Preacher. By George Saunders, M.D. With illustrations. 3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. Perhaps there is no better field for the exercise of the divine double art of healing and preaching than the districts of West Central London. There is certainly no living worker better qualified to describe and commend that work than Dr. Saunders, who has laboured so long and so successfully in St. Giles. This deeply interesting volume is full from end to end of facts and statements which prove beyond dispute that the Saviour's command to preach the word and heal the sick is in binding force and actual operation to-day. All the varied aspects of this important subject are handled in an eminently practical and judicious way. We earnestly bid God speed to Dr. Saunders' book on its mission of educating and stimulating the churches to greater zeal in meeting the needs of the world that lieth in the wicked one.

A Translation of the Old Testament Scriptures from the Original Hebrew. By Helen Spurrell. Nisbet & Co. On the eve, as we are, of the appearance of the Old Testament portion of the Revised Version, it would have been wiser, we think, for the author of this translation to have waited until she had the benefit of knowing what the advanced learning and Hebrew scholarship of the present day can present. Any new translation is to a certain extent an impeachment of the Authorised Version, for if that is satisfactory, why should there be a new translation? On those points in this translation in which we remark any difference from the Authorised Version, we are inclined to prefer the older one. "Not dying ye shall die" is surely no improvement on "Ye shall not surely die," of Gen. iii. 4. The alteration is both awkward and misleading. In changing "She was the mother of all living" into "She was to be the source of all life" there is a liberty taken in making the common word for mother "source," which does not commend itself. More serious, however, is the alteration introduced into Isaiah liii. 5, where the last clause, "With his stripes we are healed," is changed into "and by his union with us we are healed," a rendering for which there is no authority, and which runs counter not only to the plain meaning of the Hebrew word, which occurs elsewhere only in the sense of "stripe" or "bruise," but also to that of the Greek translation of the LXX. quoted by the Apostle Peter in his first Epistle ii. 24. Such conjectural criticism, however well meant, is really dangerous. A new translation should be the work of no slight scholarship, and should never attempt to alter what has stood the criticism of nearly 300 years without very clear and cogent reasons for so doing.

A Sermon, entitled The Fall of Khartoum and the Situation in Egypt, preached on Sunday week by Rev. W. Crosbie, of Brighton, has been published by Messrs. Fenwick & Co., 108, Western-road. Price 2d.

Dr. Parker has sold the copyright of his works, including the forthcoming volumes of "The People's Bible," to his printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, who have made arrangements with Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton to supply the trade.

Rev. Canon Fleming is preparing a biographical sketch of the late Samuel Bowly, and would be glad to receive from friends any letters or reminiscences that might add to the interest and value of the volume. Address—St. Michael's Vicarage, Pimlico, London, S.W.

The publishers of The Expositor have disposed of the stock and copyright of the First and Second Series—the portion edited by Dr. Cox—which will in future be published by Mr. Charles Higham, of 27a, Farringdon-street, London. The Third Series, commenced in January, under new editorship, still remains the property of Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

A little penny pamphlet has been published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, entitled The Evangelisation of the World. It contains brief papers, setting forth the deep need of the heathen, written by Mr. Stanley Smith, Mr. C. T. Studd, and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Its wide distribution would doubtless help to stir up Christians to a larger sense of their responsibility and privilege.

The Religious Tract Society have in the press, and will publish in a few days, Mr. G. A Shaw's book, Madagascar and France. The work seeks not only to set forth a true historical sketch of the connection of France with Madagascar from the earliest times to the present, but also to answer various questions which are arising in the minds of many with regard to the country—its products and adaptability for foreign enterprise and commerce—and its people, their character, habits, employments, and advance in civilisation and Christianity. The book will contain a large new map of Madagascar, and many illustrations from original sketches of photographs, finely engraved by E. Whymper. Crown 8vo., cloth boards, 6s.

ARMY TEXT MISSION.—Friends desirous of helping this work are kindly requested not to send tracts or books, but illuminated texts only, to Chas. C. B. White, Windsor.

Mission and other Appeals.

The friends who conduct the East London Tract Society and Christian Mission appeal for help in providing meals for many destitute children, who are met with in visitation. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. H. Ley, 47, Dee-street, Poplar, E.

Star Villa Orphan Home (Napier-road, New Brompton, Kent). —Mrs. Willis, the Superintendent of this Institution, lately received a serious injury to her eye, which has completely laid her aside during the last fortnight. She is still suffering great pain, which prevents her fulfilling the many duties which devolve upon her. Donations are much needed, and will be most gratefully acknowledged.

Protestant Church, Niederbronn, Alsace.—This Church originally belonged to the Protestants, but in the time of Louis Quartorze half of the Church was taken possession of by the Roman Catholics, and has remained so ever since. Now the Roman Catholics are building a new church for themselves and are leaving the old one to the Protestants, but this will cost about 25,000 francs (£1000) to repair; it is in a deplorable state, and the people there being very poor have not the means to do it alone. I appeal to the kind hearts of English friends who so often have proved themselves "friends in need" quite regardless of nationality.—Mrs. Mogridge, Woodlands, Wray-park, Reigate.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, February 14, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? A[illegible]mounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' and SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing cross.

Patron—Right Hon. Earl of SHAFTESBURY.
President—GENERAL SIR A. J. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

The friends of the soldier are earnestly appealed to for funds for the continued support of the Society. Ninety Scripture Readers are now actively employed in the Army at home and abroad.

With such unquestionable testimony on all sides to the beneficial influence of the Reader in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the Lord's blessing is resting in no small degree upon this Institution; and with this conviction deeply impressed on our hearts, we lay this matter before all who can feel for a soldier's trials, a soldier's temptations, a soldier's devotion to his Queen and country, but, above all for a soldier's everlasting welfare, confident—nay, more than confident, assured—that He will cause unknown supporters to spring up upon the right hand and upon the left, and stimulate old friends to fresh exertions. Two additional Readers are with the Troops in Egypt and one with Sir Charles Warren's Expedition in South Africa.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, V. G. M. Holt, Esq., 17, Whitehall-place; at the Bankers, National Provincial Bank of England, 212, Piccadilly; by the Secretary, Mr. William A. Blake; or by the Hon. Secretary, Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith.

MRS. BOOTH,

Of the Salvation Army,
WILL (D.V.) SPEAK IN
THE BARRACKS, High-street, Battersea, S.W.,
On Thursday, February 26, 8 p.m.
Reserved Seats, 6d.

URGENT APPEAL.

IRISH SOCIETY.

For Promoting the Scriptural Education of the Irish-speaking population, chiefly through the Medium of their own Language.

The financial year ends March 25. Receipts have so seriously diminished that prompt aid is absolutely necessary to enable the Society to continue its work.

As a Bible and Christian Vernacular Education Society of 66 years' standing, formally sanctioned by the Church of Ireland, its claims as a Christian Agency are among the foremost in the Kingdom. The Old Achill Mission, whose history is of thrilling interest, is now under the Society's charge. £1000 needed for present emergencies.

Contributions, earnestly requested in the Master's Name, may be forwarded to NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK (Piccadilly Branch); Messrs. NISBET & Co., Berners-st.; Rev. T. KEANE, 32, Sackville-st. W., London; or, Rev. W. FITZPATRICK, 17, Upper Sackville-st., Dublin.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

(Founded by Mr. W. J. Lewis, in the year 1863.)
NOW CONDUCTED BY
MR. JAMES SHARPLESS, Superintendent,
AND
MR. EDWARD GEO. HARVEY, Secretary, 14, Sidney-square, London, E.

This Mission is carried on in one of the most degraded parts of the East of London. The operations consist of Open-Air Gospel Preaching; House-to-House Visitation; Services for Adults and Children; Ragged Night School; Lodging-house visiting. Many have, through this Mission, been delivered from lives of vice and misery. Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at above address, or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

IN aid of the funds of the proposed LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, received One Hundred and Ninety-nine Shillings from "Appeal," per CHRISTIAN. Many thanks. Letters to the Editor.

EVANGELICAL EDUCATION IN ITALY.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see attention turned in your columns to this important matter. There is room for many workers; and, without prejudice to new comers, let me say that I know two excellent specimens of schools for imparting the best possible higher female education on Christian principles, under reliable Christian superintendence. The one is at Naples, where indeed there are schools for both the upper and the humbler classes; the other is at Rome. The former is under the charge of a committee, which includes the Protestant ministers of the city. No small share of its success, I have heard, was due to Rev. Dr. Gray, who now labours in the Presbyterian Church at Rome, where I hope the school is to be equally successful, though hitherto he has had heavy pecuniary anxieties in connection with it. I believe that gifts in money are much wanted for its well-being, as every one can understand how the hostile influences at Rome are very serious.

Another valuable way of giving help is to send English and American girls to these schools, where they may be boarded at a very reasonable cost, and be under admirable Christian oversight, while (along with Italian girls of good family) they obtain an education, to the excellence of which, on its secular side, abundant testimony has been borne by the Government Inspectors as well as by parents and friends of those educated there.

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING OF GIRLS.

Dear Sir,—A class for this purpose has for many years been carried on by a lady in Clifton, on such a simple and inexpensive plan, that I feel sure there are many ladies who, if they knew of it, could carry it out in other places. Mrs. P——'s object is to have six girls at a time in training; these are selected from a school in a poor neighbourhood, and vary in age from eleven to twelve or thirteen; they attend every Saturday morning, from half-past nine to half-past twelve, being required to come in large clean aprons or pinafores. The girls take it in turns, under proper supervision, to do different household duties. While one, under Mrs. P——'s own direction, prepares some simple dishes, the others look on, and write down on slates the recipe and mode of preparation. As in this household the Sunday dinner is cooked, as much as is possible, on the Saturday, the girls learn in time how to prepare a variety of food, and economy being studied, they can in many cases carry out at home what they learn.

The same girls attend a Tuesday evening class, also at Mrs. P——'s house, where they are taught to starch and iron. They also cut out and make under-garments while they are being read to, a set of the same being given to any girl who goes to a situation after having attended the class regularly for a year.

Once a year a rather amusing competition for prizes takes place, prizes being given for the best-laid fire, the lightest dish of pastry, to the girl who lays the cloth in the best manner, and for the best-ironed collar. The girls are encouraged to join the Children's Scripture Union, and in many other ways the influence for good over them does not end with the domestic economy taught. F. H.

POVERTY AND DRINK.

Dear Sir,—I have read with much interest your recent articles bearing on the relations between rich and poor, employers and labourers, and especially the one by Mr. Archibald Brown in a recent number. It is with no wish to diminish the effect of his appeal, with which I heartily sympathise, that I venture to point out what seems a little misapprehension on his part in regard to the position maintained by total abstainers. He appears to think that in saying "nine-tenths" of our abject wretchedness and poverty are the result of the drinking habits of the people, we suppose that all the sufferers are themselves drunkards, or the families of drunkards. This would be, as Mr. Brown truly says, "a slander upon tens of thousands." But this we have never said or imagined.

We do, however, maintain that if the vast sum annually spent on intoxicating liquor, amounting to between £3 and £4 for every man, woman, and child in the country, were diverted to legitimate trade in food, clothing, furniture, and other useful articles, such a stimulus would be given to our home trade that we should hear no more of over-production. Such an increase in the demand for labour would follow, that starvation wages would be an impossibility; and all the social changes, for which Mr. Brown and we are alike longing, would be facilitated. Yours respectfully, York. Fielden Thorp.

[Other correspondents write to the same effect, while still others refer to other branches of this deeply-important subject; we hope to deal with them all in future papers.—Ed.]

A DISCLAIMER.

Dear Sir,—A circular having been issued by the Rev. H. Sheridan Patterson, of Deane Vicarage, Bolton, Lancashire, inviting the formation of a new Young Women's Christian Association on a narrowed basis; and the names of Mrs. Pennefather, Miss Lucy Moore, and Miss Bernard having been introduced into the proposal wholly without their sanction: I ask the favour of your inserting this letter for the purpose of intimating that these ladies have no sympathy whatever with Mr. Patterson's movement.—I am, dear sir, yours truly,

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—On the 6th inst. another very profitable all-day meeting was held here. Helpful addresses were given by Rev. J. H. Topping, Rev. J. Wilkinson, and Miss Mason, and much prayer was made on behalf of Christian work and workers. Testimonies were also given to the faithfulness of God in providing for the needs of his trusting children.

SOME CURIOUS AND STARTLING STATISTICS have been gathered by Lucy M. Hall, M.D., medical superintendent of the Massachusetts Reformatory Prison at Sherburne, concerning the habits as to drinking of inmates of that institution. It appears that, out of a certain 200 inebriate women, 128 began their ruinous career with beer, 37 with whisky, 20 with wine, 8 with gin. Ninety-one began at the house of friends, 64 in saloons. Sixty-seven were Irish, 52 Irish-Americans, 7 Negroes, &c. The diseased and depraved condition of these women was appalling. Many of those committed began drinking while employed at the mills, in the neighbouring dram-shops, and it is a grievous fault of mill-owners that they permit these infamous places to debauch their operatives. —New York Independent.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS.

CASE of Mr. SHAKESPEARE BENNETT, of MIDDLETON, AND OTHER CASES.

This patient commenced my treatment in September last when suffering greatly with Bronchitis—the breathing being the most distressing symptom. He gradually improved under my advice, given by letters in October, November, and December. On the 12th of January his wife writes :—" I have the pleasure to inform you that my dear husband, thank God, is very well. He has found so much good from you he would like your photograph to hang up in our house. Nothing has equalled your medicine."

Speaking of other cases in the neighbourhood, Mrs. Bennett says: "An elderly woman, known to us here, vomited a large quantity of blood. The doctor said Consumption would follow if not arrested. I advised her to try your medicine. She did so, and found relief at once, and has been able to continue her work. There is also a Mr. T., of Oldham, who is taking it with good effect. The second dose gave him relief. May you long be spared," &c.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

RESCUE WORK AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

AN UNEXPECTED DIFFICULTY

Our Christian Home for hopeful men, No. 10, Brooke-street, Holborn, which has been such an untold blessing in this Rescue Work, is about to be taken down, and we are compelled to get out almost at once; but, just at this moment of embarrassment, large and most suitable Premises have been offered to us on advantageous terms immediately opposite the house we are leaving, but some £500 at least will be needed for necessary alterations and repairs. This sum we are most anxious to raise altogether apart from our General Funds, so that our Daily Work of Rescue may not be hampered in consequence of this extra expense. Golden opportunities of winning the Criminal Classes for God's service are before us. Who among our many Friends will help us at once to raise this £500?

Sincerely yours,
GEORGE HATTON,
Superintendent St. Giles' Christian Mission.

Working Men's Mission,

COLLINGWOOD STREET, NEW CUT.

Superintendents: The Bros. T. & J. YOUNG, 16, Queen-st., Blackfriars-rd., S.E.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.
Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & CO., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

This work has been carried on by the Bros, Young and helpers for the past seven years, and has been from the ommencement self-supporting.

We have secured the whole of the premises for a term of twenty-one years, and purpose making extensive alterations in order to accommodate the people that are pressing us on all sides. To carry out this object we earnestly appeal to warm-hearted Christian friends for help. A Finance Committee has been appointed to supervise the income and expenditure.

This Work is recommended by Mr. C. H. SPURGEON.

"Westwood, Beulah-hill, Upper Norwood, Jan. 22, 1885.

"The work done by our gracious God through the BROTHERS YOUNG and their warm-hearted friends is one which causes me great joy. There has been a real Working-men's Mission, and it has actually reached the persons aimed at; indeed, it sprang up among working-people, and it has been carried on by working-people.

"It is a movement which aims at no creation of division, or at opposing existing churches; but we all welcome it, and wish it the richest prosperity. Just now help is needed, for the friends must get a lease of their premises, and meet many expenses. I am sure that any money put to this work by the Lord's stewards will be well laid out, and will yield a large interest in the good of men and the glory of God. It is with peculiar pleasure that I commend the work in Collingwood-street, New-cut, to the generous help of all Christian people. C. H. SPURGEON."

Donations will be received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN; or may be sent direct to the Treasurer or Superintendents at 16, Queen-street, Blackfriars, S.E.

WHAT READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN" SAY ABOUT MR. B. COPSON GARRATT'S TREATMENT.

A lady at Kensington, who will willingly answer any inquiries, writes, October 16, 1884:

"For some months I suffered severely and increasingly from weakness in my left arm and knees, the primary cause being neuralgia and failing strength in the whole system. I took the advice of several physicians, but by degrees entirely lost all power in the arm. I am thankful to say I had not used your appliances a week before I lost the pain in the arm, and it has improved till I have nearly recovered the full use of it, and my general health and strength have improved wonderfully. I have recommended your treatment to several friends, who have all derived benefit; and will do so to all who suffer from nervous and other ailments. I cannot speak too highly of the skill, care and attention of Mr. Garratt's lady assistant."

From Mr. W. HARDING, Prospect-terrace, Chesham, Bucks.

January 4, 1885.

"I have been thinking of writing to you for a long time with reference to the result of your treatment of my case. The benefit I have derived from it has astonished me, although when I commenced it I did so with a firm conviction in my mind that it was hopeless to expect any relief, and without any confidence in the remedy to help me. However, I followed your instructions, and speedily found more advantage in doing so than I had found from anything else I had tried during all the fifteen years I had been suffering. I feel very grateful for your help, and can assure you that I shall always have the greatest faith in your treatment, and shall not fail to speak in its favour to all sufferers as I have opportunity."

Let no one despair of checking the progress of organic disease until he has tested the electrician's medical skill. Although he may have tried Magnetic remedies in vain, he has yet to learn the value of the restorer, properly applied. By putting himself in communication with us he may obtain fuller information on the method of treatment with which long practice and continued research have familiarised us.

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the Healing Art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send to any address a private list of 950 names as referees.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

MADAGASCAR AND FRANCE.

With some account of the Island, its People, its Resources, and Development.

By GEORGE A. SHAW, F.Z.S., London Mission, Tamatave.
With many Illustrations and a Map.

The work seeks not only to set forth a true historical sketch of the connection of France with Madagascar from the earliest times to the present, by which it will be seen how little claim the former has to the island, or to the sympathies of its inhabitants; but also to answer various questions which are arising in the minds of many with regard to the country—its products and adaptability for foreign enterprise and commerce—and its people, their character, habits, employments, and advance in civilisation and Christianity.

The volume is of unusual interest, possessing in the narratives the vividness of an eye-witness and the accuracy of one who writes from first-hand knowledge. A personal interest attaches to the work from the prominent part played by Mr. Shaw himself in many of the scenes described. The book contains a large new map of Madagascar, and many illustrations from original sketches or photographs, finely engraved by E. Whymper.

The Christian.

POVERTY AND INTEMPERANCE.

IT is difficult to imagine how anyone could deal thoroughly with the pressing question of the prevailing poverty of the present day without looking very closely into the allied subject of our national intemperance, and yet two able writers who have made the most powerful and engrossing modern contributions to the literature of the topic, have managed to discuss very successfully the economic condition of the nation without in any way referring to the great drink question.

It is evident, therefore, that to intemperance we cannot fairly attribute nine-tenths of the misery which unfortunately is so visible everywhere around us; but, on the other hand, with intemperance almost forced upon the people by law, with numerous Acts upon our Statute Books which seem to have been framed with the view of promoting that vice, and with a national drink bill of £136,000,000 per annum, it would be folly to endeavour to prove that drink is not responsible for a very large proportion of the poverty and misery of the people.

It is usual to look at the question from only one point of view, that of the sum spent upon drink, amounting as it does to between three and four pounds yearly for each man, woman, and child in these islands, as Mr. Thorp pointed out last week; and glancing at the subject merely in that limited way, it is nevertheless impossible to come to any other conclusion than that a change in our national habits as regards the consumption of intoxicants would necessarily imply a radical, and almost instantaneous, improvement in the condition of the labouring and the middle classes. The expenditure upon the necessaries of life of even one-half of the sum now spent upon drink would undoubtedly give such an impetus to trade as would go far to dispose of the over-production which of late has become almost the normal condition of things; and, necessarily, with a larger steady demand for skilled labour, wages, now reduced to starvation point by fierce competition for employment, would rise materially.

There are, however, other equally potent ways in which the national interests are injuriously affected by the manufacture and consumption of drink, perhaps one of the most important being that of the reduction of the food supplies by the destruction annually of millions of bushels of corn. Years ago, and long before the drink traffic had assumed such appalling proportions, Paley in his "Moral Philosophy" referred to the distillation of spirits from bread corn as a crime, it being a waste and misapplication of the productions of the earth which, from reason and revelation, it appears to be God's intention should be used for the sustentation of human life; and very forcibly was this view illustrated in 1847, during the terrible famine in Ireland, which resulted in the death of hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children, when the distillers and brewers nevertheless held and destroyed the usual quantity of grain.

The small proportion of labour engaged in the manufacture of intoxicating drink helps to limit, too, the demand for labour, and the consumer contributes far less to the support of labour than he would if he expended an equal amount upon articles of intrinsic value. Of every pound spent upon drink not more than sixpence goes to labour, whereas of every pound spent upon silk or cutlery over seven shillings reach the workmen.

Then, again, there is the loss of labour in consequence of intemperance, a loss which our best statisticians estimate at one day in six, equivalent to nearly one hundred and thirteen millions of pounds per annum.

Taking these side issues alone, and not considering the admitted loss of life, it must be acknowledged that the expenditure of one hundred and thirty millions per annum only very partially represents the cost of our intemperate habits; and, undoubtedly, it is upon the labouring classes and the poor that the greater weight of the burden rests, for to them the money's worth of their small wages is of vital importance, and any injurious interference with food, or the demand for labour, or the remuneration of labour, affects them not only immediately but lastingly. That many of the labouring poor contribute much to their own poverty is only too evident, but in looking at this great and terribly painful question, it should never be forgotten that to the insanitary condition of their dwellings, the insufficiency of their food, the wretchedness and hopelessness of their surroundings, and to the painful fact that the State is deeply interested in extending their temptations, most of their intemperance is due. If drinking causes poverty, poverty and its almost inseparable companions cause the craving for drink.

Any man, therefore, who is labouring to reduce the one is labouring to lessen the other; and as the drink question, like all other economic questions affecting the welfare of the people, is one for the Christian, it is incumbent upon each follower of Jesus to consider what is his or her position with regard to it, and whether that position is such as should be held by one who is professing to copy Christ.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE BIBLE, which is the joint property of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, is announced to be published shortly after Easter. It will be issued separately or in parallel columns with the authorised version. Editions have been prepared in four different types, at prices from 3s. 6d. to £6 5s. each.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Anniversary meetings of the London and the Baptist Missionary Societies have recently been held here. At the former the Rev. T. C. Edge and Mrs. Edge, of Hong Kong, and Rev. R. Robinson, and at the latter Dr. J. T. Comber, from the Congo, represented the parent societies. The interest in Foreign Missions was deepened in many hearts, and will, it is hoped, result not only in increased sympathy and help, but in some giving themselves to the work which is the Church's special business in the world.

MONEY FOR THE KING'S CAUSE.

DEAR SIR,—The question, How to Collect Money for the King's Cause? has pressed hard upon me of late, for I have felt myself called to go forth to the great Christian public and collect money to house the poor but worthy flock which it is my privilege to lead. I find that, in this difficult business of collecting, I have made many mistakes. These errors, and my necessities as well, have driven me to much prayer and thought. This, again, has resulted in clearer and freer conceptions of my whole position.

I now seek to crystalise some of these ideas. Though I could not say, even to myself, how far I have really made these thoughts my own by a resolute embodiment of them in action, still I have found them of immense service, and so I pass them on to others for what they are worth. They are neither new in substance nor original in form. Yet such truths are sorely needed, as the multiplied abominations of modern church bazaars abundantly testify.

Rule 1. Be quite sure that your undertaking is of God. Settle this first, beyond all doubt.

2. Be equally sure of your own thorough consecration to the work in hand, so that your honesty as an advocate of it may be above all question.

3. Cherish a deep sense of your privilege in being allowed to serve the king, and the king's people, in this matter.

4. Remember always that the work is his, not yours. Carry no burdens. "Be careful for nothing."

5. "Pray without ceasing." Believe as much in a particular and personal, as in a universal Providence. Therefore, consult your God about every appeal you make, both as to spirit and time and manner.

6. Learn to rejoice in difficulties. According to the King's design, they are only the means by which he manifests his larger kindness and power. The greater they are, the more room for him to reveal himself. "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe thou shouldest see the glory of God?"

7. Never forget your dignity as the King's servant—(1) by asking help in such a way that men may think you neglected by your Lord; (2) by appealing to unworthy motives; (3) by palliating sin through fear of offending possible subscribers; (4) or by assuming a friendly regard that is not genuine. Such pretence is most unworthy of any man; how much more of a royal servant acting in the King's service? Ask with the dignity of a man of God.

8. Remember the King's supreme law of love. Ask help of others as you would like them to ask it of you. Don't worry them. Make it easy for them to refuse. Avoid asking a man when he is in a corner, and cannot refuse with good grace, e.g., when you are either his host, or his guest, or when you have just paid him a bill. Respect his feelings and his liberty of judgment, and so state your case that he may give with as large an exercise of generosity and kindly feeling as the case admits of.

9. Lastly, in all your collecting, rest in the Lord Himself. When disappointed, rest in his faithfulness; when successful, rest not at all in your success, but in the love of which it is a proof.

"He that trusteth in the Lord, mercy (or by a translation equally good, 'loving kindness') shall compass him about."

THE COMING OF THE LORD.—I.

QUESTIONS ANSWEED.*

By Rev. NEWMAN HALL.

AGAINST the expectation of a visible Advent of Christ, prior to the Millennium and his personal reign on earth, grave objections are felt by many who no less "love his appearing" than those who cherish this nearer hope. Let us briefly glance at some of them.

"Why should not the presence of Christ by his Spirit be regarded as his Advent?" Because more than this is expressed in his Word, and was expected by the Apostles and early Church. The "same Jesus" who ascended to heaven is to be seen "in like manner" coming from heaven. "Every eye shall see Him."

"Is not such a universal vision of Christ physically impossible?" It is not necessary that every eye should behold Him at the same moment. The natural sun is beheld within twenty-four hours from all quarters of the globe. We are not to limit a miraculous event by present phenomena. "With God all things are possible."

"It is derogatory to suppose that the Lord will again humble Himself to human conditions by dwelling with men." This is not supposed. As after the Resurrection He appeared to his disciples in human form, but not subjected to material laws, so during his personal reign it may be universally known, by his various appearances, that Christ is verily amongst men. He will reign in Jerusalem; if not in the reconstructed city in Palestine, certainly in the heavenly Zion, the Church of God. All his saints throughout the world may occasionally behold Him, and always be conscious that He is near, and may reveal Himself.

"Faith without vision is superior to sight, for He said, Blessed are they who have not seen and yet have believed." But Saul of Tarsus was converted through the instrumentality of external vision, and his subsequent career did not suggest inferiority in the method of his spiritual birth. And all believers expect to see Him in glory, and regard this not as a retrogression, but as the consummation of their spiritual perfection and bliss.

"God will never return from the building to the scaffolding, from the winged insect to the creeping caterpillar." But the use of outward signs is not a going backward. Christ refused the signs which the hypocritical Pharisees demanded, but even to them He gave the sign of the prophet Jonas when He rose from the dead. His Ascension strengthened the faith of the disciples, and "Signs and wonders wrought by their hands" aided their ministry of the Word. As a sign from heaven heralded the giving of the Law, and as the Resurrection prefaced the publication of the Gospel to the world, so "The sign of the Son of Man in heaven" to introduce the Millennial reign, would be not a new method, but a further development of the old.

"A visible Advent implies that the Spirit and the Word are ineffectual agencies." These were in operation under the Old Testament, yet signs were added when, at the first Advent, the Spirit and the Word were attended with an access of power. So, hereafter, the signs of the second Advent will not supersede, but give emphasis to these same influences.

"These views discourage effort in the use of present agencies." On the contrary. The little progress compared with the population; the wide prevalence of heathenism and cruelty, wickedness and woe, after eighteen centuries of Gospel preaching—are more apt to discourage efforts, than the certainty of Christ soon appearing to bring the work to a successful issue. What real disciple would be influenced by the argument that if Christ Himself is coming to secure the conversion of the world, we may cease from our work? Every true Christian loves his Lord, who said, "If ye love Me, keep my commandments;" and his command is, "Preach the Gospel to every creature." He says to each of us, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard." What He will do is one thing, what He bids me do is another. How can my love for his appearing and my hope that it may be near, induce me to be unfaithful to my allegiance and negligent of his commands? By desisting from our own work because we expect He will soon come to perform his, we render ourselves unprepared for the appearing which we profess to expect and desire. He said, "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing,"—doing, not dreaming; fulfilling his own allotted task now, not speculating on what the Master will do hereafter.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION.

A VERY successful meeting in aid of the Paris City Mission was held at the Wesleyan Chapel, Rue Roquepine, last week. The Mission, which is known in French as the Comité Auxiliaire d'Evangélisation de Paris, was established five years ago for the purpose of placing the services of lay missionaries at the disposal of evangelical churches, the latter contributing one-third of their salaries. The funds expended by the Mission upon its seven evangelists and their work amount annually to about 16,000f. or 18,000f., but owing to the limited income at its disposal, applications for lay help from five different pastors in Paris have had to be declined. An earnest appeal is now being made to French Protestants, the bulk of the money having hitherto been sent over by the London Committee, presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury.

Stirring addresses were delivered last week by several ministers present, and by Mr. W. J. Lockie, one of the secretaries. Dr. MacRae pointed to some of the extraordinary difficulties and discouragements with which home missionaries had to contend in a city like Paris, owing, he declared, to howling freethought on the one hand, and poverty, hunger, and superstition on the other. Rev. Mr. Gibson, who founded a preaching station some years ago at Chantilly, mentioned the not generally known fact that in that very small town there are now some five or six hundred English people connected with the stables and races; he urged the expediency of raising £100 as soon as possible, to establish in their midst a regular branch of the Paris Mission. The address of Mr. W. J. Lockie, Secretary, is 71, Rue des Batignolles, Paris.

"THE CHRISTIAN" FOR INDIAN MISSIONARIES.—Dear Sir,—Kindly permit me to acknowledge the receipt of The Christian from many unknown friends in response to a letter I inserted in your paper a few months ago. I have to thank those friends, not only in my own name, but also in the name of many others to whom I am enabled to send copies. If friends would favour me with a postcard, I would send them the name and address of some worker in India to whom they might send their copies direct, instead of sending all to me, as at present. This would, on many accounts, be a better plan, as my own address is likely, at any time, to be changed. I may be excused if I again refer to the matter of postage. The Indian postage of newspapers is 1½d. I have known so many instances of unknown friends sending papers underpaid.—Yours faithfully,

George H. Parsons, C.M.S.

SUNSET SONG.

DYING daylight saintly
  Quivers in the west,
Parting sunbeams faintly
  Kiss the ocean's breast.
Rose clouds shy and tender,
  Banks of blushing light,
Tell of day's surrender
  To the coming light.

Through the veilèd glory
  Of the sunset calm,
Crested billows hoary
  Chant an evening psalm;
Slowly fading azure
  Melts to paler gold,
Evening shadows gather
  O'er the waters cold.

Daylight, past recalling,
  Sinks till out of sight,
Twilight shadows falling
  Usher in the night.
Gloom and darkness weary
  Sadden earth and sky,
Looming storm-clouds dreary
  Blackly hasten by.

* * * * *

Though the daylight dying
  From thy life be sped,
Though night's shadows flying Gather o'er thy head.
God's own golden morning
  Shortly will be here,
Sunset but gives warning
  Of a sunrise near!

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

SOME extracts from the letter of a lady missionary of the Indian Female Normal School Society, in Bombay, will be read with interest.

"My school is getting on very well indeed. It is most encouraging. I am sorry to say I have no Christian teacher; it is impossible to get one. I have a very good Pundit and two Parsee girls, sisters, as teachers, who were my pupils for three years. They have a good influence on the children. Of course I give all the religious instruction. The average attendance is fifty-five; eighteen are girls, whose ages vary from ten to fourteen, which, considering they are Mohammedans, is most encouraging.

"Lately there has been a school for Khoja girls opened quite close to mine, and I feared that it would take away my girls, especially as it was started by their own people, and assisted by the Government, but as yet I have not lost one girl. All the children tell their parents that if they were taken from the old school, they would remain at home. We who go into native houses notice how almost impossible it appears to make any lasting impression on the women; they say 'education is all very well for our children, we are too old to learn.'

"If we want to raise the mass of the people either in England or in India morally or spiritually, we must catch the children. Would that Christians would realise how the labours of missionaries are trebled by the want of Christian junior teachers, both native or Eurasian. The Indian Female Normal School Society is fully awake to the need, and there is no lack of girls to be trained; but there are no funds, and friends seem blind to the fact."

Will not some of the Lord's stewards see in this a call to them to help? The office of the Society is at 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand; the hon. treasurer is the Hon. A. Kinnaird.

MR. HENRY VARLEY, says the New York Evangelist, omitted his labours recently in Kansas City for a day and visited the College at Parkville. At the close of the usual noonday family prayers, he addressed the students for almost an hour on the reading for the day, the fifty-first Psalm. The afternoon was also spent in talking and praying with the eager company of teachers and students.

For the Young.

TO A VIOLET.

TINY floweret though thou be,
Emblem of humility,
I can learn somewhat of thee,
Little violet!

Some may tread thee 'neath their feet,
Pluck the rarer flowers they meet,
But I love thy fragrance sweet,
O violet!

Through the sunshine and the blast,
Fruitful soil or dreary waste,
Not a single fear thou hast,
Little violet!

If the Father cares for thee,
Watches o'er thy destiny,
Will He not provide for me,
O violet?

POLA.

NELLY'S MISTAKE.

Children, as well as grown-up people, can best prove that they are Christians by living consistent lives, by giving up their own wills, and trying to please mother and the little ones. If children would only think how glad it makes the Lord Jesus to see them unselfish, I am sure they would try more and more to overcome their faults. The Lord has said, "He that is faithful over few things, I will make him ruler over many things" (Matt xxv. 21). If you cheerfully do the little things that come in your every-day life at home, the Lord will give you greater work to do for Him when you are bigger.

A little girl was asked by mother to take baby out to the garden and amuse him while she rested.

"Where is nurse?" said Nelly, crossly.

"This is nurse's holiday," mother answered; "and baby was so fretful last night, I could not sleep, and must take some rest before your aunt comes."

Nelly took her little brother out, but it was with such a cross face. Baby cried till mother had to come out and take him. Now, if Nelly had, with a cheerful face, amused little Archie, though she had been disturbed from a very nice book, mother would have had her sleep which she needed so much.

Nelly was indeed a Christian, but she was not letting her light shine just then. When she saw mother take baby, she was very sorry she had not amused him. But baby would not come to her again when she tried to take him, and mother had to put him to bed herself, though she was feeling so very badly.

Aunt Mary was quite shocked when she saw her. "What is the matter?" she asked her little niece. "Oh! Auntie," cried Nelly, "mother could not sleep last night, baby was so tiresome, and she asked me to mind him in the garden to-day while she rested; and I would not play with him. I felt so angry because mother had asked me when I was reading the book you gave me on my birthday. Oh! Auntie, will Jesus be angry? I wish now I had amused Archie!"

"Nelly, dear," said her aunt, "I am sure Jesus is grieved when He sees little girls selfish. Ask Him to forgive you, which He will freely do. If you sit by baby's cradle now, and hush him to sleep when he stirs, I shall see what can be done for mother's headache."

"Oh! thank you, Auntie," Nelly cried, kissing her aunt and running away. She sat next little Archie, and with a happy face hushed him to sleep when he became restless, till nurse came home and relieved her of her charge.

When little Nelly knelt by her bedside that night, she prayed the Lord Jesus to make her more watchful over self, so that every one should see she was trying to serve the Lord Jesus in her daily life; for she knew that even a child is known by her doings.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

FEBRUARY 26.—MATTHEW XV. 29–39.

v. 32.—"They have nothing to eat."—Jesus knew their need; so He does ours, whatever it may be; and for Him to know the need of his children is to supply it (Matt. vi. 32, 33). A little lad during the American War was his widowed mother's comfort and joy. One day, as the poor woman was trying to scrape the flour from the sides and bottom of the barrel, to help out the day's supply, the lad cried: "Mother, we shall have some more very soon now, I know!" "Why do you say so, my boy?" asked the mother. "Why, because you've got to scraping the barrel. I believe God always hears you scraping the barrel, and that's a sign to Him you want another." And before the day was over the fresh supply had come.

v. 36.—"He took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks."—Jesus had a thankful heart, so should we have. "In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

FEBRUARY 27.—MATTHEW XVI. 1–12.

v. 1.—"The Pharisees also with the Sadducees came."—The Pharisees were a proud and boastful sect of the Jews, taking great pleasure in their own works, and separating themselves from others as though they were holier than all beside; but it was all outside show, their hearts were far from God. The Sadducees were almost infidels, not believing in the Word of God or in a future state; hence they were careless and indifferent about all spiritual things. Both these sects hated Christ, and only united to try and injure his cause, and get rid of Him. We have need to be on our guard against all self-righteousness and unbelief. That is what Jesus meant when He said, in verse 6: "Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and the Sadducees." Leaven in the Word of God represents evil things to be guarded against. Read 1 Cor. v. 6–8.

FEBRUARY 28.—MATTHEW XVI. 13–28.

v. 16.—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—The word "Christ" means "the Anointed One."

"The holy oil was poured on Aaron's head,
And wide around its balmy fragrance spread:
Then might the priest of God his sacred chambers tread.

With flowing horn to David came the seer,
And hailed him king, to lead God's people dear,
To shepherd them in love, and rule them in his fear.

On prophets, too, was poured in olden day
The consecrating oil, a sign that they
The Spirit's teaching voice in all things should obey.

The veil is lifted—ancient shadows flee—
Of God anointed, One is crowned to be Prophet, and Priest, and King—behold in Christ the three!"

L. Squire.

MARCH 1.—MATTHEW XVII. 1–13.

2 Peter i. 16—18 should be read with this portion. We there learn that the Transfiguration was designed to give a foresight of Jesus as He will be seen when He comes again in glory. He will not be a "Man of Sorrows" then, but will appear as "the King in his beauty." Are you looking for Him as those do who "love his appearing"?

v. 5.—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—God's testimony to Jesus as his own sent One, and best beloved One. A similar testimony was borne at his baptism in Jordan (ch. iii. 17). It is said in John iii. 35, "The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand." (See also John v. 20. Read Isa. xlii. 1.)

v. 5.—"Hear ye Him."—All who are the sheep of Christ do this; they hear his voice, and follow Him as their guide. They are blessed indeed who do so; they shall one day see Him in his glory and be like Him, and be with Him for ever. (Phil. iii. 20-21; 1 John iii. 1, 2.)

MARCH 2.—MATTHEW XVII. 14–27.

v. 15.—"Lord, have mercy on my son."—A father's prayer for an only son. What a sore trial it was for him to have had but one son, and he so terribly afflicted; but see how soon his sorrow was turned into joy when he came to Jesus. It is said, "The child was cured from that very hour." Not only in that hour, but from it; that is, no more to be so afflicted, he was permanently cured. Jesus can thus heal the sin-sick soul that trusts in Him, and when He heals, He does it so that the power of sin and Satan are utterly overthrown, and the soul set free for ever from their bonds.

v. 27.—"Cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up."—See here the proof of Christ's Divine knowledge and power over all things. Bengel points out six miraculous points in this fact: (1) That something must be caught; (2) That it must be caught immediately; (3) That it must contain money; (4) That the first fish must contain money; (5) That the sum found should be exactly sufficient; (6) That this should be in the fish's mouth.

MARCH 3.—MATTHEW XVIII. 1–14.

v. 2.—"Jesus called a little child unto Him."—And He calls little children still.

"He now to you is calling,
Oh, hearken to his voice;
He fain would have you trust Him,
And in his love rejoice."

v. 10.—"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones."—It is said that when Hans Christian Andersen, the Danish author, was a little boy, he was one day out with his mother and some other poor neighbours, gleaning in the field of a man who was known to be very harsh and cruel. They saw him coming, and all started to run away. But Hans' clumsy wooden shoes came off; the stubble, or short stumps of the grain-stalks, which had been left by the reapers, hurt his tender feet, so that he could not keep up with the others, and he found he must be caught. The rough owner of the field was very near, and could now almost reach him with his heavy whip; when Hans, whose hopeless case now suddenly filled him with new courage, stopped and turned, and looking into the man's face, said, "How dare you strike me, when God can see you?" The anger of his pursuer was subdued at once. Instead of striking the boy, he gently stroked his cheeks, asked his name, and gave him some money. The truth, of which little Hans had reminded him when about to do a mean and cruel act, seemed to make him ashamed of it at once, and so caused him to speak and act kindly.

MARCH 4.—MATTHEW XVIII. 15–22.

v. 19.—"I say unto you."—It makes all the difference who says a thing. Now, the Lord Jesus says over and again, "I say unto you." It was not only that He did say it a long time ago; but that whenever you look at the words, He is saying it still. For his words are not dead; they are live words; just as much as if He had said them a minute ago. For He says they are spirit and life, and that they shall never pass away. So when you come to "I say unto you," remember Jesus means it, and that He really means you to pay the same attention to what comes next as if He were speaking aloud to you. Ask for the Holy Spirit before you begin to read, and then say, as Habakkuk did, "I will watch to see what He will say unto me."—Miss Havergal.

SOLDIERS AT SINGAPORE.—Mr. A. J. Bridges, Schoolmaster, 1st R. Inniskilling Fusiliers, Tanghis Barracks, Singapore, desires to thank those of our readers who have kindly sent literature for the use of the soldiers of this regiment and their families. The Religious Tract Society have made a grant of books, which are lent to the men in turns and are much appreciated. Mr. Bridges states that the Gospel services, Bible-classes, and Temperance meetings are well attended. He hopes that Christian friends in this country will continue to forward supplies of good periodical literature for the use of the regiment in their exile from home.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

RESPONSIBLE for what? Responsible that some MILLIONS of immortals are left in hopeless darkness—almost no effort made for their enlightenment. But surely, it may be said, these millions must be in the interior of the Dark Continent, or in Central Asia, or in some of the outlying territories of the vast Chinese Empire; and allowance must be made for the difficulties of any enterprise undertaken for their benefit. Difficulty would hardly be a sufficient excuse for neglect when the Captain of our salvation says, "Go" and "Lo, I am with you;" but these millions are not in such isolated positions. They are in the track of our great ocean steamers. Many thousands of these millions are brought in contact with us as fellow-subjects of our Queen—they help to increase the commerce and wealth of this great empire—and yet almost nothing is done for their spiritual benefit.

The Malayan Peninsula, with its millions of Mahommedans, has at present no missionary labouring directly among the natives. Missionaries there are at Penang and Singapore, with out-stations at other places, who labour among the thousands of Chinese and other races, as well as the Europeans who reside there; and these missionaries do all that it is possible for them to do in dealing with the natives they meet, but the testimony of the oldest of these missionaries is that he has not known of the conversion of a Malay during a long experience. How can they believe that which they do not hear? How can they hear without preachers? Why should a few men be expected to speak and preach in all the tongues of Babel? And seeing that work among Mahommedans is confessedly such difficult work, why should not men give themselves specially to that work, and see whether the Gospel is not for the Malayan, as for other races, the power of God unto salvation? Upon whom rests the responsibility? Christ says to his people, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." Who will witness for Christ among the Mahommedans of the Malayan Peninsula? All that is needed is that some of those who find such help in singing hymns of consecration and faith should put their consecration vows into practical effect, and go and live lives of faith among these poor needy souls.

It may be hard to fix responsibility, but that someone is responsible for the preaching of the Gospel to these Mahommedans is as certain as that Christ is the light of the world, or that He commanded his Gospel to be preached to every creature. When will the Church, when will individual Christians, feel and acknowledge their responsibility? We say, and say truly, Christ is coming, and "the time is short." May God's own Spirit work so mightily in the hearts of some of his servants that very soon a satisfactory answer may be given to the question—Who is responsible?

BLOOMSBURY INSTITUTION, BIRMINGHAM.—The annual meeting of the Bloomsbury Institution, held last week, afforded evidence, if any were needed, of how much one earnest man may do to ameliorate the condition of his fellows even when he is not aided by large monetary means. Some twenty-five years ago Mr. David Smith, residing in Bloomsbury-street among the poor, in an unostentatious manner, constructed a room on a portion of his garden with a view to the moral and mental improvement of the young men of the district. From that small beginning arose a work which forms one of the features of the philanthropic life of Birmingham. As was pointed out by Alderman S. Edwards, who presided, every effort of Mr. Smith's has been crowned with success, probably because they have had his own sound practical guidance and presence, and have been inspired by a pure desire to benefit the more unfortunate among mankind. If we had more David Smiths we should need fewer gaols, judges, and workhouses.—Midland Echo.

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.

ASIATICS.

A MORE important field of labour, inviting the enterprise of the Church of Christ, can scarcely be found for the evangelisation of the heathen than is found in our midst among the many thousands of Asiatics in this great London. Science, curiosity, and trade have attracted across the seas men in every position of life, professing every error of the East, to see the wonderful city of the West. Brahmins are met, still wearing their vaunted sacred cord, but concealed; Buddhists, professing faith in their shorn priests; Sikhs, who believe the teachings of Dàdà Vànik to be a divine revelation, and many other forms of idolatry from heathendom beyond the Indus.

The greatest influx, however, is from Mohammedanism. Believers in the Arabian prophet reach us in large numbers, bringing with them all the bigotry and error of their creed. No error has been more hostile to the Christian faith than this. The hostility is particularly levelled at the foundation of our hope and salvation—the divinity and sacrifice of Christ.

Few have been found, till of late years, sufficiently hopeful of success among them to attempt war with these enemies of the truth. Among those who first entered on the enterprise is the London City Mission. More than thirty years have passed away since the Society's missionary visited the various crews afloat and explored the abodes of vice and crime, in those localities where Asiatic life gave an unsavoury character to the neighbourhood and left an impress on the rising population. Dens for opium-smokers, gamblers, and evils unnameable were visited by night and day with the hope that the dense darkness might be penetrated by some rays of heavenly light. The natural fruits of such vice were ruin, disease, and death, generally within the walls of the workhouse or the prison, and too often on the frozen footpath. In such localities these victims were followed with the Word of Life and the proclamation of salvation on repentance for sin, and faith in the crucified One.

Here is a visit among them at their chief rendezvous. On a sunny Lord's Day, while the bells summoned the worshipper to the house of prayer, and happy hearts joined in the praise of the Most High, the missionary took the opportunity of holding a meeting in one of those haunts. It was down a blind court, where a ricketty door led into a dilapidated, disused skittle-ground, belonging to a shabby-looking public-house that struggled for existence, though it was dignified by the name of the Royal Sovereign. The shaky door being pushed on one side, about thirty men, mostly Mohammedans, were dimly seen in the smoke of the fàgree from the hookas. One muscular Asiatic was beating a tom-tom to the notes of a zither, while an Indian song was being sung, which narrated the adventures of a prince who imperilled his life to secure his bride.

To this desecration of the best day in the week the missionary listened till his opportunity occurred, and he then offered to tell them about another Rajah's son who left his palace in search of his bride. The tom-tom was silenced, the offer was accepted, and their attention was secured for the story of the Prince who left the shining attendants of his Father's house; how He sojourned in the wilderness; how He found his bride poor, and enriched her; in rags, and clothed her; surrounded by enemies who were conquered by the loving Prince; and how He returned to his Father's house with rapturous songs of triumph. The story was finally explained by Ps. xlv., and other references. In this scene of riot and mirth a dying man was found, who expired a few days later under better circumstances.

"Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" What has been the yield of this unpromising vineyard? Temporally and spiritually it has been good so far as one may presume to judge, so good indeed that the missionary has been charmed to continue his work for more than thirty years. He rejoices in the scars of the campaign, and the special deliverances by which his life has been saved on two perilous occasions. But the prisons have been relieved of their tenants. Those plague-spots of vice and death have disappeared. The sick and dying have been visited and told of the love of God in Christ. The district is entirely changed for the better.

And the spiritual outcome of the long struggle is satisfactory, though the reaper would fain wish for a greater in-gathering. It is no mean achievement that has made Christianity an acknowledged faith among the heathen. Many a stern battle has been fought to establish the necessity and effect of the Cross, and now the acuteness of the hostility against the Truth has much relaxed. Belief in Christ is better understood, and meets with a toleration and even respect that would have surprised us in the early part of the campaign. The missionary has grown old in the work, testifying to Hindoos and Mohammedans God's remedy for sin.

Doubtless the harvest is not to be measured by the sheaves we have gathered on English soil. The influence of a work like this on the Eastern world can better be imagined than told, therefore we commend it to the God of all grace, and leave the harvest for a later day.

A VILLAGE REVIVAL.

DEAR SIR,—Last Wednesday night I had the pleasure of seeing a sight, and hearing testimonies which may be of some interest to you and your readers. With your kind permission I will briefly relate what I saw and heard, which I feel sure will inspire with fresh zeal lay workers in God's vineyard.

In a chapel in the village of Aston Abbotts, Bucks, a most successful fortnight's Mission services were then brought to a close. These services had been conducted by Mr. G. D. Shipley, of Welwyn, Herts, of whose village work I had often heard, and had seen some pleasing results of his labours in other districts; but I had never seen him personally before. I happened to enter the building when the meeting was half over to find it packed in every part with country folk eagerly listening to the testimonies of new converts. I believe I am within the number when I say that while I was present some twelve or thirteen persons declared before their former companions that they had given their hearts to Christ.

A blacksmith—a fine, big, strong fellow—who used to be one of the worst characters in the hamlet, said: "It seems impossible that I should be here. Am I sane? I tell you I am in my right mind. I looked through the keyhole of yonder door one night, and God met with me, and I have been happy ever since." It appeared that three blacksmiths worked together (of whom the foregoing was one); two had been converted during these services, but the other one became so frightened that he would not go near the chapel on any account. Another case was that of an habitual drunkard, who went home from the service one night sober, and conversed kindly with his wife, who, while at supper, frequently interposed: "How nice it would be if you always came home like this." At length the poor man became so overcome that he rushed upstairs, followed by his wife and son, to whom, with the tears in his eyes, he confessed that the Lord had met with him that night. A great robust farm-labourer also rose and declared that Mr. Shipley had pourtrayed his past career, and had made him "tremble from head to foot; but he had never been so happy as during the last week." A very pleasing feature of the meeting was that several persons stated they had kept true to their profession since Mr. Shipley's former visit six years ago.

Thus might I continue to describe a number of very pleasing incidents, but time and space forbid. God has not accomplished these grand results through the medium of oratorical effect, but by simple, earnest, and prayerful presentation of the truth. Could not meetings similar to the above in out-of-the-way rural districts be greatly increased? I pray God that many brethren may be led to put this to a practical test.—Sincerely yours,

John Richardson.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYES AT TEA.

ON Ash Wednesday a number of those engaged at East-end theatres met as usual for a Social Gathering at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, by invitation of the Committee of Special Religious Services. About 500 assembled for tea, and appeared immensely to enjoy the material part of the feast. Those present included employés from the Standard, Britannia, Surrey, Pavilion, Sadlers' Wells, Grand, and South London theatres.

In the much regretted absence of Lord Shaftesbury, the chair was taken at the meeting by Mr. George Williams. The few words he uttered went to show the unspeakable advantages possessed by those who give themselves unreservedly to Christ and have Him for their friend and helper through life.

The Bishop of Bedford arrived in time to deliver himself of a few well-chosen words, admirably fitted to the occasion. Mr. Ernest Tritton, who followed, spoke a word of encouragement to earnest workers.

The only part of the programme that seemed not quite in harmony with the design and spirit of the meeting, was a statement made by Rev. Septimus Buss. He had been to many of the London theatres, he said, and witnessed some of the great plays of Shakespeare, and he urged them to serve the Lord heartily in the position where He had placed them. Rev. John Morgan, who said he had never been in a London theatre, and it was not likely he ever would be, exhorted his hearers to seek the Lord while He was to be found. Words of good counsel were added by Rev. T. C. Udall, Mr. J. Rennie, Mr. Sawell, Mr. Erlich, Mr. Noakes, and Mr. Jack. The two last speakers roused the enthusiasm of the meeting to the highest pitch, and were exceedingly effective.

The Bible Flower Mission sent a text and lavender bag for each of the guests, and the Religious Tract Society also sent a nicely-bound volume to each. Gospel solos were finely sung in the course of the evening; the gathering on the whole was a most pleasant, and, we trust, a profitable one.

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE at the HOME OF INDUSTRY.

NIGHT after night we have had the blessed privilege of preaching and singing the glorious Gospel in this hallowed spot. A little account of the Sunday work may not only interest but stir up believers to more earnest effort among the perishing.

At half-past ten we set forth in two companies to "Bird Fair," where ten thousand of the lowest characters in London weekly congregate to buy, sell, drink, fight—all this on the blessed Lord's Day, when church bells are ringing, and people are flocking to their places of worship, never even dreaming of such an evil in their midst. Here we took our stand to tell out the good news of a Saviour's love. With the aid of two harmoniums we had plenty of hearty singing, and solos, too; and oh! the eagerness to hear the Word of Life. There for two hours and a half the Gospel was fully and faithfully preached and sung. Here for three years dear Miss Macpherson and her noble band of workers have held forth, praising God for giving them such a privilege.

Our afternoon meeting in the Home at three was a most blessed soul-refreshing time. Many of those present were poor widows, but "rich in faith." After tea we set out with about thirty workers for the lodging-houses, taking a harmonium with us. There in the midst of those poor men and women, who were employed in cooking, smoking, &c., we spoke and sang of Him who is "abundantly able to save." In not a few eyes could we see the tears glistening as the "old, old story" was told, which I dare say many had heard in Sunday-school, or perhaps at a loving mother's knee. There was not a single scoff or jeer, but many "Thank you's!" as we came away. A good many, both men and women, followed us to the Home of Industry to hear more of the good news, with blessed results.

JANE SCROGGIE.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN DUBLIN.

THE Mission in Dublin continues to attract large and attentive audiences every evening, whilst the noon prayer and praise meeting brings together the leading Christian workers of all denominations. The children's meetings are perhaps the most attractive. Many of the large city schools attend, and it is believed that a very large number of children have been savingly converted.

On Wednesday evening last week a testimony meeting was held after the conclusion of the inquiry-meeting, when, among many others, two soldiers told of their conversion. One said he had left home to escape the prayers of a Christian mother; he could not bear to hear her praying for him, but thank God he loved to pray now. He advised all soldiers and young men to enlist for God.

Another case was that of a young lady who had been spoken to some days before. She seemed in deep anxiety about her soul, but professed herself unwilling to be saved. She said she had had no peace for five years day or night, but that she was determined to be an Atheist. The worker who spoke with her entreated her to be prayed with. She said, "No, that would signify my willingness to be a Christian, and I am not willing." The worker then remarked, "Well, I shall pray for you that you may have no rest until you are willing." The reply was, "Oh, please, don't do that!" Several Christians took her case to God in prayer, and yesterday morning she said in the noon-meeting, "I will trust Jesus now."

A young man in the meeting one day read a letter from his mother in Scotland, in which she pleaded with him, "Oh Donald, won't you be a Christian?" He said, "She never wrote to me without asking me that question, and God has answered her prayers; I was converted two days ago, and I have written to tell her." A man one evening testified that God had saved him; he had been going the downward road for a long time, he had not been in any place of worship for about ten months until last Sunday night. A woman has professed to be converted who seemed almost hopelessly hardened. She had been visited and spoken to every Sunday for eighteen months, without any result, but was completely broken down on account of her sins, and it is hoped converted to God.

The utmost harmony prevails amongst the Christian workers in the Mission. Ministers from the different churches, evangelists, local preachers, and other workers, talk sometimes in groups to anxious inquirers, and are doing what is in their power to help on the work.

Even the children go out and find others to fill the meeting. One young child said last evening: "Although father's sick, he spares me every evening to come to the Mission, and I always bring someone else with me. This is my sister, she is a Christian." (The eldest of these children is about 12.)

Mr. Hammond at one of the meetings said that before leaving the United States he sent through the American Board 100 copies of his "Conversion of Children," and fifty copies of "Gathered Lambs" to foreign missionaries. Among the many other interesting letters he read was the following:—

"Dear Brother in Christ,—I thankfully acknowledge the receipt of the books 'Gathered Lambs' and 'Conversion of Children.' I can assure you that they will be read many times, especially the former. Two young girls who have learned to read English very well became very much interested in the account of how the Great Shepherd gathers the little ones in his arms. At my suggestion they began to translate the book to others. Last evening I found them in the schoolroom with eight or ten gathered around them all attentively listening. Most of the girls who do not belong to the evangelical families come to us very ignorant of the Bible and its plan of salvation, and the plain illustrations of truth found in these books will be very valuable aids in explaining the way to be saved. The simple, expressive, child language will be easily translated into the Bulgarian language.

"It interested me to know that you once thought of Bulgaria as a field of labour for the Master. This is my fifteenth year in the work, and my interest grows with the years, especially in the children. The older ones have so much to leave behind them before they can walk in the straight road that it seems very hard to them, and many, very many, go away sorrowful, while the children hide, I believe, these things in their hearts, and if the time of fruit is not yet, it will surely come. I rejoice in the joy of the service committed into your hands by the Lord of the vineyard. "Respectfully yours,

"E. T. MATTHEW."

Letters like these have greatly interested the daily meetings. The Mission in Dublin closes on 26th inst., and Mr. Hammond will commence a series of meetings in Glasgow on Sunday next, March 1.

TEA-MEETING AT SERMON LANE.

THE lodging-houses and haunts of the drunkards and criminal classes near Sermon-lane, Islington, were visited by the workers of this Mission, and tickets of invitation given to tea in the hall on the evening of Monday week. Over four hundred responded. They were supplied with bread and butter, tea and cake, which many devoured with avidity. Looking into the varied faces of this motley group, one could but ponder with a sorrowful heart over the image Divine marred and blurred by sin, and pray for the mighty power that could restore them to their right condition. Not a few at the close of the meeting told a tale of sorrow and disappointment enough to move the hardest heart. One poor fellow said he had not tasted food of any kind for two days. He had walked the streets three nights, and found rest and shelter the best way he could. Many expressed a willingness to lead an honest life, and to become respectable members of society.

Mr. W. Haig Miller presided at the meeting after the tea. Both he and his good wife spoke in a very earnest and loving way, directing the attention of all to the Saviour as the only true Friend. Singing followed, and then the principal speaker of the evening was introduced. His little daughter sang, and gave her experience of the contrast between a drunkard's and a Christian's home. Her simple tale was listened to with great attention, many of the rough-looking men being moved to tears. The speaker gave an account of his life as a drunkard, with its weary tale of bitter shame and sorrow; how he was converted, and what God has done for him since. Very earnestly did he plead with them to be reconciled to God, giving many stirring instances of men who had been brought from the power of the drink and the evil one to happiness and peace. Standing by his side was a man, another trophy of Divine grace, who also told how he had been delivered from an evil life.

The people seemed deeply affected. An invitation was given to any who felt inclined to remain for conversation and prayer. Over 200 remained, and another hour was spent in putting before them the way of life. Fifty-eight signed the Gospel Temperance Pledge and put on the blue ribbon. With many prayers for their steadfastness they were bidden a hearty "Good-night."

Mr. George Fuller, Superintendent, 54, Liverpool-road, Islington, will be glad to receive help to carry on the general work of the Mission, which is greatly needed.

THE TREASURY AND THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—The Committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society have been informed by the Trustees of the British Museum, that the Lords of the Treasury, having in mind the result of a division in the House of Commons, on a motion for opening museums in 1882, are unable to sanction the proposal for opening the Natural History Museum on the Lord's Day.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

THE following brief reports have been kindly forwarded to us by the clergymen of the various churches, or some of their helpers. There are certain items mentioned in one or two of the reports which we do not feel able to endorse, but we have thought best to print them substantially as received. Other reports will follow.

ST. MARK'S, NORTH AUDLEY-STREET.

The Mission here was ably conducted by Canon Weldon, assisted by Canon Lintott. At noon each day an address was given by Dr. Hayman, meeting various sceptical difficulties. The church was thronged at the Mission services throughout the week, and deep gratitude is felt for the faithful teaching of the missioners.

ST. MARY-LE-STRAND.

The Mission services here have been very successful. The addresses by Rev. R. R. Cousens, Rector of Newcastle-under-Lyme, have been stirring and excellent. The workers have been diligent in persuading people to attend the services. They have sung hymns in the courts adjoining the Strand, and under the porch of the church immediately before the services. The congregations were good both at noon and at 8 in the evening. Of course the evening services were more largely attended than at noon, but there was a daily increase at both.

Several who were anxious about their souls were spoken to and encouraged at the after-meetings, some of whom came from great distances.

ST. JAMES'S, PICCADILLY.

The interest in the Mission services at this church was well sustained throughout the week, the numerous addresses being listened to with marked attention. From Monday to Friday inclusive there were four services daily at the parish church; holy communion at 8 a.m.; at noon, morning prayer, with addresses by the Rector, Rev. J. E. Kempe, on "Prayer"; at 5 p.m evening prayer, with address on "Truthfulness in various Relations of Life," by Rev. E. R. Bernard, Vicar of Selborne; and at 9 p.m. the more strictly Mission services, conducted by Rev. H. G. Bonavia Hunt. Room meetings were also held in different quarters by the assistant clergy and by clergy from Windsor. At a Temperance meeting on Wednesday evening eight adults, five men and three women, signed the pledge of total abstinence.

A house was generously lent for the purpose of carrying on rescue work, and several young women were induced to enter the Home, which was managed by ladies connected with the district parish of St. Thomas.

PORTMAN CHAPEL.

Our hearts are full of thankfulness and praise to God for his good hand upon us in this Mission. He has abundantly answered our prayers. For two months past we have held a special congregational prayer-meeting on Saturday evenings to ask for God's blessing on the work. We feel that this has been used of God to unite all the workers together, and to call down the answer which we are now rejoicing in. The words of our chief missioner, Rev. G. C. Grubb (of Cahir, Ireland), were earnest, scriptural, and full of power from on high. His noon Bible readings were greatly blessed to the help and stirring-up of believers. His Mission addresses in the evenings brought many unsaved ones to their knees. The after-meetings were large; numbers stood up to be prayed for, and many have, we trust, received Christ into their hearts.

Two special features of our work were drawing-room meetings, conducted by Captain Dawson; and social gatherings of working men, during their dinner-hour, in the Reeve Mission-room. Coffee and cocoa were supplied, while bright hymns and solos were sung, and short addresses given by the missioners and others. As many as 300 men must have been present between 12 and 2 towards the end of the week, and many of them were thus attracted to the Mission service in the evening.

Useful work was also done by special services in the afternoons for servants, mothers, and children, conducted by Rev. J. A. Halloran. A deep impression has undoubtedly been made; many striking testimonies have been sent in, especially from believers who have been brought to a new view of the living Saviour, and a fresh surrender to Him.

D. H-B.

GROVE PARK WEST.

The general Mission in this parish is to be held a few weeks later, but for some weeks past preparatory work for the Mission has been done by the clergy and lay-workers. Sunday evening evangelistic services have been conducted in the schoolroom by working men. There appears to be a feeling of awakening interest and hopeful expectation, and already there are evidences more deeply that the work has not been in vain.

ST. JOHN'S, NOTTING HILL.

The Mission services in this church were throughout well attended. The missioners were Rev. R. A. White, vicar of St. Giles's, Northampton, and Rev. V. F. Ransome, rector of Compton Bassett, Wilts. The latter delivered a series of beautiful meditations and instructions at 12 and 5.30 each day in the week, intended chiefly for cultivated people, while the evening addresses, stirring and awakening, were preached by Mr. White. That they were appreciated was evident from the numbers who flocked to hear them, and from the large proportion who remained to the after-meeting. There is every reason to hope that this Mission has been blessed to many souls, bringing light to some and comfort to others.

Special features of this Mission were an address by Mr. White to a congregation of some 500 children and young people, and another given by the same missioner to, and most atttentively listened to by, about 100 women in domestic service, a class which forms no inconsiderable part of the population of the parish.

ST. MATTHEW'S, WEST KENSINGTON PARK.

The Mission held here may in many respects be justly called a success. The absence of the vicar, Rev. W. Handcock, who has gone abroad to recruit his health, was much felt, and prayer was daily offered for his safe return in renewed health. This, however, gave point to the efforts of those who were engaged in the work, the lady visitors being specially diligent in visiting from house to house, inviting the people to the services. Many were thus led to the house of God who rarely, if ever, had been there before. The marked attention with which they listened to the plain, yet forceful preaching of the Gospel, showed how acceptable was the message delivered. Many who were wounded in conscience and pricked in heart were led to confess that it had been to them "the power of God unto salvation."

Rev. Claude Bosanquet, vicar of Christ Church, Folkestone, was the missioner. The quiet and unadorned simplicity with which he lifted up his Master as the one and only way of salvation, convinced his hearers that he knew from experience the value of the truths he proclaimed. An address on "The Christian life" was given each morning, the recollections of which will be fresh in the minds of many for years to come. We must wait for eternity to learn fully the blessed results which have followed the efforts put forth during the Mission.

ST. MARY'S, BRYANSTON-SQUARE.

A very successful Mission work was carried on here during the week, and an attempt made, not altogether futile, to reach all classes. The missioner was Rev. Forbes E. Winslow. Each day during the week services were held in the church at 8.30, 11, 3, 4, and 8 p.m. At 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. the subjects of the missioner's discourses have been "The Christ life in the believer," and "Helps and hindrances to spiritual life;" and each evening there has been a large congregation, composed almost entirely of the poor, when earnest appeals have been made from the pulpit by the missioners, and after-meetings have been held, for which the majority of the congregations remained. Special services for domestic servants were conducted on Wednesday and Friday by Rev. J. Simpson, and addresses were given to children on Tuesday and Thursday, at 5 p.m., by the Rev. J. Hutchons, vicar of St. Barnabas. Several meetings were also held during the week in Trinity Rooms, by Mr. I. Sida. Each evening a procession was formed to march thence to the church, singing hymns, and led by the rector, Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh.

On Saturday evening a tea party was held in the Trinity Rooms, over which about thirty ladies of the parish presided, and at which about 400 sat down. At the conclusion of the tea an evangelistic meeting took place. Earnest addresses were delivered by Sir Thomas Chambers, Q.C., M.P., Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Joseph Peters, Dr. Routh, and Dr. Stocker. Hymns were sung at intervals by the Mission choir. The Mission terminated on Monday evening with a thanksgiving service.

FULHAM.

Evident blessing has attended the Mission in this district. Our own people have been edified and confirmed in the faith, and I have reason to believe that many of the outside world have been strongly moved by what they have heard. Canon Thompson Phillips, vicar of Ivegill, who conducted the Mission, is deeply interested in young men, and attracted many of this most interesting class to the services. Since then many have come forward and have asked to be given work for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

JOHN S. SINCLAIR,
Vicar-designate of St. Dionis, Fulham.

ST. LUKE'S, BERWICK-STREET.

Revs. H. C. Shuttleworth and C. L. Marson set forth the principles of Christian Socialism to large and attentive audiences. The afternoons were devoted to lectures for women, which were followed by discussions and questions. A special service, with lectures upon the Lord's Prayer, was held in the church. In the school Mr. Shuttleworth lectured and conducted a discussion for men, upon the moralities, political, social and commercial: upon Jesus Christ; the kingdom of heaven; and the future life. The discussions were sustained by the working men of the neighbourhood.

There is every reason to hope that the Mission did something towards setting Christ upon his rightful throne in the hearts of the people.

TURNHAM GREEN AND GUNNERSBURY.

The missioner in this parish was Rev. E. F. Hart Dyke, vicar of Maidstone. Processions and out-door demonstrations were not adopted. The substance of the teaching was given in two evening sermons on "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God," and "God, through Christ, hath forgiven you." In the former a list of questions detailing particular sins was read for self-inquiry; and, in the latter, unconditional pardon in Christ was set forth, with particular advice how to obtain it. Baptism as connected with forgiveness, and the Eucharist to be used for pleading the Atonement in prayer, were often dwelt upon. Its use as a propitiatory sacrifice in any sense was decidedly, though incidentally, disclaimed. The attendance was good, at some services crowded. It remains to be seen what permanent effect is, or will be, produced. The men at two different workshops were addressed; the joint number did not, however, amount to a hundred. Practical results of the Mission, by way of additional offers to assist in spiritual work, have been realised to a considerable extent.

ST. THOMAS'S, REGENT-STREET.

The Mission was conducted here with much thoroughness and energy. The entire parish was mapped out beforehand, and each family visited at least twice by a band of some thirty district visitors. The shops, and workshops, and public-houses in the neighbourhood were canvassed by the clergy. During the Mission week there was a special service for men only, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, which was numerously attended. Rev. R. M. Benson, of Cowley St. John, Oxford, gave a series of addresses on "Time," at which also there were good congregations.

The feature, however, of the Mission here was distinctly the outdoor work. Every night at eight o'clock a long procession issued from the church, with many lights and banners at intervals, the clergy bringing up the rear. All through the parish they went, along the broad bright thoroughfare of Regent-street, and into the darkest streets and slums at the back, chanting solemn litanies. Everywhere, without exception, they were received with respect and attention.

At intervals they halted, a hymn was sung, and an address given by the vicar, Rev. A. Bathe, or Rev. F. Smallpeice. These were of a stirring nature, and generally ended with an earnest appeal to come to the Mission service. Crowds followed them back to the church, which was densely thronged night after night. Rev. A. Alban Wyld, the special missioner, gave a series of eloquent and practical addresses. Many remained to the after-meetings seeking advice and help. Altogether much result for good may be expected; at any rate, the clergy have shown their determination to get at their people if possible, and to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to those who are ignorant and out of the way.

A special service for young people and children was held, when Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, spoke in a very appropriate and winning manner. A house in Golden-square has been used in connection with "Rescue Work."

CHRIST CHURCH, NORTH KENSINGTON.

The Mission in this parish was conducted by Rev. F. D. Dodd, and has been very encouraging in numbers and spiritual effects. On the week-day evenings the nave of this large church was filled, and on last Sunday evening the whole church was filled with working-men and women. During the week several open-air services were held in various parts of the parish by the Vicar and friends, and they were all well received.

CHRIST CHURCH, SOMERS TOWN.

The missioner here was Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, rector of Nympsfield, Gloucestershire. The attendance was very good, considering the neighbourhood. On Sunday evenings very large congregations gathered. A band of men went into the streets and sang, and announced the services, and were the means of drawing a good many to hear the word. At the end of the Mission some most happy and blessed cases of decision for God were manifested. The regular attendants at the church were greatly stirred, and their spiritual life revived. An excellent choir of male and female voices sang the hymns very sweetly. The Children's Services were largely attended, and many of the little ones professed to give their hearts to the Lord. The Mission, it is felt, has been the means of much blessing, and the hearts of Dr. O'Brien, the vicar, and his helpers, were greatly cheered.

ST. JAMES'S, MUSWELL HILL.

The Mission preacher was the Rev. W. Laycock, vicar of Hurdsfield, Macclesfield. The parish is an outlying suburban one, not yet much invaded by the builder, and with a population of about 1,700. The parish was divided into twenty-six districts, including every house; more than seventeen thousand tracts, leaflets, and notices were distributed by the Mission visitors; and meetings for prayer and for practice of the hymns were held every week.

The success of the Mission, so far as man can judge, has been quite remarkable. Night after night large congregations assembled, and while the preacher explained with admirable clearness, simplicity, and force the facts and doctrines of repentance and faith, the absolute stillness and intense attention with which his words were listened to showed that they were being accompanied by a Divine power in the hearts of his hearers. The after-meetings were held in the church, being separated from the Mission sermon only by a hymn, and on every occasion almost the whole congregation remained. Services for the edification of believers were held in the morning, Bible readings in the afternoons, and a prayer-meeting every evening; there have also been special services for children, for women, and for men. All have been well attended and much valued. Altogether, a wide and deep impression has been produced.

P. P. Cachemaille, Vicar.

ST. SAVIOUR'S, PADDINGTON.

At few, probably, of the London churches has the West-End Mission produced a more marked effect than at St. Saviour's. The Mission services were conducted by Rev. J. Hewett, vicar of Babbicombe, and Rev. F. W. Christie, curate of Helmsley, Yorkshire. A glance at the long list of services would show at once that the convenience of every member of the rapidly growing congregation must have been studied carefully, while no class or condition in life has been neglected. There were services for "Men only," attended in each case by more than one hundred men, from every rank in life; services for children, for domestic servants, for cabdrivers, horsekeepers, and others.

The service for servants was very numerously attended, and deep attention paid to the plain and earnest words of Mr. Christie. The cabmen's service was likewise most interesting and impressive; about forty being present each evening to listen to the straightforward addresses of Rev. B. Hoskyns, one of Canon Wilberforce's curates. The hearty singing of the hymns, which seemed to go equally well whether with the harmonium or without, would have astonished those who can only judge of the London "cabby" under less favourable conditions.

The Mission services at 8 p.m. were attended by numbers of all classes, who came night after night to hear the stirring and eloquent yet simple words of the chief missioner, Rev. J. Hewett. No better or more complete answer could be made to those who assert either that the Church fails to reach "the masses," or that "the people" have ceased to care for religion, than by pointing to such crowded and earnest congregations as those at St. Saviour's, Paddington.

ALL SAINTS, FRIERN BARNET.

The Mission services were well attended throughout, especially the special services for men and women (about 120 at each), and for servants (about sixty). The whole population is only 1200, and there are not sixty houses where servants are kept. The meeting for men on the Wednesday night was attended by more than 100 men, and an eloquent and most earnest address was given by Colonel Everitt on "Purity." It was listened to in deep silence. Nearly the whole congregation remained each evening to the after-meeting.

ST. MATTHEW'S, ST. PANCRAS.

The Mission at this church began with a devotional meeting in the schoolrooms on Saturday, Feb. 7, and concluded with a thanksgiving service in the same place on Tuesday, 17. Every evening a special Mission service was held in the church, the missioners being Rev. F. S. Legg, of Mitcham, Rev. Clifford Hawkes, of Lower Norwood, and others. All the services were well attended, and on the Sundays there were crowded congregations. The whole parish was thoroughly canvassed by a volunteer committee, and about 10,000 tracts, addresses, and leaflets distributed.

ST. MARK'S, REGENT'S PARK.

The principal services in the Mission week were conducted by Rev. James Cornford, lecturer at the London College of Divinity; and Rev. George Warburton Weldon, M.A., Vicar of Bickley, Kent. Addresses were also delivered daily by Rev. Edward Weldon, curate, at the various factories and coffee-houses; and also, accompanied by Mr. W. Calkin, and by Mr. Peever, at the public-houses in the parish, not without good effect.

The attendance throughout was good, and the attention very marked. It is earnestly hoped that a rich blessing from God may follow and abide with us. People did not come once, and then stay away; but came over and over again throughout.

ST. PAUL'S, ONSLOW-SQUARE, S.W.

It is with exceeding thankfulness to God that we record the result of the Mission in this church. The Vicar, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, some months ago secured the services of Rev. E. A. Stuart, Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, and Rev. C. Courtenay, Vicar of Upper Armley, Leeds. Arrangements were made to reach every class of the community. Duly qualified workers were posted in every part of the church. Much prayer was offered up both in public meetings and in private circles, and on Saturday evening, Feb. 7, the large attendance at the preparatory devotional meeting was an augury of good results.

And we were not disappointed. Crowds thronged into the church every evening; people were seated on hassocks and camp stools in all the gangways. On the second Sunday night, after 2000 had crowded into the church, the doors had to be shut. The adjoining church-room, holding 250 people, was filled in another five minutes, and a body of workers held an overflow open-air meeting at the corner of the Fulham-road, and gathered many attentive hearers round them.

This was good, but, better still, we can report that numbers of anxious souls have night after night stayed behind with the inquiry on their lips, "What must I do to be saved?" Mr. Stuart's evening sermons proved very powerful in awakening the careless, and very helpful in leading many to the cross. His Bible readings in the mornings have also been greatly appreciated by the large numbers that came to them, desiring help in the spiritual life. The afternoon Mission services brought together about 1000 daily, and many, we believe, were led to decision thereby. On Sunday afternoons meetings were held for women only at 3 p.m., and for men only at 4.30. On Feb. 15 the former service was attended by about 1600 women, and about half that number of men were present at the latter.

Children's services were also held daily by the assistant missioner, the Rev. C. Courtenay, in the Church-room, and were crowded. Many dear children have, we trust, been led by his bright, happy, child-like words to commit themselves, in simple trust, to the care and guidance of the Good Shepherd. Special services in the church-room, for young women engaged in houses of business, at 9 p.m., and for police, and men engaged at other times, at 6 p.m., were also well attended, and good results were seen in after-meeting work.

We must not omit to mention that a large voluntary choir, under the direction of Mr. W. Carter, organist of St. Paul's, sang Mr. Sankey's hymns for half an hour before the afternoon and evening services, and also led the singing throughout the Mission. A large band of our regular open-air workers, supplemented by special volunteers from the congregation, were out every night singing and preaching the Gospel, and inviting the passers-by to come in and hear the words of eternal life. If any proof had been wanting of the success of the Mission in this church, it would have been supplied by the attendance at the thanksgiving service on Tuesday night. The church was crammed to the very doors to listen to the farewell address of Mr. Stuart, on "Kept by the power of God:" 635 thankful souls went forward and partook of the Holy Communion. There were also 188 communicants in the morning. About £55 was collected as a thankoffering that day, in addition to the previous offerings, averaging about £10 daily. It was delightful to see the bright, happy faces of those who came forward to the Lord's table. Assuredly the Mission in this church has not been in vain.

J. H-B.

ST. THOMAS', CAMDEN NEW TOWN.

With thankfulness and deep gratitude we note the blessing that has fallen on this parish during the Mission conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris. This district, cut in half by the North London Railway, and with one-third of its area absorbed by the Goods Station of the Midland Railway, attracts the notice of but few passers-by, so that the earnest and energetic preaching of the missioner has fallen like a shower in a thirsty land. A marked feature has been the number of parishioners, hitherto strangers to the church, who daily attended the services during the Mission, and at its close testified with joy to the blessing they experienced in their souls. The number who have been stirred up to offer their services as workers in the Lord's vineyard show that a fruitful result may, with God's blessing, be looked for. At the same time, too, an energetic effort by the vicar, Rev. H. W. Reynolds, was made in the direction of the Midland Railway Goods Station. Here, with the kind and hearty assistance of the railway authorities, who seemed desirous of anticipating every wish that could be formed, a short afternoon service, conducted by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, of St. Barnabas, Holloway, drew an eager crowd of from 200 to 300 working men. So deeply moved by the Gospel were many of its hearers that an immediate result has taken place in the establishment of a weekly prayer-meeting amongst the officials and men on the station. The first meeting was held on Tuesday, 17th inst., in a room generously lent for the purpose by the manager, Mr. Heaton, and was well attended.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, HAMPSTEAD.

The Mission services have lasted for a fortnight. Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken was the missioner, assisted by Rev. J. Stephens and Mrs. Crouch. The hands of the Vicar, Rev. J. Kirkman, were strengthened by a large band of earnest workers from St. Stephen's Church and St. John's Chapel, as well as from other churches in which Missions were not held. The numerous services were largely attended, and the successful efforts of the workers were evident in the large number of the poorer inhabitants of the parish, who thronged to the evening services.

We may mention, as being especially valuable, Mr. Aitken's morning addresses on the Christian life; they were most searching and practical. The prayer-meetings, after these services, were highly valued by those who attended them. Special requests for prayer were read out and made subjects for supplication; these meetings were generally conducted by the vicar and one of the missoners. On the two Sunday afternoons Mr. Aitken addressed a large number of men only with much power; and on two week-day evenings there were services for boys only. Mr. Aitken's sermons on the two Sundays and on week-day evenings were very faithful and rousing, and each evening saw the church more and more crowded.

Mr. Stephens held well-attended services on two afternoons in each week for servants and young women, besides addressing the Mission workers on Saturday evenings. He also held daily children's services. Mrs. Crouch held crowded Bible readings on Sunday afternoons and on five afternoons in each week. After-meetings were held at the close of most of the services by the clergy and band of workers.

The second week of the Mission was accompanied by a great increase of interest and of blessing. The church was crowded, and many remained each night to the after-meeting. A large band of workers found plenty of employment in speaking to anxious souls. Mr. Aitken has expressed the opinion that this seems to have been one of his most satisfactory London Missions.

On Sunday last Mr. Aitken commenced his work at Marylebone Parish Church, preaching to an immense crowd in that huge church on Sunday evening. An overflow-meeting was addressed by Mr. Stephens. It was felt by all to be a most cheering beginning.

Notes and Comments.

THE stream of intelligence that comes to us week by week, from almost every corner of the globe, is so great that we are quite unable to make room for it without considerable curtailment. We must again ask our kind contributors to help us, by condensing their communications as much as possible, omitting all minute details that are only of local or temporary interest.

Since Miss Murray's letter which appeared in our last was written, we have visited Winchester, and heard from Mrs. Butler the particulars of the cases mentioned and others, and seen this most interesting Home and its inmates. One had been ruined when a young servant of sixteen; had subsequently kept an evil house, and drawn many a girl into sin; now her desire is to pull as many out of the fire as she has in the past pushed into it. Does the gentleman (!) remember that he will have to answer, before the great white throne, not only for her whom he beguiled, but for all those whom his demoralised victim decoyed to their destruction; and those whom they in their turn destroyed; and so on, in an ever increasing and multiplying ratio? Well may he cry to the rocks to fall upon him and the hills to cover him from the wrath of God and of the Lamb. Yet ladies, and even Christian ladies, do his soul the wrong of receiving him into their society as though he had done no iniquity.

> "Mothers present him their stainless daughters,
>   Men of high honour salute him 'Friend.'
> Earth, oh where are thy cleansing waters?
>   World, oh where will thy wonders end?"

A correspondent suggests that much good might be done in households by providing the domestic servants with a supply of good and interesting books, the perusal of which, in hours of leisure, would teach useful lessons and preoccupy the mind to the exclusion of unprofitable matters. We should have hoped that no head of a Christian family needed this excellent suggestion.

A friend writes wisely: (1) United prayer; (2) periodical interchange (say monthly), and (3) periodical gathering of all (say quarterly); (4) honorary membership at all the churches becoming so fraternised of any approved by them for such a privilege; and (5) a combined evangelistic committee for aggressive organised action; surely these will be, one day, obvious things! Why not now? (6) Let the regiments meet in their centre spot, the Lord's Table. Some say there would be no building large enough. Then (7) build a conference and union hall." Is our friend a man before the time, or shall he see his dream fulfilled? The time will come, and we do not think it is very far in the future.

Mr. Harry Guinness, who has just finished his medical course and taken his diploma, left London last week for the Australian Colonies, and purposes, we believe, to remain there for some time. A number of friends met at Harley House on Tuesday of last week, and united in commending him to God's kind care and guidance. God's blessing was sought, not only on the evangelistic work he is leaving at Bromley-by-Bow, but on any such work he may be able to undertake in Australia and elsewhere. We doubt not many of our readers will bear up this young and devoted worker in their intercessions.

A lady correspondent is very anxious that something should be done for the spiritual welfare of crossing-sweepers. She endeavours to meet their wants, as far as her personal opportunities go, by a distribution of Gospel literature, but much more needs to be attempted in order to bring them regularly under Christian influences. Perhaps some lady with sufficient leisure, and who is able to enlist the co-operation of others, may have this burden laid on her heart.

All too quickly the West-end Mission has passed, and almost before it had been known to thousands the opportunity is gone. Yet the very reason why the Church of Christ is upon the earth is that the good tidings of God's kingdom may be preached to every creature. The work of a Mission like this, instead of being taken up for a few days, is far less than the least which ought to be done every day of the year.

And now that the Episcopal Mission is over, why should not Nonconformists of every name unite together in every locality and follow up that which the Church of England has so well begun? Nay, why should not all Christians, without distinction of sect, who fear God and love souls, forget the poor barriers between them, and unite together in every locality, in every town and city, and bend all their energies to fulfil the will of God concerning them, and carry the Gospel to every person and to every home?

Not that any one should wait until all are united; let each individual Christian stir himself up and take hold of God, believing the Lord's assurance that "Whatsoever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Then let him unite with anyone who will unite with him and grasp the promise, "If two of you shall agree as touching anything they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven." The commencement of a great revival lies within the reach of every one of us.

"Alpha" writes us that, "At a Quarterly Association of the Calvinistic Methodists or Presbyterians of North Wales last year, the subject of dancing was under consideration, complaints having come there from the Presbytery of Anglesea that the custom was gaining countenance among church members. The reported speech of one of the D.D.'s on the subject read more in favour of placing it among recreations or amusements which are in themselves indifferent, and therefore should not be cast beyond the bounds of Christian liberty." Our correspondent quotes, in reply, from the admirable little book, "Consecrated Recreations," by the Rev. Ernest Boys, M.A.:—

> "Besides all the gaiety, frivolity, dress, expense, late hours, and many other sources of danger, there is the fact (to which the worldly, and alas! professing Christians also, are so accustomed that they think nothing of it), that it places the lady in the arms of her partner in a way that is certainly not delicate, and which would not be tolerated under any other circumstances for a moment. How any right-minded, modest girl can allow it, or how any husband, parent, or brother can suffer it for his wife, daughter, or sister, is more than we can understand. But the indelicacy of it is an accepted thing by the world, and the Christian too often makes no stand against it."

Having a natural interest in the Principality, we unite with "Alpha" in "trusting that it will never be forgotten in Wales that all true church members are 'partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.'"

The actor Macready said: "None of my children shall ever, with my consent, or on any pretence, enter a theatre, or have any visiting connection with actors or actresses." Such a testimony from such a source is worth more than all that has ever been written on behalf of the stage. Dumas, the playwright, said to a friend: "You do not take your daughter to see my play. You are right. Let me say, once for all, you must not take your daughter to a theatre." Let parents stop to ask themselves—Why?

Why, indeed! A Christian (?) mother said the other day, "I always let my children go once a year to see a good pantomime; they are harmless, you know, and they make the boys laugh." Harmless! Give a child a taste for the stage, take all the consequences of the development of such a taste, and then expect it to be harmless! The very bills covering the walls of the town with notices of and scenes for stage-plays are often corrupt and revolting. At a glance we see that, morally, they are depraved, and intellectually they are insipid and weak. The basest passions, the lowest appetites, are pandered to on the stage; decency is shocked and morality murdered every night in its pestiferous atmosphere. It arrays vice with conspicuous charms, and invests the villain and the debauchee with a halo of romantic interest. No wonder that the young who see and hear its would-be gilded sin are led into irreparable errors of judgment and taste, and lose their appreciation of the noble and the true.

In a letter to the Daily News, Mr. Wm. Tallack describes, from information lately received, the condition of affairs in British Burmah. He reports a considerable increase in vice and crime, which is attributed to the facilities for procuring opium and strong drink. The better classes of the people bitterly reproach the British authorities for their apathy and misgovernment in relation to the opium trade. Reforms are also needed in police organisation and in prison arrangements. Coming to the brighter side of the picture, Mr. Tallack refers to the mutual co-operation that exists among the leading religious bodies in their efforts to promote Christian principles and practices. He adds:—

> "So encouraged are the American Baptists in the results of their labours under the Divine blessing, that they have expressed their resolve not to rest 'until the Salwen, and the Irrawaddy, and the Bramapootra are as truly Christian streams as the Hudson, and the Ohio, and the Mississippi.'"

The policy of annexation, which is being so widely adopted by European Governments, threatens great injury to the work of Christian Missions in all parts of the world. Recently the Baptist Missionary Society has suffered the loss of property to the value of £1500 and upwards through a German attack on Hickory Town, and other of the Society's stations on the West Coast of Africa. In addition to the destruction of property, the irritation produced on the native mind, and the unsettlement consequent on such unprovoked and unexpected raids of foreign Powers on unprotected towns and villages, are also serious obstacles to the progress of the work undertaken by missionary agencies.

Mr. Baynes, the Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, has made representations on the matter to Earl Granville, with a respectful request that immediate steps may be taken for the protection of their missionaries and others resident at the Cameroons, and that redress be sought from the German Government for the losses incurred. When it is remembered that this Society has expended over £100,000 sterling, and that not a few noble lives have been sacrificed to the cause of God in that region, and also that the civilisation of the district, so far as it exists, is entirely owing to the efforts of its agents, the claims urged by Mr. Baynes will appear to most people one of a most righteous and undeniable character.

We are requested to give publicity to the following:—

> "The Committee of the Women's Peace and Arbitration Society, under a deep sense of the responsibility of associations such as theirs, desire to enter a most emphatic protest against the present war policy of the Government, believing it to be thoroughly opposed to the spirit of Christ and the truest interest of the community.
> "Signed, on behalf of the Committee,
> "M. B. LUCAS, President.
> "E. COLE, Hon. Treasurer.
> "E. M. SOUTHEY, Hon. Secretary."

We would draw the attention of young men employed in the City, to the course of lectures being delivered by Dr. Sinclair Paterson on "Faith and Unbelief," at Devonshire House, on Tuesday evenings, at 6 p.m. At the introductory lecture last week the two opposing principles of "faith" and "unfaith," with their practical bearing on human life, were ably and convincingly pourtrayed. This week the conflicting claims of the antagonistic systems were the theme of discourse. In four succeeding lectures various present day aspects of the question will be taken up.

Two correspondents write to us with reference to the note that appeared in these columns protesting against the extract from a drinking song given in the January issue of Harper's Magazine, in which Methodist preachers are alluded to in a vulgar and depreciatory manner. Our correspondents explain that the song is the utterance of one of the characters in Oliver Goldsmith's comedy, "She Stoops to Conquer." One writer asks whether all authors and editors who may quote or reproduce the writings of the great English classic writers are to be boycotted. Our other correspondent thinks it surprising that anyone should object to a household "revelling in the wonderful genius of that most wonderful man Oliver Goldsmith," and quotes the description of the singer, which closes the following paragraph.

We are sorry to differ from our correspondents, but we do so in the most absolute sense. It is quite certain that neither the Methodists nor any other godly people of that day fed their households on such garbage as the speeches or songs of Tony Lumpkin; and no Christians of this day need expect their children to grow Christ-like on the utterances of "a hobbledehoy, forward and sheepish, mischievous and idle, cunning and stupid, with the vices of the man and the follies of the boy, fond of low company, and giving himself the airs and consequence of the young squire."

There are other kinds of cant besides religious cant, and we think, with all respect to our correspondents, that one of the kinds we need beware of is that which, under the plea of the classics and the fine arts, would foist upon us elegant uncleanness from the one, and coarseness or impurity from the other. The insertion in question is not the only one in Harper's Magazine for January which we think ought to offend Christian readers.

We are glad to learn that the "Old Mother's Letter" addressed by Mrs. Bayly to young women has been read at many mothers' meetings, and has met with a warm welcome. In some cases the reading has been followed by earnest conversation with the mothers on the importance of endeavouring more carefully to shield their daughters from abounding temptations. At the close of these meetings the request is often made to be allowed to purchase the "Letter" that it may be taken home to read. This is a step in the right direction. Parents are the natural guardians of their children, and as such could accomplish more than any "association" can do, however wisely planned.

Some French missionaries report a terrible famine at Lessouto, South Africa. The harvest of maize and sorgho, on which the Basutos depend, has completely failed. It is hoped that some wheat will be saved, but that will be quite insufficient for the needs of the population. M. Christol writes that a sack of maize, which last year sold for six or seven francs, is now selling at from 37 to 50 francs! Many persons have died from hunger. Any help sent to the Treasurer of the French Mission, M. Schultz, 25, Rue de Londres, Paris, will be acceptable.

We have received several accounts of the distribution of Gospel literature among the troops now on their way to Egypt from this country, but we have not space for details. Our readers, we doubt not, will unite in the sincere and earnest prayer that these endeavours after the spiritual welfare of our soldiers may be crowned with God's blessing. At the same time, let us pray with equal earnestness that this unhappy strife may be brought to a speedy termination, and that further bloodshed may be averted.

In the Prelude to his opening Boston Monday Lecture of this season Rev. Joseph Cook formulated a powerful impeachment of the "Mormon Cancer." He has been studying it on the spot, and he affirms that if it is not speedily and thoroughly rooted out, the evil will become not only a scandal to civilisation and Christianity, but a serious menace to the social safety of the American Commonwealth. To grapple with the exigencies of the case, he demands, among other remedies, that a national constitutional amendment should be passed prohibiting polygamy, and that Mormon immigrants should not be permitted to land on the shores of the United States.

In a brief Interlude Mr. Cook touched on several current questions, one of them being the dynamite conspiracy. He would have the collection of murder funds constituted a felony, and would establish an international police; on the other hand, all possible excuse for such movements ought to be removed by meting out "exact and full justice to the poor and the oppressed." The Lecture proper contained many grand thoughts, grandly moulded into speech, showing that Christ is the great revelation of God to men. The closing sentence runs as follows:—

> "Never in the world's history, since the apostolic age, has Christianity stood more proudly erect on the evidence of her rendered reasons in the field of exact research than she does at the present moment."

While reading Mr. Cook's glowing periods and inspiring utterances in the columns of the New York Independent, we have been mentally asking why there should not be a London Monday Lectureship, in which passing events should be reviewed in the light of Scripture and of history. Has the mother country become so sterile that she cannot bring forth a man with a master mind like that of Mr. Cook, which shall sweep the wide horizon of human thought, theological and scientific, and focus the results for the enlightenment and guidance of his fellow-countrymen? If not, Great Britain must assuredly be already on the decline in the scale of nations.

In his remarks upon Mormonism Mr. Cook speaks of "the hoodwinked view" of the system entertained by "unwary travellers who are misled by the notorious blandishments of the Mormon priesthood." This would appear to have been the fate of Mr. T. W. Glover, of Southampton, the Temperance advocate, who in a recent lecture at Bournemouth seems to condone the Mormon iniquity because the leaders of the "faithful" wisely discourage the drinking customs. He asserts that all the saloon keepers in Salt Lake are "Christians," i.e., "Gentiles;" he must know, however, that to call them by the former title is a gross abuse of conventional phraseology. It seems a great pity that in condemning one form of evil he should apparently sanction another, equally disastrous to holiness and happiness.

Last year four men had been sent as Mormon Missionaries to Japan. This means that the Christian Church ought to send forth some of its best equipped soldiers, so that while the enemy is sowing tares the "good seed" may at the same time be scattered broadcast.

The Gospels have been spoken of by some Christians as though they were inferior to the Epistles. And, on the other hand, secular writers have regarded the Sermon on the Mount as more within men's reach than the Epistles. But the Epistles only develop the truth of the Gospels. There is nothing in the Epistles of which the germ is not found in the words of Jesus; there is nothing in the Gospels which is not amplified by the Apostles in their preaching and teaching.

The Sermon on the Mount describes the resurrection-life lived on earth. The earthly life of Jesus was the Sermon on the Mount put into practice. It describes the "walk in newness of life," which is only possible to those who, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, have been baptized into Christ, dead with Him, risen with Him.

The text of that sermon might well have been: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." Like all the words and life of Jesus, it was anticipatory of his death and resurrection. The Son of Man had power on earth to forgive sins, not because He was God, but because He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and was now, in the fulness of time, about to die, as man, for the sin of man. His forgiveness of sins was in anticipation of his atoning death. He did not condemn the woman in the Temple, because He was going to die that He might justify her. In like manner, all his commands were in anticipation of his resurrection. Though as impossible as those of Moses to men in the flesh, they are possible to those who are born again. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death . . . that the requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

MRS. MOODY'S BIRTHDAY.

THIS fifth day of February, 1885, is a gala day in the quiet hamlet on the Connecticut. Its citizens vie with each other in bringing their simple tributes of love to a brother beloved and a mother revered. It is a rare and beautiful sight to see with what tenderness Mrs. Moody and her son are held in the village which has been their life-long home.

Never does Mr. Moody seem so royally grand as when moving among his townsmen, giving and receiving tokens of respect. To-day, when the evangelist reaches his forty-eighth birthday, and his saintly mother touches fourscore, it was just like him to call in those who had been neighbourly and kind to the widow and her children for half a century, to rejoice with him. But not alone did these old friends and his kindred come up to "Marquand Hall," opened for a public reception, but invitations were sent out to a host of other friends in different parts of the land, to be present on this glad occasion. The day was one of the fairest of winter days, and a general holiday was given to the Mount Hermon boys and the Northfield students. All these protégés of the evangelist were present, and sang most enthusiastically songs of gladness and rejoicing. The chapel was decorated profusely with evergreens and flowering shrubs, and under an arch, on which was the motto "Her children shall rise up and call her blessed," sat the aged saint, her eyes as bright as though never dimmed by tears, looking and appearing as youthful as many twenty years her junior. On her right was an aged lady, an old friend and neighbour, and on her left, her loving son Dwight. The family circle of brothers, sisters, and relations were there to rejoice in God's goodness to them all. Letters from Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, and Dr. Theodore Cuyler, were read, taken from a huge pile from all parts of the land, while telegrams, and a cable despatch from Messrs. Mackinnon & Co., Indian Merchants, Glasgow, showed the interest felt by thousands in this delightful celebration.

The gifts to mother and son were numerous, and none more grateful than an elegant arm-chair of blue plush, given by the young ladies of the Seminary to "Grandma," and "Farrar's Life of Christ," illustrated, presented by the boys of Mount Hermon School. Short addresses were made by Mr. Holton, brother of Mrs. Moody, Hon. B. G. Northrup, Mr. Moody, and others. In one room were the simple articles used by the family in their days of poverty, speaking in their mute eloquence of early privation and closest economy. The churn, spinning-wheel, foot stair mat, a "coat of arms" most significant. But of greater value than all was the old family Bible on the pine centre table, showing that it had been in constant use through the generations, opened at the Psalm in which are these words: "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." With joyous tears, the Moody-Holton household, in their family gathering to-day, have read from that grand old book, which has furnished them hope and strength along the weary years. An Indian maiden student here showed her devotion to her benefactors by attaching to each of these heirlooms a card with some passage of Scripture wonderfully appropriate and suggestive.

Mrs. Moody's cheerful spirit shines through her keen black eyes. She is of the seventh generation from William Holton, Ipswich, England, who came to this country at the age of twenty-two, and settled in Hartford, Conn. His name is on "Forefathers' Monument." Later, he went up the river to Northampton, and represented that district in the State Legislature. It is a notable feature in his history that he was the first to introduce a Bill for the suppression of the liquor traffic. Good stock for an evangelist to spring from! Mr. Moody takes a few days' rest, and then is off again, to give with new zeal and tenderness the message of his Lord and Master.

Northampton, Mass., February 6. S. E. B.

AN ALL-DAY OF PRAYER.

THE friends of Social Purity must have felt it a happy augury for the success of their cause that such goodly numbers should have gathered at Lower Exeter Hall on Thursday last. As on the occasion of the opening of Parliament last year, this day had been set apart to bring the evil of the State regulation of vice before the Lord, and to pray for his intervention on behalf of just and righteous laws for the poor, and those who have no helper. The meeting was held from ten till one, and from two till six, each hour being presided over by different friends of the movement. It was happily inaugurated by Sir William McArthur, M.P., with a few words of earnest supplication. Mr. Benjamin Scott, the City Chamberlain, gave a short address, expressing his conviction that God would give the victory over the immoral laws against which they were leagued so soon as the Christian Church has learned what is its duty towards the great question of Social Purity. God would have us to get at the root of the evil before he gives us the victory. The Dagon of State-regulated vice still lies in ruins on the threshold of the House of Commons, and it had better lie there till the people are prepared to clear every bit of it away, root and branch.

Mr. Theodore Fry, M.P., the next president, encouraged the workers in the war against this iniquity to press forward and take courage by the prayers already made, remembering that "Our God still reigns an unconquered Captain," and will lead us on to victory.

Mrs. Booth, of the Salvation Army, followed. She urged that prayer should be definite for the specific object which the meeting had in view; everything must be put aside which consciously crippled their power in prayer and blocked their progress. Nothing else would avail but a conscious taking hold on God that he would go out of his way to give the victory that they sought.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone, of Streatham-hill Congregational Church, took the chair during the first hour of the afternoon meeting. Rev. Septimus Buss, LL.B., vicar of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, took the second hour. Professor Stuart, M.P. for Hackney, who had been present during the greater part of the day, before leaving for the opening of Parliament, wished to thank the friends for the earnest prayers that had been offered for himself and those associated with him in the movement in Parliament, and to remind them that vice was regulated under the British flag in nearly all our colonies, that the obnoxious laws were only partially suspended in England; that substitutes would be produced, but that no substitute was possible for these fearful laws which were a crime alike against God and man.

Mrs. Baxter said that God could do anything; we must not doubt his power in this cause. He found it very easy to make Pharaoh bring Joseph out of prison, and he could move the hearts of our lawmakers in the same way to-day. Our mountain could be removed, if we believed, not because we could pray well, but because God could answer well. This was his own question. He loves righteousness and purity far more than we can do.

Cañon Butler, of Winchester, took the chair during the last hour. He encouraged his hearers with the watchword of the Anti-slavery movement in the United States, the promise in the words of the prophet, that the covenant with death shall be annulled and the agreement with hell shall not stand.

In the intervals between these brief addresses a constant stream of intercession and supplication was kept up, and Mrs. Butler's prayer at the commencement, that those present might receive an abundant blessing beyond their expectations, must have been fully realised. Meetings for prayer were also held on the same day in many provincial towns, and also in various places on the Continent for the same object.

A NEW ABOLITIONIST GATHERING.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' National Association for abolishing the State Regulation of Vice was held in the same Hall on the evening of the following day. Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., presided, the only other gentleman present being Professor James Stuart, M.P., who said he had come there to express his entire confidence in Mr. Stansfeld as the Parliamentary leader of the cause.

Their first duty, said the Chairman, was to keep their organisations at vigorous and persistent work. When the Redistribution Bill was passed he intended to firmly press this question on the attention of the Government, and to call upon them to undo the evil that had existed so long.

Mrs. Josephine E. Butler uttered words of warning as to the dangers that beset the question of constructive legislation, which would be proposed as a substitute for the Acts. She maintained that little good could be done except by moral and spiritual means.

Madame Klerch, from The Hague, gave some interesting particulars concerning the formation of a Women's Association in Holland, which, in the course of a few months, has banded together 700 women to fight against this iniquity.

Miss Todd, of Belfast, Miss A. E. N. Bewicke, and other ladies addressed the meeting, which was of the deepest interest throughout, all the workers being greatly encouraged by the wise and courageous utterances of Mr. Stansfeld.

BOW COMMON.

THERE has been much to rejoice the Lord's servants working in this dark and poor neighbourhood during the last fortnight. Having completed a section of the alterations to the old warehouse in Devon's-road, we determined to hold a fortnight's special services, and secured for this purpose the help of Mr. C. King and his good wife. We have been rejoiced with large attendances throughout.

A threepenny tea during the Mission brought a very large number of poor together. We could not but be persuaded as we looked over the hundreds of upturned faces, night by night, and marked the evident traces of fierce poverty and honest care in some, and of sin, wretchedness, and filth in others, what a power for good, morally and spiritually, such occasions must prove. Among the many cheering confessions given nightly of repentance unto life eternal, was one whose bright, clean, cheery face and mended garments contrasted so strongly, the night following his conversion, with his miserable appearance and dirt the night before, that our friends failed to recognise the man for the moment. He kept up his attendance nightly, bringing also his wife, who has likewise found forgiveness through faith in Jesus.

Notwithstanding the deep poverty of the majority attending, many of whom are trying to keep "home sweet home" together by match box making at 2¼d. per gross boxes, and men's shirts at a penny each, and other equally ill-paid work, the way they responded to the collections bore evidence to their hearty appreciation of the services. Nearly five pounds were collected during the Mission.

We are thankful to those friends who have sent us parcels of new and cast-off clothing, also for the two tons of coals we were given to distribute. There is a wide door for such benevolence here, but of this your readers scarcely need be told. We shall gladly welcome help in any form.

William Chorley.

Y.W.C.A. LIBRARIES.—Sir,—Miss L. M. Moor and I are anxious to make known to any friends who may be disposed to send books for the Y.W.C.A. libraries, that parcels for the country department will be gladly received by Miss Moor, at the temporary office, 41a, Pyrland-road, Highbury, N.; and parcels for the London department by myself, at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. Some little confusion has arisen in consequence of the distinction between the two departments having been overlooked. Both branches are much in need of a fresh supply of interesting and instructive books, especially good narratives which are greatly appreciated. We do not find dry, old-fashioned books, or odd numbers of magazines, to be of any use.—Faithfully yours, J. K. Denny.

ROMAN CATHOLIC TACTICS.

THE following excerpts from a recent issue of a Romish journal published in England ought to carry with them a lesson to Evangelical Protestants, would they but learn it. If they meet the zeal and ingenuity of Romish proselytisers by a corresponding activity, there need be no fear as to the results:—

"The Cardinal Archbishop (of Westminster) in his practical wisdom, has seen that the way to spread the faith in England is to multiply the number of small churches and Missions, to open new Missions in crowded parishes, to erect, if need be, temporary churches, to push out on all sides, in town and country, missionary priests, with their temporary iron churches, like tents and schools, to reclaim those who have gone astray or have lapsed from the faith; to teach the young; to dispense the sacraments, and to offer up the holy sacrifice in places where often the Divine Presence has not been witnessed since the days of the Reformation. These are the flying columns which the Catholic Church of England is now sending forth to reconquer her Divine heritage and to reclaim her own again in the land.

"The success of such Missions is marvellous. In our big cities they are the most effectual means, not only of checking the growing loss of the faith, but of creating new centres of Catholic activity. And if England is ever to be brought back to the Church, it must be by spreading the faith among the rural populations, uncontaminated by the vices of the great cities. This is a large and unworked field for Catholic enterprise. We may take a lesson from the politicians. The Radical party, the most active section, perhaps, of politicians, call upon the members of the small disfranchised boroughs, incorporated into county divisions to visit village after village, and teach the the peasantry how to think, to impregnate them with the true Radical theories.

"In like manner, mutatis mutandis, the small Catholic Missions opened in the country will teach the people, for the most part utterly neglected by the various Protestant sectaries, how to think upon religion; will carry the glad tidings of the Gospel from village to village; will teach the people why it was that the Babe of Bethlehem, born in a manger, became the Man of Sorrows, and died upon the cross. We will recite a case in point, by way of illustration. Recently a small country Mission was opened at Child's Hill in connection with the parish church of Hampstead. A row of small cottages was purchased; one was converted into a temporary chapel, others into schools; one was used as the house of a resident chaplain from the parish church of Hampstead. Nuns were brought to teach the girl's school. In a very short time the schools were filled. Protestant parents brought their children to be taught, glad to allow them to be brought up as Catholics. A large number of adults have already been received into the Church. The priests and the good sisters are gratefully welcomed in the surrounding neighbourhood.

"Ignorance, the greatest obstacle to the advance of the Church, is being overcome by personal contact. The faith is rapidly spreading in the district. The chapel, not opened a twelvemonth, is already too small. A temporary iron church is about to be erected at once; the ground for building a permanent church at Child's Hill is already secured. This is the fruit of small country Missions. Among the rural population the harvest is ripe for the sickle. If England is to be converted, multiply small country Missions. If the Catholic faith is to be preserved in our big cities, multiply town Missions. This, as Cardinal Manning shows by his mode of action, is how England is to be converted to the faith."

MR. SPURGEON.—Under date Mentone, on Feb. 16, Mr. J. W. Harrold writes to a contemporary: "You will rejoice to know that Mr. Spurgeon continues to regain strength, and each day can walk a little further. The weather has been, on the whole, exceedingly fine and warm."

BOOKS FOR THE TROOPS IN EGYPT.—If any of your readers will kindly send suitable books, tracts, &c., for the use of the troops landing at Suakim, I will gladly receive them at the Junior United Service Club, London, S.W., if carriage be prepaid, and the parcels addressed thus: Lieut.-Colonel H. G. MacGregor, Assistant Adjutant-General (Base), Suakim. All that may be sent ought to be carefully selected. Penny gospels, Sankey's hymns, hanging texts in large print, and all tracts simply and faithfully setting forth the true Gospel message, will be most acceptable.

I am, &c. H. G. MACGREGOR, Lieut.-Col.

MILDMAY MISSION TO JEWS.

AN interesting report has just been issued by Rev. John Wilkinson, containing a summary of the work of this Mission during bygone years. The accounts of the various departments of work are of unusual interest, and form a valuable record of facts connected with the progress of the work of God among this ancient and remarkable people. The pamphlet may be obtained (price 6d.) on application to Mr. Wilkinson, 79, Mildmay-road, London, N.

There have been fewer baptisms during the past year than before, but a much larger number have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as Messiah. Under the heading "Needs and Supplies," Mr. Wilkinson states that the needs have now grown to about £4000 a year. Those who procure the report will be deeply interested in reading pp. 34, 35, which contain "some remarks of Jews, drawn out in conversation with them." The work of the Convalescent Home at Highgate, of the Bible-woman, the weekly sewing-class for poor Jewesses, and many instances of awakening and salvation are also narrated.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

THERE are Reports and Reports. Some are are little more than statistical skeletons, interesting or attractive to nobody but the dissecting secretary who pieces them together. Others have the skeleton, of course, as a ground work, but the bones are so hidden by an envelope of literary beauty and grace that they are as unlike the former as a scarecrow is unlike a maiden in her prime. Of the latter order is Mrs. Spurgeon's Report of her wonderful Book Fund, of which the ninth annual edition has appeared. Some one who had her husband's famous work in mind has called these narratives Mrs. Spurgeon's "Lectures to her Students;" if the word "Letters" were substituted for "Lectures" we should recognise the happiness of the description.

The "backbone" of the Report is this solid fact, that during the year over nine thousand helpful volumes have been distributed from the fund among over a thousand poor pastors of different denominations. Besides this, more than 20,000 of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons have been scattered among preachers and missionaries all over the world. £330 odd has also been divided among the poorer pastors through the "Aid Fund." The catholicity of the Fund is one of its most praiseworthy characteristics. "What a beautiful Evangelical Alliance," said one of the grateful recipients;—"a Baptist minister's wife sending books to a Wesleyan preacher, through the intervention of a Church clergyman!" On another page we read: "I have received and granted applications from a Quaker, an Irvingite, three Moravians, and a Unitarian. This latter says: 'Shall I be taking the bread from the children if I ask for a grant?' I thought not; indeed, I felt drawn to give him a good portion of savoury meat, fearing that his soul must be well-nigh famished upon strange doctrine."

The exquisitely artistic bits of family and personal biography, the peeps into the struggling lives of some of Mrs. Spurgeon's protéges, all lend an added charm and interest to a unique record of truly Christian work, carried on through the medium of a weak, but devoted woman. We had marked several passages for quotation, but failing space forbids; if any of our readers wish to make a splendid sixpenny investment, they will make haste to procure a copy of the Report from Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, the publishers.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.—Our readers who noted the request lately made in our columns for the recovery of Pastor Rodriguez, of this Spanish Mission, who fell sick through devotion to his work, will learn with pleasure that he is now convalescent, and is gradually gaining strength. Much practical sympathy has been expressed by the people among whom he labours, and while there are many obstacles, there is also much to encourage him and his like-minded wife in the continued prosecution of their work.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES.

DEAR SIR,—Those who feel the deep importance of interesting the young in the Word of God, and of bringing them into daily contact with it, will rejoice to hear of the great progress made by the Scripture Union for Children and Young People. We have cards with different headings, for "children," for "young people," for "school boys," &c., but all having the same list of daily portions, and, including all kinds, we had issued up to February 7, 228,000 cards for 1885, in English alone. This is an increase of about 45,000 since February last.

We have now some 400 branches in London, 1470 in the rest of England and Wales, 147 in Scotland, and 85 in Ireland, or about 2100 altogether. There are branches in 1000 towns and villages in England and Wales, 100 in Scotland, and 65 in Ireland.

We print in London the cards in French, Dutch, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and Arabic, and of these 12,000 have so far been issued for 1885. To these must be added the German branch, which has sent out about 10,000 cards, and also those printed in Finnish and Bohemian, perhaps 7000 or 8000 more.

The work on the Continent gives us much encouragement this year. In France we have about 150 branches of the Union Biblique de la Jeunesse, besides those at Mr. McAll's mission stations, and the letters from the various pastors show clearly that the Union is doing a very good work. In French Switzerland there are about 35 branches, and as many in Italy. In Sweden, where the work is taken up by the Örebro Sunday School Union, there must be about 200 branches in the various Sunday-schools, to whom 10,000 cards have been sent. Madame de Ramsay, at Jönköping, has also had 1000 cards.

About a year or so ago, Mr. W. Shrimpton, a member of our committee, paid a visit to the Cape of Good Hope, and spent some time in holding children's services, and in introducing the Scripture Union. Now there are a large number of flourishing branches at Capetown, Grahamstown, Algoa Bay, and many other places. A few months later Mr. G. A. King was in the Colony, and visited several of the branches, and thus further interest was created in the work.

Mr. Shrimpton went on to Australia, and there he has, during a visit of some months, done a most excellent work in holding large gatherings of children, and establishing the work of the Scripture Union on a firmer basis. Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Caulfield Parsonage, Melbourne, who originally introduced the work into Australia, writes in the Missionary: "I have worked for the Children's Scripture Union for nearly four years, but almost in the dark; now the light is clearer. I see that no time or pains or money ought to be spared in such a cause. All our available capital of strength and influence should be embarked in an undertaking so likely, so certain, to succeed."

In New South Wales alone 3000 cards have been issued for 1885; there are large branches in Victoria, in South Australia, in Queensland, in New Zealand (which Mr. Shrimpton has also visited), and in Tasmania.

Much could be said of the work in Syria and Palestine; of the 2000 English members in India, besides the members who read in Hindi, Bengali, Oriya, Marathi, Tamil, &c.; of the deeply interesting work in Japan, where there are more than 1000 members; and of the branches in Brazil, in Canada, at Constantinople, at Smyrna, at Lagos, at Sierra Leone, and in the Sandwich Islands. But I must close by asking the earnest prayers of your readers that God will continue to give his richest blessing to his own Word thus brought daily before the minds of so many tens of thousands of young people.—Yours very faithfully, T. B. BISHOP.

MISS BOOTH IN PARIS.

DEAR FRIEND, — Since leaving London, every day has given cause for thankfulness for the way in which God has led us. Having lately had ample opportunity for examining the work through and through, the reality I have found fills me with assurance for the future.

. . . I am less and less surprised at the opposition with which we meet. It could not be otherwise, as anyone will see who has any knowledge of the existing state of things. I must confess to the glory of God that the severe persecution has been much blessed to us. The fire purifies, and no suffering is too dear for such a result! It also destroys the love of ease, and that self-honouring, self-seeking spirit which has proved so fatal in the past history of the Church. It has made our converts understand what a soldier of Christ is, and what is expected of him. Cowardliness finds no mercy in our ranks, our people are speckled birds at once, and must suffer if they will live godly. Again, the storm has driven us closer to the "Rock of Ages," and made us seek more definitely and continually the approbation of God.

Therefore I can no longer grieve, but only ask God to keep us faithful in the way He has traced. The abounding sin and darkness, the awful need of Jesus everywhere, pierces my heart; uncontrollable sadness has spread over my whole being, whilst grappling hand to hand this monster, SIN, in all its different forms.

It would be a heart of stone that did not melt in pity for the sheep having no Shepherd. Oh the darkness, madness, and sin of rejecting God! Yet amidst all I see light and hope for France.

A few weeks back, while visiting the cafés, I spoke to four men drinking and playing cards. It was Sunday night, bitterly cold, the wind was piercing, and the cafés were crowded. My comrade addressed a table further on. Three of my assembly listened attentively, when the fourth interrupted, "Have you seen God?" "Yes," I replied, "I have seen Him—my soul's eyes have seen Him! I have heard his voice; I know Him: and you will see Him soon. You will hear his voice; is it not time you began to think of your soul?"

I looked to my friend on the right, whose hair was already grey. "You are very near the next world; death is coming." Here the man next made a remark in an undertone, but the older one stopped him, saying, "Be quiet; she is right." One of the men who had drawn near to listen, said, in a loud voice, "And is it in a café one comes to speak of God?" I replied, "How should you hear of God, if we did not come to you? Do you go anywhere to hear of Him? Silence! that is why we come to seek you."

A few more words, and I passed out, inviting them to the meetings. At the next café my attention was attracted to a group of young girls; some could only be fifteen and sixteen years of age. They eagerly accepted our journals, and more eagerly listened to my words. Bright eyes were fastened on me while I spoke of Him who seeks them.

This over, I dropped in for the end of the meeting, well filled, and the right class.

One of the men I had spoken to in the café soon appeared on the scene in the Hall. It was a blessed meeting, four or five souls seeking at the close; but all the way home and far into the night I pondered over the man's question, "Have you seen God?" Ah, yes! that is what France wants—something certain, a reality. They have been deceived, and they tell us.

Now, they shall have a band of men and women who know God, walk with Him, commune with Him, bear his image, live his life. This is my hope for France; this will arrest their attention and win. It is most encouraging to find how the door is opened for us to reach the Catholics. I have lately spoken with scores among them of most interesting cases. The other night at Valence a young man came forward seeking mercy, forgetting all in the Hall, cried aloud for salvation. A year before he had been convinced of sin in our meetings at Geneva, and ever since had been seeking. It seemed impossible for him to believe that Jesus would accept him there and then, he had such a struggle, but light broke in, and will break, not only for him, but for hundreds more.

The fact also that we make not the slightest distinction, and love everybody alike, is felt and known. I noticed a man who looked very miserable; he came night after night. On leaving the hall I spoke to him: "You don't look happy."

"No, no," and a sigh.

"Will you give your heart to God?"

"But I am a Catholic!"

"Don't you want pardon and Jesus, the same as I do?"

"Oh, yes," replied the man, evidently relieved that I did not attack his religion; "I pray sometimes, but I feel no better."

"Will you stay and pray with me?" I asked. "I will try and help you."

"Yes," and he went boldly to the penitent form. After a few minutes, he broke out in prayer for himself, and I wish you could have heard him. "Oh, God, help me, come to me, I'm a great sinner," etc.

The Catholics we have already in our ranks give us a bright prospect for the future. I remark with joy that France is beginning to understand us more, specially the masses among whom we work, and wish to reach. I find great progress in this respect since last year in the towns I have just visited.

I have been greatly cheered in seeing the love which leads (as it led Him) to spend and be spent night and day for the lost; to suffer patiently severest provocation and cruel persecution; and also to embrace poverty and hardships for Christ's sake. Those who have had every comfort, mothers with little children, accustomed to have servants, are now making sacrifices beyond their strength, that the poor, hungry crowds may be led to Jesus.

A letter just in from a young man saved through reading "En Avant." Of course we shall have some tremendous fighting to do, which will mean untiring zeal and courage. Will you pray for us? especially for me, that I may be kept faithful, faithful, following on night and day in the steps of my crucified Lord, do his will, or suffer it, and lead hundreds more of these dear people to the Light of the World. Pray that I may not look at difficulties, opposition even, but always straight ahead to the Lamb of God.

The work is going on well here, although we have plenty of difficulty just now. Ten souls last night at Quai Valmy; hall full of working-men, and some who mocked at first, but remained silent afterwards. Paris is in a sad state of commotion just now; revolutionary meetings especially near us. I sometimes think friends would be alarmed if they knew how we are surrounded. There is the greatest astonishment shown because we go on just the same. There have been sad scenes quite near; 130,000 out of work! Misery, misery, everywhere you turn; letters beseeching us for money. We send bread puddings when we can. We have no money, and it would not be wise if we had. Poor, poor people! they talk about another Commune as an ordinary occurrence here. The Government is taking every precaution, but how little can Government do without God!

We have now fourteen girls on our flat, some Swiss and some French, all consecrated and eager to go and lead others to the same Saviour. There is a real work going on which will tell on France. My comrade, a young English lady, far from strong, has bravely held the fort during my absence, turning her hand to all kinds of work, as necessity required. We have only few hands for the work on hand, which increases every day.—Yours, living only for the souls He so loved,

CATHERINE BOOTH.

3, Avenue Laumière, Paris.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY and his son Edward continue their successful Gospel Temperance crusade in the United States. A good work has been going on at McKeesport Pa., and as the result a Blue Ribbon Club has been organised for the encouragement of the converts.

A YEAR ago the custom of furnishing tobacco to the inmates of an American prison was discontinued. The physician in charge has since that time carefully noted the effects produced, and he finds that the men have improved in general health, and that no bad results have followed. Instead of eight hundred dollars formerly spent on tobacco, two hundred will now be devoted to the purchase of suitable reading matter.

SPEAKING at Simla, India, recently, Sir Donald Stewart gave a very encouraging account of the progress of the Temperance cause in the Army. Formerly, he said, the Judge Advocate-General used to bring him every week cases of soldiers sentenced to different periods of penal servitude, but now the reports were not so numerous, being about one a month. He attributed this decrease in crime very largely to the influence of Temperance.

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The Annual Report contains a detailed account of the work done in the various departments of the Mission for the past year. The daily attendance of Jews at the headquarters Mission-room, Albion Hall, London-wall, is on the increase, and the work there is said to be most encouraging. Many of the Jews who attend the meetings and classes show that they have been unmistakably impressed with the truth, although they may not have confessed Christ publicly by baptism. Some of the converts have to suffer bitter persecution. The address of Mr. Warschawski, the superintendent of the Mission, is 16, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

ONTARIO.—Writing from Barrie, Ontario, Canada, Rev. D. W. McLeod, Presbyterian Minister, says:—I desire to thank the kind, but unknown friend who sends me THE CHRISTIAN. I enjoy and benefit very much from its perusal, and will use it for distribution in our outlying districts. I would like my friend to know that my address, which was formerly Paris, is now Barrie. The cause of Christ is vigorously upheld through all this district. The ministers of the various churches are earnestly seeking to gather in souls to the fold of Christ. We had a most enjoyable week of prayer, the meetings being union meetings and largely attended. Further, we are far in advance of you in England in regard to Temperance. In this county, consisting of sixteen townships, we have carried what is called the Scott Act, which entirely prohibits the sale of intoxicating drink within the county. This Act has now been carried by large majorities in sixteen counties of the province of Ontario. This is the work of the churches. When will the churches of Britain waken up to the duty of putting an end to the power of the liquor traffic, confessedly the cause of a great part of the people's poverty and misery?

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—Last summer the owner of the cottage turned us out at a very short notice, and for a time it seemed impossible to find another suitable house. However, another cottage was found more suitable than the first, and larger, capable of holding twelve beds standing detached in a nice garden. The rent is higher, but God has not suffered us to lack anything. His blessing has been resting on the work of love carried on within the walls of our little hospital. Not only Spaniards, but English, Scotch, French, Germans, Norwegians, &c., have found there healing for their bodies, and many also peace for their souls. We are in danger, however, of losing our little hospital, as the owner wishes to sell it at the end of the year. Besides having spent much in necessary alterations, and the great inconvenience of moving with patients, there seems no other house to be had. £1000 is the price asked for house and garden, a moderate sum for the property, but a very large one to collect; and also the money for the current expenses must be collected. Help will be gratefully received and acknowledged by me, and reports of the work sent.

ANNA VON MIELECKA.

Letters to the Editor.

THE Y.W.C.A.

In our last, Mr. James E. Mathieson wrote a brief letter in which he complained of the names of Mrs. Pennefather, Miss Lucy Moore, and Miss Bernard, having been used wholly without their sanction in a circular issued by Rev. H. Sheridan Patterson. Mr. Patterson writes to us in reply that he made no reference to Mrs. Pennefather, though he spoke of "Mrs. Pennefather's successors." This is true, but the chief point of Mr. Mathieson's letter was to say, on behalf of these ladies, that they have no sympathy whatever with Mr. Patterson's movement, a fact which would not strike every reader of his circular, in which also the name of Mr. Moody has been used in an equally irrelevant manner.

THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

Sir,—The figures you quote in your issue of the 5th inst. are incorrect. Taking the financial year of the Council, 1883, and that of the district committees, 1882-3, the total expenses of the Council (including publications) and of the thirty-nine district committees, were not £16,771 3s. 1d., but £12,932 11s., and the relief expended by the Society was (exclusive of all relief that, after reference to the Society, may have passed direct to the recipient) £15,578 16s. 7d., not £3,322 9s. 1d. —I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. S. Loch, Secretary.

15, Buckingham-street, Adelphi.

Having quoted the figures and statements to which Mr. Loch takes exception from articles in Eastward Ho, we have communicated with the Editor of that periodical. The following is from his reply:—

"The discrepancy between 'Peter the Hermit's' figures and Mr. Loch's, is accounted for thus: The former was dealing with the income of the C. O. S. This, derived from subscriptions and donations over the expenditure of which it had control, amounted in rough figures to £20,000. But a large sum passed through its hands which it could not have applied without fraud except to the special cases for which the money was sent. It is for this, over which it had no control, and dared not have applied to its own purposes, that Mr. Loch claims credit. As well might the bankers who distribute the subscriptions of many of their rich clients, annually, claim credit as a great charitable agency.

"There may be a question whether in 'Officialism' 'Peter the Hermit' has wrongly included the expenses of publications and some other items; but substantially his figures are correct.

"The Editor 'Eastward Ho.'"

THRIFT.

Sir,—Will you kindly find room for a few words upon the important subject of Thrift, a matter which specially affects the wage-earning classes throughout the country? By social economy, or thrift, we do not mean merely "saving," but the right use of everything, and a careful, judicious expenditure, especially where means are limited. For some years past it has been the aim of the National Thrift Society to discourage all foolish indulgences, and to promote economy amongst all classes of the community. The principal means adopted have been lectures, conferences, and meetings upon the subject at every opportunity; the publication and widespread distribution of thrift literature; and the establishment of penny banks at schools, factories, workmen's clubs, Temperance Societies, Bands of Hope, &c.

Many of our publications now require reprinting, important work of various kinds awaits the necessary means for carrying it out, whilst more commodious offices and a larger staff are very greatly needed. The work is widely recognised as being much needed; with adequate funds it might be made most valuable.

Professor Leone Levi, the well-known political economist, writes as follows: "I cannot forbear warmly commending the cause you advocate. I know no duty more incumbent than to thrift—or use as economically as possible—the resources which a kind Providence places day by day at our disposal. By all means urge it on everyone, and you will confer a great benefit, not only on the individuals themselves, but on the nation at large."

At a Thrift meeting held a short time since, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who presided, said he was glad to have the opportunity of expressing his feelings of thankfulness at the existence of the Thrift Society; it brought together different classes of people, whilst it put before many families methods of expenditure which would bring comfort into their homes.

Trusting we may have the good wishes—accompanied by the hearty support—of your readers,

We are, Sir, yours obediently,
Byron, Chairman.

EDWARD IRVING'S GREAT SERMON.

Dear Sir,—I beg to thank you for the copious extract with which you have favoured us from the Rev. Edward Irving's great missionary sermon, delivered more than fifty years ago in Tottenham Court Chapel. Great and memorable it certainly was—from its theme, its extraordinary ability, and its length.

The undersigned was present, and retains the impression it produced on a rapt and crowded audience, as if it were a thing of yesterday.

As to its theme and purport, the sermon was an elaborate contention that the modern missionary could make his way among the heathen, and win them to Christianity, without miraculous gifts, by merely teaching them the arts of civilised life. He could make them his friends and pupils by showing them how to build and plant, to navigate their rivers, to treat diseases, and surround themselves with the conveniences of regions more favoured than their own. This was very plausible, but unsubstantial. It won and engrossed the hearer's mind, but perhaps left no impression so general as this—that "great men are not always wise." A chain of sophistry, we may often observe, may possess a charm for the young and inexperienced which they do not find in more sober talk.

Mr. Irving spoke with the majesty of a commissioned herald from the Unseen. He was a poet in the highest sense of the word. But, above everything, there was fervour in his address. He pronounced every syllable with a ponderous force—the force of a great nature all aglow with an ardour before which criticism was dumb.

But now, one word as to a very simple question of fact. Was this discourse quite so long as Mr. Irving's biographer supposes it to have been, namely, four hours? Three hours and a half, I am able to say, would be nearer the mark; and this space was broken by two distinct pauses, during which some verses were sung, and the preacher recovered breath and strength—ending, however, in full tone, and with a loud as well as clear utterance.

To account for these "pauses," it should be said that Tottenham-court Chapel was then far more difficult to speak in than it is now, and that on this occasion it was "crowded to suffocation," as the phrase now is, so that the service had to be commenced half an hour before the announced time. Such, however, was the absorbing interest of the discourse, that there was one hearer at least seated at the greatest distance from the pulpit to whom the second hour seemed shorter than the first, and the third shorter than the second, while the extra half-hour was a mere overflow and seemed literally of no account. Let those good readers of yours who hold with the writer that the generality of sermons in our day would gain rather than lose by being ten minutes shorter, still own with him that in its season there is no force moving in the world of mind so mighty as strong, fervid, inspiring speech.

"Oh! for the 'tongue of fire!'"

Yours faithfully, S. McAll.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on meetings in Barrhead, Feb. 22 to March 8, by Mr. William Bradlaugh.——A brother who has for some time past been in the deepest mental anguish and distress through one false step, which has involved him in other inconsistencies, thereby distracting and turning him aside from evangelistic work, most earnestly desires the prayers of God's faithful children, that he may be pardoned the sins which he has humbly confessed, and restored to perfect liberty and the joy of the Lord, which is the Christian's strength.——The Council of the Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued an invitation to the observance of Tuesday, March 17 next (St. Patrick's Day), as a day of special and united prayer for Ireland.——For four days' Gospel services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Tabernacle, Bristol, to commence March 1.——For blessing to rest upon the services held in the Westerham Hill, Kent, Mission room, during March.

Notices of Books, &c.

A Handbook for Senior Scholars: Paul the Prisoner. By Rev. David Davies. A Handbook for Junior Scholars, by Annie B. Book Society. 3d. each. These will be found very helpful in preparing for the Sunday scholars' examination in March. The first-mentioned is quite an exhaustive study of the subject.

The Reign of Grace. By Rev. W. Bridges. Marshall Brothers. The author of these verses is evidently in earnest. He may not be a poet, but he is a very sincere Christian, and though the names of such books as his is legion, he yet may find readers among those who are able to take their "aids to faith" in a chaplet of rhyme.

Nearer Heaven. By Rev. John Baird. Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d. "A book intended for private devotional use, to assist our fellowship with God, to deepen our consciousness of Jesus, and to suffuse our natures with the spirit of the better world." The Author thus expresses his purpose, and right worthily and well has he fulfilled it. It is full of gems of sanctified thought.

Aunt Frank's Bible Studies. By Caroline E. Cole. Elliot Stock. The reading of this volume has given real pleasure and much profit. From the Creation to Solomon we are led through a gallery of thought, rich in imagery, eloquent in expression, and true in perception. Every one of these studies contains a lesson easily learned, and though there is not a spice of dogmatic teaching in them, they are as positive as they ought to be, and as suggestive as they are fresh in treatment.

French Heroines, Eminent for Piety and Virtue. By Caroline Geary. J. Blackwood & Co. Here we are told, in the most refined and elevated language, the stories of the lives of Madame Elizabeth, Madame Récanier, and Marie-Amélie de Bourbon. Few English girls are perfectly conversant with these touching and stimulating histories as examples of Christian grace and heroism. It will do any girl good to read them as told by the writer of this book, whose thoughts are lofty and noble, whose descriptions are pathetically vivid, and whose aim in writing the book is of the most exalted kind. The book deserves a large circulation.

Chief Women; or, Deeper Life in High Places. By Mrs. Gordon. W. Hunt & Co. This is a third and new edition of a work calculated to be of the highest value to the class for whom it is written, and, indeed, to many beyond them. It is full of "sound speech, not to be contemned," and has a freshness and point about its style which give the book a great charm. It is a happy feature of Christian work in our age that so many of the gentler sex are being called into requisition for the Master's service both at home and abroad. Such counsels as abound in these pages are invaluable to guide the spirit and action of all Christian women doing the Lord's work. In our Y.W.C. Associations, and other institutions for woman's training and help, as well as in our homes, Mrs. Gordon's book should be freely circulated. If some readers fail to endorse all her views on sanctification by faith, none will find aught to offend them who love God's Word, and desire to appeal to its sure authority.

Congregational Hymns. By W. Garrett Horder. Elliot Stock. The compiler of this hymnal has three essential requisites for his task—a poetical mind, a catholic spirit, and a deep love to the object of all praise, our blessed Redeemer. The title, "Congregational," must therefore be taken in the widest sense, for such names as Quarles, Faber, Toplady, Wesley, Stanley, Trench, Monsell, and Punshon, suffice to show how varied are the contributors. The Sacramental Hymns, though from many authors, are all unexceptionable in doctrine. Some are probably new to many readers. Of children's hymns there is a rich assortment; and under the head of "The Home Sanctuary" are many unusual ones, besides those that have for generations cheered the sick-bed and animated family worship. Of experimental hymns there is a choice treasury. At the end of the book are the Psalms, pointed for chanting, and such portions of Scripture as are generally set to music. Taken altogether, as regards contents, arrangement, and spirit, we greet the book as a valuable addition to pure Christian psalmody.

Y.M.C.A., Brecon.—This Association has lately, through lack of funds, been obliged to relinquish its premises, and betake itself to a Mission-room. An outstanding debt of over £30 cripples the work, and help is asked towards its removal.—Secretary, Mr. D. D. Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon.

THE LATE GENERAL GORDON.

AMONG the most striking of the many tributes that are being paid to the deceased "Hero of Khartoum" is one from the pen of M. Leon Pilatte, the French journalist. He says:—

"When leaving for the Soudan in January, 1884, Gordon had a presentiment—a conviction—that he should lose his life there. A letter from him, received at Cairo on December 14, by one of his friends, contained these words: 'Adieu, you will have no more news from me. I fear there are traitors in the garrison, and all will be over by Christmas.' . . .

"He was great, but his greatness consisted rather in what he was than in what he did. He believed in God—in God his Saviour—with such a faith that we may, without hesitation, apply to him what the Scripture says of Moses: 'He endured as seeing Him who is invisible.' He loved men. Oh, how he loved them! White, yellow, black, the poorest, the most oppressed, were the objects of his predilection. He lived for them, and he died for them. He despised the riches and honours of this world. He had a true contempt for them. Knowing what they were worth, he treated them accordingly, though he had only to wish for them and he might have had them in abundance. Truly the world is impoverished when it loses such a man."

An admirable lithographed portrait of General Gordon, well suited for framing, has been published by Messrs. Marlborough, Gould & Co., 52, Old Bailey, E.C.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have completed a successful fortnight's evangelistic mission in Barnsley, Yorks.

Brighton.—Rev. J. B. Figgis writes:—"A glorious gathering of men only has just crowned the first week of Mr. Spencer Walton's Mission. God is with us of a truth."

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have held fourteen days' evangelistic services in Catcott, Somersetshire. The villagers of Catcott, Shapwick, Edington, Chilton, Polden, &c., have been quite in a stir. The chapel has been crowded at every service, and a number have professed conversion.

Bideford, Devon.—At the Baptist Chapel special services were held from 8th to 13th inst., by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. The meetings were very largely attended, and much good has been done through the powerful Gospel appeals of Mr. Fullerton, and the beautiful singing of Mr. Smith.

W. G.

Frodsham, Cheshire.—All the Nonconformist churches in this town have joined in an United Mission for young people, now being conducted by Mr. Thomas Eyres. The attendances of children at the different churches, and also at the Town Hall every night, have been very encouraging, representing as they did the various Sabbath-schools in the neighbourhood.

Wood-street Mission, Deansgate, Manchester.—Last Sunday evening Cooke's Circus was more crowded than ever. The Mayor of Salford presided, and expressed great sympathy with the work. Mr. Richard Johnson gave a practical address on "The wages of sin is death." Several hundred remained to after-meeting; many professed to find Christ, and others signed the pledge.

Clapton Park Theatre.—The evangelistic mission in connection with this theatre, carried on by the Primitive Methodists, is making considerable progress. During the past twenty-eight weeks that the Society has carried on its operations, under the superintendence of the Rev. Thomas Jackson, a Church of sixty-six members has been formed, a Sunday-school of eleven teachers and seventy-four scholars, and a Band of Hope of 100 members established. At the Gospel Temperance meetings held 130 adult Temperance pledges have been taken.

Dumfries.—Mr. Mackenzie, General Secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, has been holding a series of meetings in this town. Children's services, mothers' meetings, and a meeting of mill girls were specially blessed. A number of mill girls, remained to the after-meeting to be spoken to about their souls. A large number of the Society's tracts were distributed in the town. Prayer is earnestly desired on behalf of the Mission to mill girls, conducted with much zeal by the Misses Johnstone, who are arranging for a series of evangelistic addresses.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Darmstadt.—A lady here has hired a room and fitted it up, in which the Baptists are to carry on their worship.

Kabylia.—M. J. W. Lelièvre, the editor of the Evangéliste, is about to make a missionary exploration tour in Kabylia, being deputed by the French Wesleyan Conference.

The German Catholics are organising a grand pilgrimage to Rome to do homage to the Pope. It is said that more than a thousand pilgrims have signified their desire to take part in the pilgrimage.

Capital Punishment in Italy.—The Italian Parliamentary Committee appointed to examine the Criminal Code has almost unanimously agreed to the abolition of capital punishment, only two members voting against the proposal.

Messrs. Reveillaud and Bertrand have been holding evangelistic meetings in the West of France; many times Catholics formed the bulk of the audience. The evangelists met with much sympathy, and earnest attention was given to their Gospel message.

Intolerance in Wurtemberg.—A very capable school teacher was one day called up before the clergy of a town in this kingdom, and told that she must not again teach in a Methodist Sunday-school nor play the harmonium in the Methodist Chapel, on pain of dismissal.—Wahheitszeuge.

Lyons.—The International Union of the Friends of Young Girls has established an agency for young French women desiring to go abroad, or for foreigners desiring to place themselves in France, either as nurses, teachers, or governesses. Address: Mdme. Coste, 39, Rue Malesherbes, Lyon.—Témoin de la Vérité.

In Rome there are hundreds of poor priests who have only about 1s. 6d. or 2s. per day to live on. This they gain by saying masses in the poorer churches. They may be met in the poor quarters, dirty, ragged, and trembling with fever or hunger. In vain have they called the attention of the Pope to their miserable condition.

A large placard was put up in the Rue Soufflot, Paris, addressed to lost women, by one who had belonged to them. It relates how she was saved by Jesus Christ, and invites others to go to Him for pardon and rest. In a few days this placard was pulled down by order of the police, while other posters, which outrage all decency and religion, are allowed to remain.—Témoin de la Vérité.

Berlin.—At the beginning of this month a very successful sale was held, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the building of a refuge and house for prisoners who have passed their term of punishment. The Crown Prince and Princess with many other members of the Royal family contributed articles and bought freely. Altogether £2200 was realised.

One Hundred Chinese young men, who were partly educated in the United States, and who have been recently recalled, are now at work in China. As they are in Government employ, they have to be most careful about offending native religious prejudices, but it is hoped that they will be able to gather many children into Sunday-schools in the future. They are most anxious for all kinds of Christian and religious aid.

A Radical Change.—Not long ago the King of Uganda, Africa, wishing to impress the first explorers with his skill in the use of firearms, took some of his women to serve as targets! Since then two of King Mtesa's daughters have been received into the Mission church in Uganda, and are engaged in giving religious instruction to others in the royal harem. Nothing but the Gospel could have effected such a radical change.

Italy.—Repretentatives of the Vandois and of the Free Churches lately met in Florence in order to deliberate upon the union of the two bodies. According to an announcement made on Sunday week in the Scotch Church at Rome, by Father Gavazzi, the scheme will be submitted to, and doubtless ratified by, the respective synods next autumn. The Church formed by this union will be called the Chiesa Evangelica d'Italia (Evangelical Church of Italy).

Savoy.—I shall be pleased to have as many as possible spreading themselves over Savoy during the coming season, at their own expense, to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ. Personal labour, with a knowledge of French, and French tracts, can do much. Between Bouvret and Evian there are over 1000 navvies making a line of railway, and not a single person doing anything for their souls.

Alex. Donaldson.
70, rue la Fontaine, Auteuil, Paris.

Pas de Calais.—Of the twenty-nine victims of the explosion in a mine at Lièvin in January last, four of the workmen had recently come out from Rome and were followers of the Lord Jesus. One of these a few hours before descending into the mine gathered his young wife, his brothers, and his parents, all Romanists, around the Bible which he had possessed a few months, and entreated them to yield their hearts to God and to open their eyes to the truth.—Témoin de la Vérité.

M. Cochet says the Morifi Station gives them cause for much joy. Under the guidance of the faithful and zealous evangelist, Isaac, the church there is continually receiving fresh converts, all of whom in their turn become witnesses for Christ. The Chief Smith Pushuli, who could yield the palm to no one in Lessouto for drunkenness, has now completely renounced all intoxicating drink, and continually inquires when the school will be opened. But there are no funds from which to supply even a very small salary. The facilities for proclaiming the Gospel are constantly increasing. M. Cochet having gone to establish another station, M. Christol and his wife are now at Bethesda. The famine in Lessouto is causing extreme suffering, many having died from hunger. If rain is not soon given the desolation will be very great.

DISTRESS AMONGST THE POOR.

IN consequence of large numbers of working-men being unemployed, through the present depression in trade, both in London and the country, our Relief Fund has been taxed to the utmost. Our visitors and missionaries are daily meeting with the most affecting instances of large families being almost without food and fuel for days together. Bread and coal tickets are received with the deepest gratitude by those who have never before had or sought the least dole of charity, while formerly comfortable apartments have been well-nigh denuded of all furniture in order to provide money for the bare necessities of life.

Immediate help for the Relief Fund is earnestly desired to enable us to assist the really deserving poor, by employing workmen in repairing, cleaning, and repainting of our several Mission premises, which very much need them just now, having hitherto been postponed for lack of funds. Thus a double aim would be accomplished; and it is specially desirable in this way to assist honest and worthy workmen, rather than relieve by repeated gifts, which has the unavoidable tendency to pauperise, though at times absolutely necessary.

SOLDIERS' HOME IN DOVER.

DEAR SIR,—May I convey a few words of acknowledgment to the various friends who who have so kindly responded to Miss Bonnycastle's recent appeal on behalf of this Home. Many cheering instances have lately proved that God's Spirit is working amongst our soldiers, as well as amongst the wives who compose the mothers' meeting, held weekly at the Home. The letters which I receive from those who, in the past, have been blessed through its instrumentality, are a testimony to its usefulness.

The need of a larger and more suitable house for carrying on the work is increasingly felt. This house is also at too remote a distance from the Infantry Barracks to draw the numbers who might otherwise come. When the temptations and snares through which they must of necessity pass in the town, before they can reach the Home, are taken into consideration, it seems surprising that so many soldiers attend. Help towards obtaining a new Home, or towards carrying on the work in the present one, will be most thankfully accepted.—Yours truly,

Soldiers' Home, Frances E. Wright,
22, Castle-street, Dover. Lady Supt.

IRISH SOCIETY.—For sixty-six years this society has been carrying on the work of Christian vernacular education in Ireland, chiefly by means of the Holy Scriptures and Scripture portions in Irish. The fruits of the Society's labours are abundant in the United Kingdom, in America, and in many lands. The old Achill Mission, whose history has been one of thrilling interest, is now under the Society's charge, and there is great need of help. A gentleman offers £20 if nineteen others will give like sums before the close of March.

Notes on Daily Readings.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

FEBRUARY 26.—MARK I.

MANY see in the four living creatures beheld by Ezekiel in his "visions of God," and by John in the Apocalypse, illustrations, if not types, of the Evangelists by whom the four Gospels have been written. It has been supposed that, as Matthew discourses chiefly on the royal lineage and Jewish aspects of the life of our Lord, the Lion of the tribe of Judah is the fitting symbol of his Gospel. Mark records the continuous service of Christ; He is there seen as the Servant more distinctly than in any other character; hence the Ox has been regarded as the symbol of this writer. In Luke's special portraiture of Christ as the Son of Man, "the likeness of a Man" has been discerned. And in John's lofty flights, as he depicts for us the Son of God, is beheld the likeness of the Eagle. The idea, while not exhausting or fulfilling the cherubic symbol, is sufficiently striking and useful to warrant its application. Hence Mr. Jukes says: "'The second living creature was like unto an ox,' and the second Gospel reveals the Lord in that aspect of which the ox is the appointed figure. He stands here as the patient Servant and Sacrifice for others, spending and being spent to serve the sons of men."

v. 1.—"The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God."—These are the abrupt opening words of the book. We read elsewhere that this Son of God "took upon Himself the form of a servant, and, being found in fashion as a man, humbled Himself unto death, even the death of the cross." And, indeed, all true service is possible only to the sons of God.—Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson.

v. 18. — "Straightway." — Or, "immediately." It is a peculiarity of this Gospel that this word is so frequently used; forty times out of eighty times in the whole New Testament is the Greek word εὐθέως employed by Mark. It is commonly translated "straightway," or "immediately;" but sometimes "forthwith;" or "as soon as;" and once "anon." Its application, carefully noticed, will supply abundant illustrations of what it is to be "instant in season and out of season" in Christian service.

FEBRUARY 27.—MARK II.

v. 10.—"The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—The omnipotence of Jesus to forgive sins is the joy of the Saviour, and the marvel of angels. The pardon of a sinner is a greater wonder than the creation of a world; for the one is the result of a Divine fiat, the other is the fruit of the incarnation and death of the Son of God. Power to forgive sins is the omnipotence of love; only because Jesus is the Son of God, who loved us, and gave Himself for us, He can say, "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for my Name's sake, and will remember thy sins no more."—Dr. A. Saphir

v. 26.—"He went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest."—In 1 Sam. xxi., from which this account is taken, Ahimelech, not Abiathar, is named as high priest. Lightfoot thus comments on the variation: "It is well enough known what is here said in defence of the purity of the text, namely, that Ahimelech, the father, was called Abiathar, and Abiathar the son was called also Ahimelech. But I suppose that something more was propounded by our Saviour in these words. For it was common to the Jews under Abiathar to understand the Urim and Thummim. Nor without good reason, when it appears, that under the father and the son, both of that name, the mention of inquiring by Urim and Thummim is more frequent than it is ever anywhere else; and after Abiathar the son there is scarcely any mention of it at all. Christ therefore adds, 'in the days of Abiathar the high priest,' therein speaking according to a very received opinion in the nation; as though He had said, David ate the shewbread given him by the high priest, who had the oracle by Urim and Thummim present with him, and who acted by Divine direction."

FEBRUARY 28.—MARK III.

v. 5.—"He looked round about on them with anger, being grieved."—The expression here used is worthy of notice. Anger and grief, the Lord's heart experienced both; the grief could not be without anger, and the anger without the grief would have been merely the wrath of man. God is not angry as men are angry, and because his anger is founded upon grief it is easily changed into pity. The word used by St. Mark, and which occurs only in this place throughout the New Testament, expresses something more than grief, but unfortunately does not admit of being so translated. It implies sympathetic grief, grieving for the sake of those whose hearts were hard, sorrowing with them while his righteous anger was excited against them.—Dr. Goodwin.

v. 14.—"He ordained twelve, that they should be with Him."—Only Mark refers to this latter fact, on which the expositor quoted above remarks: They were Apostles, but that was not their only office. They were to preach the Gospel, and heal sickness, and cast out devils; but they had another office to perform when employed on no missionary journey; and that was, to comfort andsupport their Master in his troubles, and supply some of that solace which in virtue of his human nature He condescended to require. And perhaps we may venture to draw this lesson, as applicable to the ministry of the Church in all times, namely, that they only can be Christ's Apostles who are also Christ's companions; they only can be successful missionaries who love the society of Christ, and with whom Christ Himself condescends to hold close communion."

v 29.—"Is in danger of eternal damnation;" or, according to the reading now generally adopted, "is guilty of an eternal sin;" he commits a sin of which the effects and punishment belong to eternity. —Canon Cook.

v. 30.—"Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit."—Only Mark adds this clause, and it is very significant in its bearing on the whole question of the sin against the Holy Ghost. The rejection of his testimony in and of Jesus Christ closes the door of mercy and hope.

MARCH 1.—MARK IV.

v. 3.—"There went out a sower to sow."—How Christianity was to be established in the East is shown by this parable. It was to be established by the ministry of Christ and his Apostles; and in this parable we have a description of the results of the testimony to Christ down to the present time.—H. Craik.

v. 26.—The parable of the Seed growing secretly.—This parable is only recorded by Mark. It has been well said, that it appears to be parallel with that of the "tares" in Matt. xiii. It stands in the same connection, and sets forth the same leading truth—the apparent non-intervention of God in the working of his Kingdom until the harvest time; a most important lesson, needing often to be kept before the eye of faith, lest we be offended at the sad miscarriage so often visible to sight. Dr. Lindsay remarks: "It seems to be a short sermon on the text, 'The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation.'" Paul may plant, Apollos water, but it is God that gives the increase. The living, growing power of the Gospel is the "power of the living mind and heart of the living God."

v. 39.—"Peace, be still."

"Smooth every wave this heart within;
Let no dark tempest gather there;
Calm every ripple, till my sea
Be, like the polished silver, fair.

One word of old still'd raging wind,
And "Peace, be still!" subdued the wave:
Let that dear word again be heard,
And let the tempest cease to rave.

Jesus! thy word is mighty still:
Creation knows it; let this heart
Know it in all its grace and power,
Till every tumult thence depart."

Dr. H. Bonar.

MARCH 2.—MARK V.

v. 19.—"Go home to thy friends, and tell."—"The greatest demoniac became a preacher to ten cities. In the dark land of Gerasa, Christ leaves for a while a representative of Himself, since they cannot bear His personal presence."—Lange.

Read chapters vii. 31—viii. 9, to see how effective the service thus enjoined became. As Dr. Lindsay observes, "The time was to come, through the preaching of the restored demoniac, when

"e'en the witless Gadarene,
Preferring Christ to swine, shall learn
That life is sweetest when 'tis clean."

v. 36.—"As soon as."—Mr. Jukes notes that this is a special mark of tenderness on our Lord's part. Mark alone relates, that when some said, "Thy daughter is dead," Jesus, as soon as He heard the word that was spoken (as if to save the father a moment's anguish and unbelief), said, "Be not afraid;" brief words revealing the Servant's heart, who, even while He healed, watched to aid the spiritual progress of those He came to comfort. Rev. Samuel Martin has also remarked on this beautiful clause, "As soon." Oh, how important time is to words, and how important time is to deeds! Some of Christ's disciples would have left the father to feel all the anguish of the wound of this communication—left him to feel it through many a long moment—but Christ put his hand on the wound and instantly closed it, saying, "Be not afraid, only trust." "Trust" is the best word here. It is not always the best where you find the words "believe" and "faith," but here it is. In all supplications to the Saviour repress fear and cherish trust.

MARCH 3.—MARK VI.

v. 3.—"Is not this the carpenter?—The original Greek term (τέκτων) means primarily a producer, a worker. This is the only passage in which it is stated that our Lord worked at a handicraft. Our Lord would not be trained to idleness; it was contrary to Jewish habits and teaching. It would have been inconsistent also with the principles of true civilisation, and with the ideal of normal human development. It is no evidence of high civilisation either to lay an arrest on full physical development on the one hand, or, on the other, to encourage only those modes of muscular and nervous activity which are dissociated from useful working and manufacturing skill. While overmuch manual labour depresses both body and mind, handiwork in moderation is an inestimable blessing to men, physically, morally, intellectually, socially. Society will never be right until all classes be industrious and industrial; the higher orders must return to take part in the employments of the lower; the lower must rise up to take part in the enjoyments of the higher.—Dr. Morison.

v. 6.—"He marvelled because of their unbelief." —Trapp says: "Unbelief must needs be a monstrous sin, seeing it puts Christ to the marvel."

v. 31.—"They had not leisure so much as to eat." —It is one of the points peculiar to this Gospel that repeated notice is taken of the way in which our Lord permitted Himself to be intruded upon in his retirement. When the Apostles returned from their mission, and gathered themselves unto Him, Jesus says (and the words are only here), "Come, ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile;" thus showing not only his own tender sympathy for them, but teaching how needful retirement is for those who serve others. "So they departed into a desert place by ship privately;" but the people heard of it, and "ran afoot thither, and came unto Him." And Jesus at once allows the intrusion. He had sought to be alone; nevertheless He rises and teaches them, and then, because it was a desert place, and they were faint, He feeds them, making his own ease give place to their need. And then, oh, perfect service! remembering his weary Apostles, He constrains them to get into a ship and go away to the other side, "while He sent away the people."—Jukes.

MARCH 4.—MARK VII.

v. 18—23.—The defilement of the heart. The words "purging all meats," in ver. 19, are only found in Mark, and should be read as the Evangelist's reflection on the words of our Lord, "this He said," being understood. The addition of these words by Mark, viewed in the light of Peter's undoubted connection with the authorship of this Gospel, and having regard also to the whole discourse, brings to mind the facts recorded in Acts x., and the great saying, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common," and throws a flood of light on the depth of Christ's teaching in the chapter. M. Henry quaintly says, "The list begins with ill-thinking, which is the spring of all our commissions, and ends with no-thinking, which is the spring of all our omissions."

v. 24.—"He could not be hid, for a certain woman . . ." Christ sometimes would be hid, because He hath a spirit above the people's windy air, and their Hosanna. It is a spirit of straw, naughty and base, that is burnt up, with that which caused Themistocles to roam the streets of Athens at midnight, complaining that the trophies of Marathon would not let him sleep. "Honour me before the people" was cold comfort to Saul when the prophet told him God had rejected him. But Christ desired not to be hid from this woman; He was seeking her, and yet He flieth from her. Christ, in this, is such a flier as would gladly have a pursuer.—Rutherford.

v. 34.—"Looking up to heaven, He sighed." Seven acts of our Lord are recorded by Mark in the performance of this miracle. He took him aside, put his fingers into his ears, He spat, touched his tongue, looked up to heaven, sighed, and saith, "Be opened." Bishop Hall says, "He sighed partly for compassion, partly for example, to fetch sighs from us for the miseries of others; sighs of sorrow for them, sighs of desire for their redress. This is not the first time that our Saviour spent sighs, yea, tears, upon human distresses. We are not bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, if we so feel not the smart of our brethren, that the fire of our passion break forth into the smoke of sighs." "Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?"

"UNTO HIM THAT LOVED US."

Rev. i. 5, 6; v. 9, 10; vii. 14.

"To Him that loved us." O the rapture of the thought!
It falls upon my listening ear
With such a tone of music clear,
As only could be brought
By some soft spirit breath of song,
Borne from the heavenly choir along.

"To Him that loved us, and hath washed us from our sin."
O love of Jesus, far above
The wonders of all human love,
O love that died to win
A crown of life, by cross of pain,
That we with Him might live and reign.

"To Him that loved us." Jesus, O that sweetest name;
It falls upon my heart, a charm
The sorrow on life's sea to calm:
Yea, when the storm-winds came Still would the voice of Jesus be Heard o'er the wild waves of the sea.

"To Him that loved us." Jesus, when mine eyes shall see Thee in thy beauty, O my King,
With ransomed saints I then shall sing
This song triumphantly:
"No mortal harp hath notes to raise,
Redeemer, half thy love and praise."

THE "SHIPWRECKED MARINER" for January contains a thrilling story of wreck and rescue on the Welsh Coast. Seven thousand lives have been saved during the past year in connection with shipwrecks. It is sad to read that the casualties from collisions are multiplying to an alarming extent. The number of recorded disasters from this cause alone during 1884 was nearly two hundred. We hope many of our readers will help this excellent Society by purchasing and perusing its magazine. It may be obtained of the Secretary, Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, Hibernia Chambers London Bridge.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

IN aid of the funds of the proposed LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, received One Hundred and Ninety-nine Shillings from "Appeal," per CHRISTIAN. Many thanks. Several friends have requested to have Shilling Collecting Cards forwarded. WILL KINDLY READERS EXTEND THIS EASY METHOD OF HELPING THE QUIET POOR? Included in the above 199s. is One Pound each, from Mrs. B., Mrs. G., D. H., and A. T. Sum total collected, £200. Contributions gratefully received by Miss JULIA FOX, Treasurer, 54, Kensington Park-road, London; or by the Profits to be devoted to sending over-worked women, free, to Mrs. Mashman's London and Brighton Convalescent Home

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

(2) A war between England and Russia, resulting in disaster to Russian arms.
(3) A Russo-Turkish alliance (vide p. 106).

"Russia has for some time pressed an alliance upon the Sultan. The Turk probably fears to reject it" (vide Daily Telegraph's Leader, JANUARY 20).

"The point of gravest peril to England at the present moment is not Egypt, but Afghanistan. We may shortly have to use language towards the Government of St. Petersburg which will necessitate either her retirement or our advance" (vide Daily Telegraph's Leader, FEBRUARY 13).

"The subject of Mr. Houghton's book is of deep moment. There is much valuable information, a firm grasp of the whole subject of Unfulfilled Prophecy characterising the book."—The Christian.

John Foxe.

Opinions of the Press.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."

Christian Leader.

"We are pleased to see the "Book of Martyrs" well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in The Sword and Trowel.

"A new edition of 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs' has been issued by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, which is well worthy of attention from those who have not already placed this famous work upon their shelves. The present edition is well bound, and contains the Rev. J. Milner's valuable notes and comments, and an essay on Popery by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin."

The Rock.

"The volume is printed in beautiful type; and is well illustrated. We welcome this edition, which well deserves to find its place in every household which does not possess a copy of the book; and it should find its way into our libraries, juvenile and others."—The Baptist.

"We are glad to see such an excellent edition of this famous work. It has been issued at a seasonable time. Most of the copies we have seen are very quaint and old-fashioned. We congratulate the publishers that they have done their work well. For half-a-guinea we have a well-bound book, very attractive in appearance, full of good reading and good pictures. There is an excellent essay on Popery by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, and an interesting life of Rev. John Foxe; a copious index to the principal names complete this volume of nearly eleven hundred pages."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a new edition of 'Foxe's Book of Martyrs,' which deserves a word of greeting. Nothing we could say would add to the fame of so well-established a Protestant classic as 'Foxe's Martyrs.' The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times, having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others, and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether, it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound, and suitable for a gift-book."—The Record.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF CONSUMPTION "GIVEN UP" AS HOPELESS.

Mrs. F. Wingrove, of 35, Chantry-road, Brixton, S.W., writing for medicine for family use, says:—"I have very great faith in it, and advise all consumptive people to take it. I was given up by Dr. Cotton, of the Brompton Hospital, and I believe it is owing to your valuable medicine that I am alive to-day. You are at liberty to make use of my letter in any way you think proper."

THE EDITOR OF "THE CHRISTIAN GLOBE" writes, December 4:—

"A lady from the Isle of Wight, whose name we are not at liberty to publish, sends us quite a list of cures in which she is interested: the sufferers have been induced by her to adopt Mr. Congreve's treatment, and in every case with not only beneficial, but marvellous results. We feel that we should be neglecting a plain and manifest duty did we not make known the result of our inquiries, more especially at this period of the year, when the poor victims of this dread disease are day by day losing their lives through what it is hardly too strong to designate as 'The Nation's Curse.'"

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

The Christian.

SIX MASTER MOTIVES APPEALED TO IN THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

IN the Christian life of our time there is nothing more hopeful than the many and urgent inquiries that are being made continually after the highest attainable standard of practical holiness. But not a few of those who are asking this question are standing still, irresolute with perplexity, fearing to advance, lest, going beyond what is written, they become fanatical. It is to such that the following considerations are addressed.

What does the Master expect from the rank and file of his followers? Answer this aright, and you solve all initial difficulties; for his expectations respecting them must always coincide with their ability to fulfil these expectations.

In the Sermon on the Mount, our Lord urges certain duties upon his disciples, on the ground (1) of their relationship to the Father as children; (2) of their full assurance of this relationship; and (3) of the new life which they now possess, corresponding to this new relationship, with all its appropriate affections and motives. In other words, He appeals to them as sons of God, who know their adoption, and who, being filled with the Spirit of adoption, are strong in all the impulses of true sonship.

Remembering that these suppositions of his concerning us mark the real boundaries of our present possibilities, let us ask what they are. What motives does He credit us with? We shall see, I think, that they all pre-suppose a bright and wonderful child-life—a life strong in the confidence of the great Father's goodness, smile, and presence.

(1) Our Lord appeals to the child's faith in the Father's sympathy and understanding. "Your Father knoweth" (vi. 7, 8, and 32). The knowledge referred to is evidently the knowledge of perfect compassion. Not "your God," but "your Father," knoweth. He cannot know our need without feeling for us in our need; so with exquisite simplicity Jesus says—as though that were quite enough—"Your Father knoweth." What an appeal to the child's faith in the Father's listening heart!

(2) The child's faith in the Father's faithfulness (vi. 25—30). He was enforcing the great law of uncarefulness. Pointing to the birds who "sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns," he added, "yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" Then, alluding to the inimitable loveliness of the lilies of the field, He exclaims: "Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field . . . . shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"

The form of rebuke which his teaching now takes, assumes that those to whom He then spoke had not yet attained to the full liberty of adoption. They were still men "of little faith." Nevertheless, the whole passage assumes that a life of happy confidence in the Father's providing is the only natural life of a child of God, anything short of which is simply unreasonable. His aim is to arouse into triumphant activity that child-confidence in the Father's care which already existed, but which, as yet, was more or less latent.

Consider how absolutely impossible it is to the natural man to live without carefulness; and then estimate, if you can, the wonder and miracle of this childlife of confidence toward God, which the Spirit can beget in, and which Jesus expects from, every Christian believer.

(3) The child's delight in being like his father, or, filial imitativeness (v. 45 and 48). He had stated the law of love to enemies: love, not kindness merely—love, that can honestly bless them, that can deny itself for their good—yea, love so sincere that it can stand the searching of the Father's eye, and thus exercise itself in prayer for those who have wounded us in our tenderest sensibilities by malicious and despiteful treatment. We gaze at a duty so superhuman as this, and ask, "Whence, for weak and revengeful mortals like us, is there moral power sufficient to raise us to this great height of obedience?" He, Himself, answers our question in the verses following, by appealing boldly to two familiar and easily understood motives.

The child's imitativeness is the first of these: "That ye may be the children of your Father, &c." (v. 45), and "Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (v. 48).

What true-hearted son of a good father but feels a glow of honest pride when told he is growing like his father! "To do as father does," is the great ambition of many a noble boy. Thus, when our Lord would urge his people to a sublime and God-like duty, He appeals to this sweet and homely motive: "That ye may be the children of your Father." Do this, and you will be like Him.

(4) The other motive appealed to is the child's regard for the family honour. "What do ye more than others?" (v. 46, 47.) See also vi. 32: "For after all these things do the Gentiles seek."

Here the grand argument of "Noblesse oblige" finds its highest use. We are startled by the simple directness and unanswerable force of its application here. We reply, "Yes! we must be superior to the world's children, if only for the sake of the heavenly family. The family honour is in our keeping. That it may take no soil while in our care shall be our constant prayer. No longer can we be satisfied to equal the world's best. A sense of what is due to the family name impels us to the divine and miraculous life of forgiveness and love,—a life so manifestly wonderful that the world shall own its wonder to the glory of the Father."

(5) The child's delight in the father's approbation (vi. 1-6, and 16-18). "Thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee" (R.V.). Whether in doing righteousness, in prayer, or in fasting, we are to be nobly independent of men, hungering only for the Father's smile. Appreciation of the Father's good pleasure is to be the very wine of life. It is most beautiful to see how confidently our Lord appeals to this motive as one who knew its sufficiency. He supposes that the child's joy in the Father's smile will be rich enough and full enough to overcome all natural egotism, all self-exalting ambition, however inveterate. Thus, by his child-love, he is set free to walk in the light of the Lord, to dwell in the secret of his presence.

(6) The child's supreme regard for the father's honour: (v. 16, vi. 9.): "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Hallowed be thy name," put in the forefront of the Disciples' Prayer, as the great petition which should, and would, have preference of all others. Observe, too, the great motive of ch. v. 16: "Shine, . . that they may . . . glorify your Father." Where is the Christian who does not know something of the persistent desire to be good in order to be great? How this baser motive clings to us! How it invades and pollutes even our highest purposes, our most fervent prayers! Desire for distinction, that last infirmity of godly men, which has probably spoilt more good Christians than any other evil whatever, is here supposed to be mastered. Our Lord speaks as to children who are swallowed up of the Father's honour. "The expulsive power of a new affection" has driven out the sneaking devil of egotism, and has united the heart to fear God's name. "Shine, that they may glorify your Father." No side reference here to the opinion even of the good. It is rather taken for granted that the pure purpose of honouring the Father, in a world in which He is ever dishonoured, has lifted the disciple clear above all secondary motives, be they bad or good.

In conclusion, (1) the foregoing reflections bear very directly on family life. We see how Christ bases the Christian life on family principles. Much of the force of his teaching, then, will depend on our practical acquaintance with those principles at work in our own families. The child who lives lovingly, obediently, and trustfully, towards his earthly parent, other things being equal, will respond to our Lord's teaching far more readily than the one who knows little of filial confidence and love.

(2) We may here see the glorious power of the Spirit of adoption, raising men, while still in the world, from the death of ungodliness and self, into the free and steadfast and overcoming life of God's children beloved.

(3) Our Lord assumes this life for all his people. Therefore all may attain to it. This attainment is not by struggling, but by resting: not by waiting, but by boldly taking the Lord at his word, as Peter did when he stepped from the boat on to the water at Christ's command. We must do bravely "the next thing," in the quiet faith that He will fill us with the Holy Spirit, as we obey, both according to our need and according to our faith. This child-life is attained, not by climbing, but by dropping—by such a helpless reliance on the Risen One, that we can always say, "It is no more I . . . . but Christ."

"If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give his Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

Leith. JOHN PEARCE CLARK.

COMMERCE.

[The following paper by a well-known Christian of long and large experience is inserted, not with the idea that it will find general acceptance on all points, but as touching a subject which well deserves the deepest consideration, in view of the lurid light shown by the Apocalyptic prophecy (chap. xviii.) on the issue of the commercial system.]

UNDERLYING the questions of cheapness and competition, of underselling and starvation wagès, lies one which in the most successful commercial country of the world will not readily catch public attention, I mean the morality of trade. Some months ago, a young man uttered in my hearing this sentiment, "There is no commercial morality!" and I felt constrained to rebuke him. Since then, I have pondered the subject in this aspect: what Divine sanction has trade got? then I am pressed further to inquire, what is trade? To which I venture to give this reply: Trade or traffic is the gaining of a livelihood by the avoidance of manual labour and the ingenious use of brain, lips, or pen. What is commercial enterprise? It is the obtaining possession of commodities which the producer parts with on certain conditions, in ignorance of the value they possess in other places. I am speaking in general terms, and of the form which trade usually assumes when new countries have been opened up.

The converse of the last statement also holds good; commercial enterprise means the disposal of commodities to consumers at values beyond their cost, the consumer being ignorant of the cost of their production. The plunder of the Indies, of China, of America, and other countries, and the enrichment thereby of England, was limited and cut short only by the rush of fresh adventurers to share the prizes, and by the increasing knowledge of true values which peoples, formerly ignorant, began to acquire as communications became more frequent.

The introduction of the electric telegraph has, to my mind, been a blow to trafficking or trading, for it obliterated much of the ignorance of each other which prevailed amongst peoples at different extremities of the world, and gave them knowledge of what their productions were really worth. With increase of this kind of knowledge, trade must to a much larger extent than at present "go to the dogs." Of course there is Atrica still to be plundered, and perhaps Central Asia and part of America, but the outlook for remunerative trade, in the sense of large profits, is not reassuring; and in a not very distant future there looms a picture of faded prosperity, which Englishmen will do well to face and try to meet while there is time.

To return, however, to the motive which animates all trade, namely, the possibility of gains without hard (i.e., manual) labour—that manifestly was not God's intention when he set man to gain his living "by the sweat of his face;" and I believe agricultural labour for the production of food, and handicrafts for the preparation of clothing, will be found the occupations best suited to maintain mankind in a healthy state of mind and body. John Woolmer wrote in the last century, "If the leadings of the Spirit were more attended to, more people would be engaged in the sweet employment of husbandry, where labour is agreeable and healthful." And again: "They who apply to merchandise for a living have great need to be well experienced in that precept which the prophet Jeremiah laid down for his scribe, 'Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek thou not.'" These are not the popular opinions of to-day, when the peasant's or small farmer's son sets before him the ambition to wear a black coat and secure a seat in a London office, and is disillusioned when it is too late in life to learn a handicraft.

Will some of your readers answer the question with which I began: "What Divine sanction is there for trade?" They will find it much easier to discover in Holy Writ many an allusion to the disfavour with which trading and its inevitable practices are looked at by Him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. There is an ominous synonym which puts Canaan or Canaanite as the equivalent of trafficker; and there is a doubtful compliment, twice repeated, which I fear Englishmen have been only too ready to take to themselves—applied to Tyre in Isa. xxiii. 8: "Whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth;" applied to the future Babylon in Rev. xviii. 23: "Thy merchants were the great men of the earth;" of the earth, mark you, not heavenly people, but of the earth earthly. Hamor, the father of Shechem, invited Jacob and his sons to "make marriages with us, ... and dwell and trade in the land;" but for ages they stuck to agriculture and prospered; in their decline and fall, and throughout their dispersion, they have become as "Canaanites;" but when restored again they will once more become husbandmen. In a renewed world we may hope to see trafficking reduced to a minimum, and "every man under his vine and under his fig tree," as in Solomon's days. Before that blessed time, however, there comes a period awful to contemplate, when, as we read in Rev. xiii. 17, "No man might buy or sell save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name" in right hand or forehead. I have heard a servant of Christ suggest that this mark may signify the spirit of falsehood, which is already so prevalent in modern trade.

Parents! better teach your sons to be carpenters, or tailors, or shoemakers in these darkening and ominous days, than fit them for graduating in a school of evil from which they may emerge qualified to receive the above-named diploma at the hands of the enemy of God. The cure for much of the distress of the present time, could it be administered, would be the depopulating of our overgrown cities and the setting some of the people to work in England and a great many more in our Colonies—not "to make their fortunes," which seems the modern ideal of human happiness, but "to earn their living," as Adam did; and "having food and raiment therewith to be content."

Having been in trade, and conversant with many trades of various degrees, from the merchant prince to the small shopkeeper, I would shrink from bringing a railing accusation against the class to which I belong; but it is apparent to myself and to many others that high-toned morality is not on the increase. In the light of experience and of Scripture, we may gather an impression that there is a tendency inherently downward and not upward in ordinary traffic; and that a society not permeated with sober mindedness and godliness will not succeed in checking the downward course of trade customs which a fierce competition throughout Europe is hastening on.

TIME CHART OF THE WORLD.—A very interesting and skilfully-prepared chart has been prepared by Messrs. Kendal and Dent, 106, Cheapside, showing the local time at the principal cities throughout the world as compared with Greenwich "mean time," and indicating how much it is fast or slow at each place.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.—2.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.*

By Rev. NEWMAN HALL.

THE disciples fell into the error of inquiring about the time of their Lord's coming rather than about their work meanwhile: "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" He did not satisfy their curiosity, but He admonished them of their duty, and promised them needful help. "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons; but ye shall receive power, and ye shall be my witnesses" (Acts i. 6—8). Just so; we are not to be so anxious to know when or how He will appear, as what is our duty, and how we may best be prepared whenever He may come. The nearer the Advent, the stronger the motive to be prepared for it. If Christ may at any moment come to the earth, at every moment I ought to be so at work for Him that, coming suddenly, He may find me at my post wakeful and working, and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" How, then, can the expectation of his speedy Advent diminish missionary zeal?

On the contrary, it should urge to more diligent service. "Wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind; be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. i. 13).

If, as we have seen, the conversion of the world is not the first to be expected to prepare for his Advent, but his Advent to secure that conversion, we may in our own day witness it. The children of our households and schools, with a long life before them, may see the Lord Christ on earth. The hope is not confined to children. They who have spent half their days—even they whose heads are silvered with age—may take part in the triumph of the Lord. "Behold, I come quickly." He may be at our door. "The Lord is at hand."

Suppose we are altogether unprepared to meet Him: neglecting the salvation he offers, and refusing the obedience He claims: suppose that, coming suddenly, He should find us among the enemies whom He will destroy with the brightness of His appearing! Suppose He should find us simply holding aloof from his cause, though wishing to be saved by his grace; ashamed to confess Him before men, and thus liable to be classed among those of whom the Son of Man will be ashamed before His Father and the holy angels!

Rather let us "come behind in no gift, waiting for His coming." Let us cultivate patience in the enduring of trial, and in persevering endeavours after increased holiness. This is the argument of St. James, chap. v., verses 7, 8: "Be patient unto the coming of the Lord; stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The expectation of his near approach, while ignorant of the exact time of it, should prompt to increased vigilance. "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come" (Matt. xxiv. 42). "Little children, abide in Him; that, when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at his coming" (1 John ii. 28).

They who trust and love Him must desire his return. Are they inconsistent in desiring it soon? Is it a sign of weakness? St. Paul speaks of the crown that was laid up not for himself only, but "for all those who love his appearing." The Thessalonian converts

"turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from Heaven" (1 Thess. i. 9, 10). Believers now as of old, are "Looking for that blessed hope." Loving parents long for their children's return home. Friends look out earnestly for friends. A loyal nation is on the alert to welcome back their monarch. The Church desires the Advent of her Lord. "Behold, I come quickly. Even so, come Lord Jesus."

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MARCH 5.—MATTHEW XVIII. 23–35.

v. 21.—"Lord, how oft shall I forgive my brother?" —Peter thought seven times would be a great exercise of charity, but Jesus said, "Until seventy times seven," meaning that there should be always in us a spirit of readiness to forgive. We have often to pray, "Forgive us our trespasses," and we must always be able to add, "As we forgive them that trespass against us," otherwise God will not answer our prayer (Matt. vi. 14, 15).

v. 27.—"The lord of that servant, moved with compassion, forgave him that debt."—The parable is intended to teach us God's gracious readiness to pardon all sinners who repent, and confess their sins, and to show how those who are forgiven should be, like their Father in heaven, kind and merciful to all who offend or injure them. (Read Eph. iv. 32.)

"Go imitate the grace divine,
The grace that blazes like a sun;
Hold forth your fair, though feeble light;
Through all your lives let mercy run."

MARCH 6.—MATTHEW XIX. 1–15.

v. 12.—"He that is able to receive it, let him receive it."—There are some things in the portion of today which children cannot understand, and which even older people are not fully clear about; but if we wait on God, all his words will in due time be made plain. Jesus said to his disciples in John xvi. 12, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now;" so He says to us, and we must just wait on Him to learn his will more perfectly day by day.

v. 13-15.—"Then there were brought unto Him little children."—The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse says: "Jesus loves children, all children. The healthy, noisy, merry boys and girls, as well as the pale-faced little ones. He is not simply interested in them, but He has pleasure in them. He stood watching them once as they played in the market-place. It was not often that the meek and lowly Saviour was 'much displeased,' but this is what we read of Him, when the disciples would have kept the little ones from Him. He has a delight in helping and blessing them. . . . Jesus is still the children's Friend; and those who come to Him shall meet the same gracious welcome, and the same loving response."

MARCH 7.—MATTHEW XXI. 16–30.

v. 16.—"One came and said unto Him."—If we read this narrative as it is recorded in the other Gospels as well as here, we shall find several commendable features in this young ruler's approach to Christ. He came running (Mark x. 17). This denotes his earnestness. He kneeled, evidencing his humility. He said, "Good Master" (that is, Teacher); he was willing to be taught. He asked what he should do, the spirit of obedience was in him; as Dr. Adam Clarke says, "he had worked hard to no purpose, and was willing to work further provided he had a prospect of succeeding." His question was most important, and demanding serious thought; it really was, "How can I be saved?" But he was making one fatal mistake, he had not yielded his heart to the Lord: he had not learned that

"Till to Jesus Christ we cling
By a simple faith,
'Doing' is a deadly thing,
'Doing' ends in death."

MARCH 8.—MATTHEW XX. 1–16.

v. 6.—"Why stand ye here all the day idle?"—All who love Jesus can find something to do for Him if they seek his aid, and obey his call. We have read of a little girl in one of the States of America, named Annie Gale, who trusted in Christ as her Saviour. The news of her conversion soon spread through the place. One day a friend called on her father, and said, "It's all nonsense for your Annie to think she has been converted. She was like a little angel always; she was good enough before. If Dan Hunter now could be turned round and made a Christian I'd believe in it." Annie heard this conversation, and her heart beat with pity for poor Dan. She knew him to be one of the worst and vilest of characters. Impelled with love for his soul, she went to his wretched dwelling and began to talk to him tenderly about Jesus, and God's love to the chief of sinners. After telling of her own conversion she asked him if he were not a sinner, and if he did not need the same Saviour she had found? Poor old Dan's heart was touched; he fell upon his knees and cried, "Lord, have mercy on the worst of sinners." God heard that earnest, penitent cry; and Annie left the old man praising the mercy that could save a wretch like him. Let your prayer be, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

MARCH 9.—MATTHEW XX. 17–34.

*v.*27.—"Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."—There is nothing lost by meekness and yielding. Abraham (Gen. xiii. 9) yielded his right of choice. Lot taketh it. And behold! Lot is crossed in that which he chose, Abraham blessed in that which was left him. As heaven is taken by violence, so is earth with meekness. And God (the true Proprietor) loves no tenants better, nor grants longer leases to any than the meek.—Trapp.

v. 30.—"When they heard that Jesus passed by." —Happy it was for them that, though blind, yet they were not deaf. For as death came in by the ear (Gen. iii. 1—5), so life: "Hear, and your soul shall live" (Isa. lv. 3). These blind beggars heard of Christ by the ear, but that satisfied them not unless their eyes could see Him (Job xlii. 5).—Ibid.

v. 32.—"Jesus stood still."—See the power there is in fervent prayer; Christ stands and stays, though in haste (Luke xii. 50), to hear the blind beggars' petition, and He gave them their desire.

MARCH 10.—MATTHEW XXI. 1–16.

v. 5.—"Thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass."—This is a quotation from Zechariah ix. 9, and the Jews ought to have known that Jesus was He whom their prophets had taught them to expect; but they were proud, self-righteous, and unbelieving. Some, however, saw in these things a fulfilment of the prophecy, and among those who hailed Jesus as the King, and cried "Hosanna," were children. How their voices pleased the Lord, reminding Him of the words in Psalm viii. 2, which you find He quotes in verse 16. Have you, dear children, learned to love Jesus, and to hail Him as your King? If so, you can rejoice in thinking of Him as soon to come again, bringing eternal salvation and joy to all who look for Him. Miss Havergal beautifully says:—

"Thou art coming, O my Saviour!
Thou art coming, O my King!
In thy beauty all-resplendent,
In thy glory all-transcendent:
Well may we rejoice and sing.

"Thou art coming, Thou art coming!
We shall meet Thee on thy way;
We shall see Thee, we shall know Thee,
We shall bless Thee, we shall show Thee
All our hearts could never say.

"What an anthem that will be,
Ringing out our love to Thee,
Pouring out in rapture sweet
At Thine own all-glorious feet!"

MARCH 11.—MATTHEW XXI. 27–32.

v. 22.—"All things whatsoever ye ask in prayer." —This is true for old and young; if we only ask in faith, God will grant our request. His promises never fail. The "one thing needful" in prayer, in order to its power with God, is faith in the name of Jesus. A little Irish boy once said, in answer to the question "What is faith?" "It is a heart grasp of Jesus Christ."

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

We are getting many sorrowful messages from some parts of the North of Africa just now; our young readers will be pleased, we think, to read some extracts of a happier description, lately received, from the letter of a missionary's youthful daughter in Morocco:—

It has stormed here for six weeks, and the wind is raging so now that a beautiful evergreen is blown down and others broken and destroyed. But while all this is going on outside, I have something peaceful to tell you about in our own home. Papa said you wanted some of us children to write to the children of your young people's Sunday-afternoon meeting. I think they would like to hear about my brother Frank's conversion. He is nine years old and will be ten in March. All the rest of us gave our hearts to Jesus before we were quite that age. Frank talked a good deal about being a Christian before we left America, but it was only yesterday that he came and told us all that he asked Christ to forgive his sins, and that he believed He had done it, and that he is saved now.

We are so very glad that all the family love Jesus now but little Anna. She asked little sister Gertie and me to go in our room, for she wanted to pray. The dear little thing kneeled down, and this is what she said all by herself, "Dear Lord, make Anna a Christian. Wash all my sins away. Amen." If all the little children to whom you may read this were saved, how nice it would be.

From your little friend, P. B.

ORPHANS' HOME, WEST SQUARE, LONDON.

THE new building for the orphans in West-square being now finished, furnished, and occupied, all concerned in the management of the institution are most anxious that a permanent country branch should be obtained as soon as possible. There is a freehold house for sale in a good part of Gravesend, which may be bought for £1450—and by some outlay be rendered suitable for an orphanage. The estimate for repairs and alterations is £150. There is a piece of land belonging to this house, which would afford good space for erecting additional accommodation, and still leave ample room for garden and playground. There are always many little Londoners needing change of air, and there are some who can never thrive in London air, or be happy amidst a large number. £300 is in hand for the Gravesend Building Fund. We must have the money before we make the purchase, for in this, as in every other part of the work, we purpose to keep clear of debt. As nearly as we can now estimate, we shall want—For purchase of freehold, £1450; for repairs and alterations, £150; for building school-room, play-room, and additional dormitories, £1000; for furnishing, £500; in all, £3100.

Will our friends remember that in this case we may lose the opportunity of purchase unless help is given quickly, and will all who send for this purpose kindly state distinctly that their gifts are to be taken for the Gravesend Building Fund.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—The Committee have issued their fifteenth annual report, which gives interesting details of their work and labour of love. Since the commencement of the charity 270 persons, whose ages vary from 60 to 90 years, have been cared for and sheltered within the walls of the Homes. A small income must be secured ere the applicant can be granted a room. One hundred and seventeen inmates are now in residence, while sixty-seven candidates remain outside in hope of a room in the future. Eight Homes have been opened at 7, 9, 11, 15, and 17, Minford-gardens, West Kensington-park; 25 and 27, St. George's-road, Notting-hill; and 65, Walterton-road, St. Peter's-park, Paddington. They are all open to visitors between the hours of 3 and 5 p.m. The honorary secretary is Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

ALL SAINTS', PADDINGTON.

THE Mission in this parish closed on Monday, February 16, with a thanksgiving service, which was fairly well attended. If the number who went up to receive memorial cards from the missioner is in any way a test, we may indeed be thankful for the result. The services were characterised by great earnestness and increasing interest as the week wore on, and we can gratefully testify to the work of the Holy Spirit on individual souls; some being awakened, some being brought to a clearer light, and some who had been wanderers being brought back to the fold. An increased church attendance is one noticeable result, and the spirit of inquiry that pervades the atmosphere proclaims the fact that there are still some fragments to be gathered up.

HOLY TRINITY, GRAY'S-INN-ROAD.

The missioners for this large and poor parish were Rev. G. R. Hadow, rector of Calstone, Wilts; Rev. Geo. Norris, rector of Blo-Norton, Norfolk; and Rev. E. G. Wyld, vicar of Mere, Wilts. During the Mission sixty services were held in the church and seven in the Mission-room. Of these five were especially for children, and were well attended; six for women, which were fairly attended; and two especially for men, which were not well attended. The other services were all appreciated by fairly numerous congregations. The marked attention and evident earnestness attending the whole of the services lead to a hope that the Mission has had a beneficial effect upon the people, who had been prepared for the Mission by the diligent visitation of a very devoted band of workers.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH, MARYLEBONE-ROAD.

The Mission preacher here was Rev. W. Haslam, author of "From Death unto Life," &c. The services commenced on Saturday, February 7, concluding on Tuesday evening, February 17. Three services were conducted daily. In the mornings Mr. Haslam preached to large congregations a series of discourses on "the Christian Life." In the evenings the sermons were of a more general character. Every evening the church was crowded to overflowing, many being unable to obtain admission. After-meetings followed the evening services, and hundreds of people remained to them. Mr. Haslam, at these after-meetings, assisted by clergy and other friends, conversed with any seeking instruction and sympathy. Many were deeply impressed, and it is hoped that much real and lasting good was done.

The services excited great interest in this important and improving neighbourhood, and Mr. Haslam's visit and unwearied efforts will long be remembered with gratitude by all who had the privilege of attending his ministrations.

ST. JOHN'S, PADDINGTON.

The missioners at this church, which enjoys the faithful ministry of Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley, were Rev. Sydney A. Selwyn, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Sheerness, and Rev. Herbert James, Rector of Livermere, Suffolk. Several thousands of tracts bearing upon the Mission were distributed, and each evening before the service Christian workers scoured the neighbourhood in search of men and women they might be able to persuade to come and listen to the Gospel message. Throughout the Mission God's power was being revealed, and the Holy Spirit was showing Himself strong on behalf of his faithful and earnest messenger. All excitement was absent, but God was present to convict, convert, and build up. The numbers who attended increased daily, and on the last Sunday evening the church was densely crowded. After the thanksgiving service on Monday over 300 remained for the Lord's Supper.

By far the larger bulk of the congregation remained always for the after-meeting, and some stayed till longer in order to receive personal help from the missioner or some Christian worker. By this means many a doubt and difficulty were cleared up and peace obtained. At the end of the Mission papers were distributed, to which those who wished to testify to having received any spiritual blessing were requested to attach their names and addresses, and also to state whether they wished to join any of the various parochial agencies and classes, or to undertake any Christian work. It is not for man to measure the spiritual results of God's work; but there is every reason to believe that a rich harvest of souls has been gathered in, and that many of God's children have received a lift in their spiritual life.

G. L. H.

ST. SIMON'S, UPPER CHELSEA.

Heartfelt gratitude to our heavenly Father for the Mission at St. Simon's is widespread over this parish. The earnest, telling tones in which our soul-loving missioner, Rev. R. J. Bird, delivered his messages of love and mercy, made themselves felt in many a heart. A crowded church on the last evening of the Mission, and an administration of the Holy Communion to over 140 people, testified to the interest that had been awakened. A manifest blessing has rested upon the Mission; believers have been drawn to a closer walk with God, many have been turned to the Lord, and others have been led to inquire their way Zionward.

We now look for abiding results. We pray that God will sustain and carry on the work which this Mission has begun.

BRUNSWICK CHAPEL, UPPER BERKELEY-STREET.

The Mission was conducted here by Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Vicar of St. Thomas, Nottingham. Earnest preparation and prayer had been made for some weeks previously, and God most graciously fulfilled the expectations of his people. Each evening the congregations increased, and good work was done in the after-meetings.

One feature of the Mission has been the success of the effort made to bring in working men. It was felt that at a time like this, when so many of them are out of employment, such efforts were more than usually needed. Many of these have been gathered night after night in the Mission Hall (Blandford Hall) to free teas and thence marched to the church, where several of them were completely broken down under a sense of sin, and, so far as man can judge, accepted Christ as their Saviour.

In the afternoons Mr. Cleworth gave a course of excellent addresses on the Christian life which could not fail to be useful. On Ash Wednesday Rev. E. W. Moore (Incumbent) spoke in the morning on self-denial, and in the afternoon Rev. Stewart Walford gave an address to servants.

The saddest part of a Mission is that it comes so quickly to an end. In this case all engaged in it felt that the wave of blessing was at its highest just when it was necessary to bring the services to a close. But though the Mission is over the work will not cease, and those engaged in it set out refreshed in soul and spirit by the blessings of the last ten days to renew their service. Rev. E. W. Moore proposes to preach a course of Sunday morning sermons on the Cross of Christ, beginning March, and on Wednesday evenings at 7.30 to speak to young converts and others on the first difficulties of the Christian life.

ALL SOULS' CHURCH, LANGHAM-PLACE.

Dr. Kinns sends to us an account of several of the services which he attended in this church, where Rev. H. Dening was the special missioner. Speaking of the Friday evening meeting, he says: —God's Spirit was certainly outpoured upon that occasion upon both preacher and hearers. It must not be supposed that only the rich and well-to-do attend this West-end church. The sittings during the Mission are free, and numbers of very poor men and women have been there. I was conversing with one young man, who said that he had enjoyed the service; but though decently dressed, he was out of work, and had no home to go to, and no money to pay for a lodging, and said he feared he should have to walk about the streets all night. Another in a similar position told a gentleman that he had that night obtained something better than bodily food.

Besides the conversion of the ungodly, these meetings help to cheer and encourage young Christians. A lad engaged at a large draper's told me that he could not get to the meetings till late, as it was generally half-past nine before he could leave the shop; but he enjoyed even a portion of the services, and said that he and ome of his companions had prayer-meetings in one of their bedrooms, which they found very helpful and happy gatherings.

There were several young sceptics in the congregation who stayed for the after-meeting; some of them the rector and his workers turned over to me. I found them posted up in some of the very old objections which have been confuted again and again, and when hard pressed they could not hold their ground. I trust that the very fact of their staying to the after-meeting was an evidence of their being discontented with their unbelief.

The Sunday evening service was equally impressive, and the congregation and the overflow-meeting as large as ever. A great number stayed for the after-meeting, and many interesting cases came under notice.

ST. STEPHEN'S, HOUNSLOW.

Before and during the Mission, with a band of workers, we thoroughly aroused the parish with papers, tracts, and invitations. The numbers attending the evening service nightly increased, and the power of God was mightily present. At the Thanksgiving Service, on Monday, February 16, the church was well filled. About seventy stood up to testify to having received definite blessing during the Mission, and nearly one hundred partook of the Holy Communion. Rev. H. G. Thwaites, our missioner, is not only a splendid evangelist, but a divinely-taught teacher. His addresses on the Christian Life at the morning meetings were very largely attended, and were very refreshing, helpful, and searching.

The parish has been thoroughly stirred, and we have undoubtedly had a wave of blessing which I believe will bring forth untold fruit. A Bible-class has been formed for men, twenty-eight having given their names to join. A young women's class is also to be commenced. There were services for children, and, as a result, more than 100 have joined the Children's Scripture Union; they have promised to attend a weekly Bible-class in connection therewith.

The vicar had a conference of Christians, when many undertook definite work for Christ; a weekly prayer-meeting is to be commenced.

REJOICE IN THE LORD.

A LADY who was possessed of nearly every earthly blessing, yet carried the most miserable countenance it was possible to behold. She was the remark of all her friends, who used to say they believed she was suffering internally, or she could not exhibit such a sad exterior. She went to some of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings at Croydon. One evening when the evangelist was speaking of Peter following "afar off," the truth went home, and sent this sad one back to her friends, many miles distant, rejoicing.

Late at night she reached home. The maid who admitted her went and told her fellow-servant. "Mary, whatever has come to Mistress! She looks so bright and happy I can't believe she is the same person." All saw the change, and wondered at its cause, for all had looked upon her as a consistent Christian. When they found that from being the saddest she had become the happiest in the house, they asked her the reason. "Oh!" she replied, rapture lighting her face, "for years I had regarded my Saviour as the Husbandman in a far country, of whom I often thought, but with whom I held but infrequent intercourse, and that not face to face. But now He lives in my heart, and I am filled with completest satisfaction and joy. Mr. Moody showed me that it was I who was 'afar off.' The very moment I saw that I drew near in faith, and have been "made whole from that very hour.'"

She is but one of many who have been thus blessed; but there may be some who read this who are, unconsciously, still following Jesus afar off—some who still wear the expression of sadness, forgetting that the word is "Rejoice in the Lord." To such may the blessing of the Lord come with power as they read, "Draw nigh to the Lord and He will draw nigh to you." Let your soul be resting on Christ, and your busiest or saddest day will be marked with parentheses, where you and your Lord have met and embraced. Only complete communion with Christ can remove the shadow of the world, and put the "joy of the Lord" on our weary faces.

M. Butler Gerds.

INTEMPERANCE AMONG WOMEN.—Steps have been taken to meet the sad increase of intemperance among women. A Home has recently been opened, with accommodation for fourteen patients. At a moderate charge patients are received for a year or longer, and in every way they are assisted in giving up what has caused ruin to so large a number. Information will be gladly rendered by the Lady Superintendent at West Home, Belmont, Twickenham; or by the Secretary and Treasurer, Miss H. S. Pollock, Woodlawn, Hanworth, Middlesex.

YOUNG MEN IN ISLINGTON.

THE annual meeting of the Islington and Highbury branch of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Monday evening, the 23rd instant, at Myddelton Hall, Upper-street. There was a goodly and an appreciative audience, which comprised the members of the Association, a number of their lady friends, and the public generally who were interested in the proceedings. The appearance on the platform of the most venerable Vicar, Rev. Prebendary Wilson, was the signal for an outburst of cheers, and hearty were the responses to the fervent petitions which he offered later on, that the richest of Heaven's blessings might rest on the young men of London. Mr. J. D. Allcroft occupied the chair.

The report read by the secretary, Mr. J. J. Atkinson, was listened to with much interest, and showed prosperity and progress all along the line. The various meetings and Bible-classes had been well sustained, and the breakfast-meetings were more largely attended than ever. Extracts from letters received from former Associates showed much gratitude for the interest taken in them by the Secretary and others. The financial statement showed a small balance on the right side, which was due to the kindness of the Chairman.

The first address was given by Rev. Wm. Guest, who said that in the Y.M.C.A. he saw hope for the future of England. He ventured to say that many of the most zealous and devoted members of our churches were those who had been connected with the Association. There is a growing feeling that a social spirit must characterise our religious institutions, and in this Association it is most perfectly seen. There has been a muscular Christianity, and there has been a literary Christianity, and now there is a worldly Christianity. Nothing has been so harmful as when Christian societies have been smothered with amusements. He did not hesitate to say that they were traitors who would seek to secularise the Association. Many societies have perished because of the lack of evangelicalism. Mr. Guest proceeded to read a paper containing some personal reminiscences of the late General Gordon, whom he designated a brave man of God.

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe showed one of the dangers of the present day to be a soft, easy religiousness. What we need is a manly expression of Christianity in daily life. Of this our Saviour was the grandest exhibition that ever appeared. The promise of power from on high is our heritage as much as theirs who received it on the Day of Pentecost. When received, it may be exercised in the way of loving sympathy with one another as an Association. Be it ours to take the weak brother by the hand, and let him have our help and counsel. A young man who went astray once reproached me for not taking him by the hand, and standing by him like a friend when I knew his pitiable condition. I don't think I was greatly to blame, still it is impossible to say to what extent my influence might have restrained him had it been more vigorously and persistently exerted on his behalf. You young men have it in your power to do something great for London, if you will but avail yourselves of the resources that are within your reach.

Rev. Dr. McEwan, of Clapham, followed with an able and eloquent address. The world, he said, is passing through an ordeal, the stages of which we cannot too anxiously watch, and the issues of which we cannot too patiently await. Those changes and processes and ordeals have an effect on us. Among the growing evils of the day may be enumerated Sabbath desecration, increasing love of ease and pleasure, the haste to be rich, inordinate desire for amusements, the general unrest, the introduction of German neology, and all sorts of political and social agitations. There is more danger of under-estimating evils than of over-rating them. Among the remedial measures to be adopted union among Christians is one. Let all combine in the great conflict against evil and in the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom. What the country is to become in fifty years' time depends greatly upon those who form the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. W. Edwyn Shipton added a few choice words of thanks to the Chairman, who in response said he was always pleased to be with them, and added, "Since I have taken an active interest in this Association I have been able to do very much more good in the world."

MR. SHAW'S BOOK ON MADAGASCAR.*

THE extreme anxiety shown by our Gallican neighbours to obtain a footing in Madagascar has no doubt produced a disastrous effect on the peace and prosperity of that island; but it has had at least one good result. The enforced exile in this country of Mr. G. A. Shaw, of the London Missionary Society, has been turned to excellent account, and has furnished us with a popularly-written work on the history of the Malagasy and their island home, which ought to enhance the deep solicitude already felt towards that interesting and much maltreated people.

The author calls his book "Madagascar and France," but not more than half of its contents—if so much—is taken up with the story of French doings and undoings. Mr. Shaw has wisely sandwiched that part of his narrative in between vivid descriptions of the people and the country, which make far more agreeable reading than the tale of heartless and causeless wrong that has placed an ineffaceable stain on the national escutcheon of France. If any impartial reader, after studying the history given by Mr. Shaw of the connection, from first to last, between France and Madagascar, can be found to take sides with the invader, we can but pity the obliquity of his moral vision. How matters are ultimately to be settled between the two countries it is not for us to foretell; but unless God has abdicated his throne of righteousness and equity, it seems to us that France must sooner or later reap the bitter fruits of her unjust and high-handed behaviour towards a brave and yet peace-loving people.

Passing over the very interesting and informing chapters devoted generally to the land and its inhabitants, we would refer briefly to that which sets forth the "present civil and religious state of the Malagasy." Mr. Shaw expatiates on the importance that must always be attached by Englishmen to the fortunes of the Malagasy, by reason of our commercial relations with them, and the successful efforts we have made to implant in their midst the beneficent arts of civilisation and the principles of a pure Christianity. He asserts—and few can be in a better position to judge—that during the past twenty years no nation, with the possible exception of the Japanese, has made such progress, or shown such vigour in developing these arts and principles as the Malagasy, especially those of the Hova race. No doubt there remains much to be done in the rectification of social and other abuses, such as property in slaves. But the transforming power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ has been illustrated in the recent history of Madagascar Missions in such an unmistakable way that if no obstacles had intervened, still more wonderful results might confidently have been expected "under the auspices of enlightened Protestantism." The closing sentence of this chapter ought to awaken an earnest response in every Christian breast within these realms: "Inasmuch as a very great deal of this material, social, political, and Christian progress has been accomplished by the aid of Englishmen and English money, we contend that England has some right to feel a deep interest and intense sympathy for those who have repaid her care by rising from heathenism to Christianity, and from barbarism to civilisation."

The book is adorned by a number of finely executed engravings, and a map of the island from the pen of the author. The publishers are much to be commended for their share of the work. We heartily introduce it to the attention of our readers, trusting it may have a widely extended and in every sense successful mission.

Y.W.C.A., LONDONDERRY.—This branch, formed last December, numbers 146 members, of whom sixty-two have joined the Bible and Prayer Union. The Bible-class, held every Tuesday by Rev. J. Potter, is largely attended, and much interest is manifested. Prayer is asked that much blessing may attend the Association in this place.

"MARVELS OF CHEAPNESS!"

MARVELS of cheapness! Look at the price!
Ay! look at it once again;
See in it sorrow, starvation, vice,
And ruin of heart and brain.
See in it girlhood sunk in the mire,
The terrible slough of sin;
And manhood checked in each right desire,
Scarce able a crust to win.

Behind the bright and attractive show
In the huge shop-windows set,
I see pale faces in ghastly row,
Forms wasted, and sad eyes wet.
Think of it, purchasers, Christians, all
Who are cheapening flesh and blood,
Think of it now, ere the vengeance fall
In vast o'erwhelming flood.

Marvels of cheapness! Look at the price!
Lost souls in that market lie,
Souls that are falling from vice to vice,
Souls dying, as those must die,
Bereft of the time to think or pray,
Of all that gives hope to life,
Or a gleam of light from day to day,
On its sickening, weary strife.

Is there no remedy, Christians? None?
There is; there's a Judge above,
There's a risen Christ on God's high throne,
And his grandest name is Love.
Act more together, his Church, his own,
His blood-bought Body and Bride,
The Holy Spirit to earth came down
His flock upon earth to guide.

Remember the solemn warning cry
Of the prophets' voice of old,
And refuse persistently to buy
Where lives count less than gold.
Give to the labourer what is due,
Pity the weak and poor,
Let the world behold Christ's life in you
With no souls' blood at your door.

Mr. G. C. NEEDHAM IN RICHMOND, U.S.

SPEAKING of the services conducted in this city by Mr. Needham, the Religious Herald of February 5 says:—

In attempting to follow Mr. Moody, he undertook a peculiarly hazardous experiment. But he has met the crisis, and risen to a noble height of success. He has made a great impression, both as an expounder of the Scriptures and as an evangelical worker. His handling of the Word of God is skilful and devout, showing that he has been an earnest and patient student of the sacred oracles. His sermons are clear, pointed, fresh, and tender. He has marked skill in instructing inquirers, and very wisely, we think, prefers to have them in a private room, away from the impatient and unsympathetic crowd. It is simply impossible to estimate the number of conversions, but it was estimated that on one night there were seventy-five inquirers. These persons came from every quarter of the city, and represented various congregations.

Such was the general spirit of revival pervading the city, and such the popular demand for his continued services, that he was finally persuaded to return, and begin his work anew. It is expected, therefore, that he will be in Richmond again next Saturday, with a view of remaining several weeks, and longer if necessary. We anticipate his return to us with pleasure, and ask all good people to pray that he may be full of grace and power.

GREAT CORAM STREET HOME.—I write to ask if there is any Christian lady living in this neighbourhood who would be kind enough to take a Bible-class at this Home on Sunday afternoons. This help would be most gratefully received, as, owing to the state of their health, many of the young women are not able to attend any place of worship. Will any lady who could undertake it apply to Mrs. Andrew, 35, Great Coram-street, Russell-square, W.C., on Monday or Friday afternoons?—Yours truly, Josephine Taylor.

CHRISTIAN MOVEMENTS AT OXFORD.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be interested to hear of the work now going on in Oxford, and the tokens of God's presence and blessing in the University and city. Foremost in interest and spiritual power was the recent visit of Messrs. Stanley Smith, C. T., Studd, and their comrades, before their departure for China. The claims of Christ upon the full and best allegiance of the human heart were pressed home with a Divine and wonderful power. Large numbers, both of undergraduates and towns-people, were thoroughly awakened and stirred. Instances of definite blessing are constantly coming under our notice.

At the same time, considerable interest has been taken in some united evangelistic services which have been conducted in the Town Hall, every Sunday, under the auspices of the Church Army and Y.M.C.A. Several members of the University, both senior and junior, have taken part, and the unity amongst various denominations in special evangelistic effort has been a prominent feature of the work. Both working men and women and undergraduates have borne testimony to the saving power of God's grace.

On Sunday week the address was given by Dr. Barnardo. He addressed about a hundred undergraduates on Saturday evening in Mr. Christopher's rectory-room, and there described the commencement of his work when God enabled him to overcome the enormous difficulties that lay in his path in endeavouring to rescue the outcast children of East London. On Sunday evening he addressed a much larger meeting in the hall of Exeter College, mentioning further particulars and arousing considerable interest by the many thrilling incidents of his work.

On Monday, in addition to a drawing-room meeting at Wycliffe-lodge, a mass meeting was held in the Corn Exchange. The large building was crowded to excess, many being unable to gain admittance. Here the enthusiasm and interest reached a climax, as, in addition to Dr. Barnardo's stirring words, the sympathies of the audience were fully aroused by seeing some half dozen of his street arabs, and listening to their sweet singing and handbell ringing. A proposal made by Dr. Barnardo was eagerly caught up, namely, that a sum of £650 should be raised to found an Oxford Cottage in the Girls' Home at Ilford. An Undergraduate.

TRAINING OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—The Secretary of "The Christian Workers' Training Class," at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., which meets on Thursday evenings, at 8 p.m., desires that the benefits to be derived from it should be widely known. The object of the class is for the training of Christian young men into an efficient way of working. Gospel addresses, impromptu speeches, sermons, &c., are delivered by individual members to the other members, who for the time being are supposed to be ordinary listeners. Afterwards the class is thrown open for criticism, which is conducted in a kindly and Christian spirit. The class is not confined to members of the Association.

YOUNG WOMEN IN FOLKESTONE.—We desire to extend the usefulness and influence of the Y.W.C.A. Institute in this place. Up to this time, and by means of different meetings and classes, we have sought to benefit only those residing in our own immediate neighbourhood. Now, with the blessing of God, we would enlarge our borders, and seek to promote the welfare of our sisters, who, through force of circumstances, are obliged through summer and winter to endure the heat and weariness of London life. Our desire is to open our Institute as a Seaside Home for young ladies in business and others, thus enabling many to enjoy, at small cost, a few weeks of rest and refreshment in the invigorating air of this healthy watering-place. We estimate the bare cost of furnishing at £130, and this sum we wish, if possible, to raise before June, so as to open our Home as soon as the London season ends and our own commences. We should be very grateful for gifts of money, small or large, and also for articles of furniture, or any of the numerous items needed in a household.

Agnes E. Moore, Secretary.

A TEMPERANCE MASS MEETING.

LAST Thursday evening a Mass Temperance Meeting was held, under the auspices of the City of London Total Abstainers' Union, in larger Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Lord Mount-Temple. The Secretary, Mr. J. Orchard, made a short statement, in which he explained that their principal mode of operation was the holding of meetings in City warehouses. The present number of members was 700, which, however, by no means represented the number of pledges which had been taken since the operations of the Union began. He claimed that their work had tended to break down the custom of offering drink to customers at warehouses.

The Chairman said the growing power of public opinion was becoming more and more in favour of the teetotal movement. He was old enough to remember the day when total abstinence was regarded as a craze or a curious fanaticism. But now the cause had grown to such an extent that he saw a wide range of victory and conquest before it. Children were born total abstainers; and it was to the young that the success of the movement must be confided—he looked to the rising generation for ultimate victory. The drinking habits and customs were the great curse of this nation; unlike other evils, this evil was one that could be reached, partly by legislation, but still more by diffusing throughout the community right views and earnest desires to stop the evil.

The Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh considered that it was not so much the working classes they wanted to interest as the upper classes. The working classes were interested already. It had been laid down that statesmanship ought to make it easy to do right and difficult to do wrong; and he held that it was their duty to bring pressure to bear on their legislators to lessen the temptations which at every corner of the street beset young and old. A great deal had been heard about smashing the Madhi; but they had a Madhi in their midst in the shape of alcohol—a Madhi which there was more necessity to smash up than even the one in the Soudan.

Mrs. G. S. Reaney delivered a strong exhortation to the assemblage to promote abstinence on religious principles. She advised women to exercise their great influence against strong drink by themselves abandoning its use.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes expressed regret that the fate of Governments should turn upon foreign rather than home policy. He wished Lord Salisbury would move a vote of censure on Mr. Gladstone for not having shut up public-houses on Sundays. If Lord Salisbury did not do so, and Mr. Gladstone did not repent, the working classes would take the matter up. Solomon had said that the eyes of a fool were at the ends of the earth, and if their statesmen did not wish to be thought fools they must not disdain looking at what was under their noses. Mr. Hughes then discussed the physiological aspect of the question, affirming that the remedy for depression was in accordance with apostolic injunction—not to be drunken with wine, but to be filled with the Spirit.

During the evening a programme of music was rendered by the City Abstainers' Choral Union and the Aldersgate-street Gospel Choir. After the meeting persons present were invited to sign the pledge and don the Blue Ribbon.—Daily Chronicle.

AN INFAMOUS TRAFFIC IN INDIA.—In former times a class of people in Kumaon, called Naiks, carried on an infamous traffic in young girls, collecting them in separate villages, and sending them as occasion offered to all the leading cities of North India. This traffic was wholly broken up through the vigorous efforts of Sir Henry Ramsay, and throughout his long administration as Commissioner it was kept down with a strong hand. It seems incredible, and yet we have received authentic information to the effect, that all restrictions have recently been removed, and that the long suppressed traffic has suddenly sprung into life again. A more infamous, undisguised, and inexcusable iniquity never existed, and we are assured that the subject will be kept before the public until the policy of Sir Henry Ramsay shall be again restored.—Indian Witness.

LORD RADSTOCK IN INDIA.

AS many of your readers were good enough to take an interest in our journey to India, it is only right that they should thank the Lord for what He has done and is doing. In Bombay, Poonah, Bangalore, Madras, shall be found the Lord's children all working together, with the exception of one section of the Church of England. There are in most places monthly conferences of missionaries for mutual counsel and help, and there is much patient continuance in well-doing among the workers. In the South of India it is computed that about 50,000 children every day hear the word of God, and Christians are counted by thousands.

All over India prejudice against Christianity seems to be dying out. In Madras, in Mr. Miller's Christian College there are more students than in the Government and Hindu College together. In Calcutta the morning meetings in Week of Prayer were attended by from 300 to 400, and believers' meetings have been carried on daily since, when the Lord has given blessed messages to his people. My son has had many meetings for sailors and young men, and a good many have, it is believed, been drawn to Jesus.

Zenana work seems to be developing, and will, without a doubt, bring fruit to God. Indeed, many old Christians in India are convinced that there is a great preparatory work going on, and that there will be a great and very rapid ingathering before long. It has been so refreshing to meet so many bright Christians among the officers; we have already met twenty-five who are labouring for Christ.

The great obstacle to the work of the Lord among the natives is the Godless lives of Christians so-called. Here many spend their Sunday in lawn tennis, &c. It is not to be wondered at that the Mohammedan, who will kneel down in the street to say his prayers, feels little drawn to a religion whose adherents lead lives of absolute self-indulgence. It is deeply important to press upon all those who send out clergy or missionaries to see that none are sent out whose hearts are not altogether given to the Lord, or else they become drawn into the worldly life and become hindrances. We cannot be too grateful to our American brothers for the noble band of workers they have sent out, and who have been witnesses both by word and life for the truth of God.

We are now about to go to Benares, Allahabad, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Agra, Delhi, Meerut, Lahore, Hyderabad, Poonah, and other places, and we seek the continued prayers of God's children that we may be enabled by his grace to be a help to his servants in their blessed work.

Yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

Calcutta, Feb. 3.

THE LIVERPOOL SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY carries on a work among the canal boatmen which has resulted in much good. One man, who formerly was the terror of the street where he lived, was attracted to the Bethel, transformed by God's grace, and became a model husband and father. One of his children said to a neighbour, "You would not know our house now, the windows are mended, and mother's face is mended too. Father is so kind; when he comes home he takes us on his knee and sings to us about Jesus, and tells us about heaven; and there's ever so much bread and butter now." The correspondence maintained by Mr. Wilkie, the agent, with the sailors, proves a valuable reminder to them of vows made before leaving the port. The Committee undertake to place a library containing thirty books, with Bibles and Testaments, on board any ship, for an annual subscription of ten shillings from the owners. Earnest appeals for help in the way of books, periodicals, and illustrated papers are made. The "Forecastle" is much appreciated by the sailors for letter writing; nearly 1000 were written by or for them last year. Meanwhile, a word of kindly sympathy often wins one and another of them to Christ. The Bethel is situated at 13, Wapping, Liverpool. About £3000 annually is needed.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE REST.

On Saturday afternoon, February 7, a goodly company of Christian friends gathered at the new rooms of the Constantinople Rest, to dedicate this place and work, under new auspices, to the service of God. The rooms are not far from the former place, in the same street in Galata, but lower down, where it is hoped more sailors will be reached. It has been found impossible to secure such ample premises as were found for the Smyrna Rest, without the erection of a building.

There were present on this occasion representatives of various missionary societies, English, Scotch, American, besides other friends, whose interest and sympathy in the work were very cheering. The fervent prayer and earnest words of faith and hope for the future uttered by the various speakers were truly inspiring.

Mr. Julius Von Millingen, who presided, has been a firm friend and supporter of the Constantinople Rest from its establishment, and his connection with the Ottoman Bank has given him power to render much timely aid in many ways, which he still continues for the cause of Christ.

By my side was an English lady friend, who also rendered much assistance in those early days of the enterprise. That many may henceforth be led to Him, under the labours of Miss Green-Armytage, and others who may be associated with her at the Rest, is my earnest prayer.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Brittany.—A new translation of the whole Bible into Breton is being made; hitherto a translation into classic Breton only has existed, and this dialect is not understood by the people.—Journal Religieux.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain are now in Tasmania. At latest advices they were holding services in various country places, the season of the year being unfavourable for work in Launceston or Hobart.

The Island of Erromanga, where five missionaries successively fell victims to the ferocity of cannibals, is now accessible to Mission work in every part. During the past year the Lord's Supper has been thrice administered in the presence of 500 natives.

Wurtemberg.—A Y.M.C.A. has been founded in Reutlingen, after the pattern of the English associations. Gustav Werner has for many years carried on a good work among the orphans in this place. He has now ten branch establishments throughout Wurtemberg.

Italy.—The accounts of loss of life and property in the Waldensian Valleys from the snow storms and avalanches are heartrending. A subscription has been opened for the sufferers. It was set on foot by Rev. J. MacDougall, of the Scotch Church at Florence, and his congregation were the first contributors.

Paris.—The British and Foreign Bible Society held its annual meeting February 25 in the American Church, under the presidency of Pastor Th. Monod. The report was full of interesting facts. The number of colporteurs in France in 1884 was sixty. During the first ten months of the year they had sold 3812 Bibles, 31,844 New Testaments, and 24,165 portions. It was thought the total number would be lower than that of the preceding year, in consequence of the increased poverty of French working men.—Christianisme.

South France.—Last year the churches of Gard and Cevennes were visited by a great quickening of religious life. A pastor from Tarn who visited these churches was much struck by the conversions and zeal he there saw, and related his impressions at the Free Church in Vabres. The recital so moved the congregation that there and then many were convinced of their sins and desired salvation. That was the beginning of a glorious revival which spread to the churches of Mazarnet and Saint Amans, and then to Viane and Espérausses. One of the most evident signs of the power of the Holy Spirit is that families who have been separated for years are spontaneously brought together, and all past disagreement is put under their feet, to the amazement of their neighbours.—Journal Réligieux.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Sir,—May I ask the prayers of your readers for a few objects in connection with our work here?

(1) For the Spirit of God to work mightily upon the large congregations of heathen who come almost daily to the chapel in this great city. The chapel has been, unhappily, closed for two years without any worker, and has just been re-opened. Both Tartars and Chinese attend in very good numbers, many appear interested, some profess conversion, but many are hindered from coming out, partly from fear of their heathen countrymen, and partly for fear of being unable to earn a living if they become Christians.

(2) For the native Christians, that we and they may be filled with the Holy Ghost, and they may be raised to a higher state of Christian life.

(3) For several young brethren who are to proceed westward in a few days. May God preserve them from harm in this time of special danger, help them speedily to speak the language, and keep them abiding in the love of Christ. One of our sisters, not quite two months in China, has to-day been taking a class of Chinese women, and speaking to them about the lost sheep. Her progress is clearly a matter of God's help, and we praise Him for it.

It has been my privilege and that of my wife to meet many of those dear brethren and sisters who have arrived during the last three or four months in China. I believe over thirty have come in connection with this Mission; we have assisted in fitting them out in Chinese costume and placing them in various stations, some of them in places where they had no fires, with frosty nights, and very little furniture; and yet they bravely and lovingly took to their posts, praising God for his loving care. As I left three of them in Nankin lately amidst much discomfort, I asked one how he felt. "Perfectly happy," was his reply; "I feel I am just where the Lord would have me to be."

The present war has of course caused us much inconvenience, and hindered our going forward to some places in the north-west. This has made us crowd together in a manner and places often anything but pleasant, and yet my heart has been filled with joy to see how it has been joyfully taken to, and nobly endured by many who have left comfortable homes and loving hearts in Great Britain. Some of these have come forth at their own expense, others have been sent out, having their passages paid by special donations. I trust that those who have so lovingly given of their substance to land in China many dear and earnest labourers, will feel it their joy to follow them with care and prayer for their every need in China. My heart overflows as I see the warm-hearted life and loving unity of the large numbers lately arrived in this land, and yet we must pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers into his harvest. There are numerous large cities in this province of Kiang-su, so near to the free ports, without a single messenger of the Cross. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours very faithfully, Chas. H. Judd.

Chin Kiang, China, January.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH IN LIBERIA.

Letters to hand last week from Amanda Smith report impressive results from Bishop Taylor's preaching. He had just arrived at Monrovia, and was very well received. Christians there are holding on in faith expecting great things. Mrs. Smith was in good health, able to walk fourteen miles to a distant meeting. She had been very closely occupied since her arrival at Monrovia, visiting amongst the sick and poor, and holding meetings every night. She also mentions that the President has proved himself loyal to Temperance principles by vetoing a bill for lowering the license on spirits.

Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, expects to forward in a few days the various articles entrusted to her care for Mrs. Smith. As she has in hand several pounds, she will gladly receive further subscriptions towards the next remittance.

FLEMISH WORKMEN IN BRUSSELS.

Sir,—Doubtless many of your readers have, like myself, been reading with deep interest the memoir of Esther Beamish ("A Voice that is Still." John F. Shaw & Co.), of which you lately published a notice. They will have had their sympathy awakened or revived in the work in Belgium in which she took so deep an interest.

One of the efforts which she was largely helpful in obtaining funds for, and which lay very near her heart, was that carried on by Pastor de Jonge, of Brussels, amongst the Flemish workmen of that city. It was started in 1880, when a tent was sent over under the care of Mr. S. Brown, now working with Mr. McAll in Paris.

M. de Jonge publishes weekly two evangelical papers, one in Dutch and the other in Flemish. As pastor of the Dutch Church he has the care of its services, and of a considerable congregation; he conducts or arranges for nightly services in one Mission hall, and bi-weekly meetings in another; and now he is at work on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in completing a new Flemish translation of the New Testament from the original Greek, to replace the ancient translation from the Latin Vulgate, which, together with a Dutch Version that is not readily understood by the people, has been the only one hitherto available for distribution. Of this new version the Gospels and Acts are already published. Lastly, M. de Jonge has in his own house a training college in which some six or eight young Flemings have been prepared or are preparing to go forth as colporteurs and evangelists among their fellow countrymen.

I wish that your readers could visit the "baraque" or wooden shed, which has now replaced the tent in the populous suburb of Lacken. When I was there last autumn the place was full to its utmost capacity—it would seat about 120, but many more were standing all round the room and in the doorway; and M. de Jonge tells me that recently, especially on Sunday and Monday evenings, many have had to be turned away. The "baraque" is called "Bethel," and the address is opposite No. 338, "Chaussée de Havre." Upwards of fifty individuals, formerly Roman Catholics in name, but for the most part in fact unbelievers, have already been admitted into M. de Jonge's Church on satisfactory evidence of true conversion; and three schools in different quarters of the city are crowded with children. He hopes again to set up the tent this year at Antwerp, during the Exhibition about to be held there.

The greater portion of the expense incurred in this work of evangelisation, for which M. de Jonge trusts entirely to the Lord to supply the means, is supplied by his compatriots, the Christians of Holland, the English share of contributions being now very small.

I trust this brief statement with regard to the work may induce many of your readers to remember it in prayer; and should any of them be disposed to render pecuniary assistance, this will be gladly received and forwarded by Mr. Donald Mattheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W., or myself. Joseph G. Alexander.

Bridwold, South Croydon.

MR. J. PASCOE, MEXICO.—In his latest issue of Mexico, Mr. Pascoe says: "The only bright ray that broke through the clouds of the past three months was a cheering letter, from Mrs. G. P., of Waterford, Ireland, a stranger to us until she wrote, in response to The Christian's thoughtful reminder of us in its No. 772. That letter was a special messenger heralding, like Noah's dove, the bright light which is in the clouds. Christmas Eve brought two letters, each containing a remittance from England; one of them had been delayed somewhere three whole weeks. Another letter and remittance came to-day, thus making the last day of the old year a sunny one for us, enabling us to begin the New Year without the cloud of even a single penny in debt, notwithstanding the crippled state of our means and labours during the past year." Mr. Pascoe also states that the family of the deceased pastor, Nicanor Gonrez (whose death he lately described in our columns), have received pecuniary help from the American Presbyterian Mission. The Secretary of the Mission, writing to us lately from New York, says that this special gift amounted to between 200 and 300 dollars.

Notes and Comments.

MEETINGS for Humiliation before God, and Prayer for our Land and Rulers, will be held on Saturday afternoon next, March 7, from four to six o'clock in the following places:—

Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.; Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W.; Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W.; Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, S.W.; Conference Hall, West Ham-lane, E.; Edinburgh Castle, Stepney, E.; Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N.; Kilburn Hall, Kilburn-gate, N.W.; 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Christians of every name are invited to attend. "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me" (Psalm l. 15).

During the latter part of February and the entire month of March Mr. Moody had arranged to hold Christian Conventions and conduct Gospel services in various towns in the States of Kentucky, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, and Kansas.

There are the Temperance and Purity Crusades, the Anti-Tobacco Society, and many other agencies of the right kind at work: may God bless and use them all! But there is not a crusade against the vile literature, the pernicious novels, the empty trash, so abundantly provided for and read by the young. There are several societies and organisations doing good, noble work in the matter, but, the crusade, to be effectual, must begin in the home, the school, and the church. Parents, teachers, and pastors, a duty is laid on you to warn and to prevent. This immoral traffic is too often at the root of drunkenness, loss of virtue, embezzlement, and many hideous crimes. Fathers and mothers, be vigilant, look to the stuff your children are reading; a bad book has power to destroy both soul and body. Railway and other booksellers have a tremendous power for good or evil in this matter, and a proportionate responsibility.

"Let the potsherds of the earth strive with the potsherds of the earth" (Isa. xlv. 9) is the Old Testament form of Christ's admonition: "Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." These commands have special application now that we are in the rapids of time; for the wars and rumours of wars, the tumults and perplexity, the conflicts between the iron and the clay, the lawlessness becoming more lawless, the false peace like "the torrent's smoothness ere it dash below," these things tempt all that is human in the children of the kingdom to keep their mind on the things on earth. But let none of these things move us from our steadfastness. The high and dreadful wheels of God's eternal purpose turn not aside. He is taking out from among the nations a people for his Name, a multitude that no man can number, an election of grace, individually known to God, twelve times twelve thousand sealed with the Father's name in their foreheads. Our part is to gather them in, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. For "whithersoever the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go; for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels." His Spirit goes forth to gather in his people; and to his disciples he is saying, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

A very delightful echo of the great missionary farewell gathering in Exeter Hall on Feb. 4 is provided in this month's issue of CHINA'S MILLIONS. The stirring speeches there delivered are reproduced with considerable fulness, and an account also given of the remarkable meetings in the provincial towns. Those who wish to possess a profitable memorial of the Exeter Hall assembly should secure copies of the magazine. It is specially suitable for distribution among young Christians. Copies may be obtained for this purpose on reduced terms, by applying to Mr. Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, London, N.

We have seen some interesting correspondence of late in the Pall Mall Gazette about the need of a good central registry in London for domestic servants. We observe with pleasure that an institution of this kind has been very successfully started in Glasgow. It is entirely managed by ladies who have at heart the best interests of the young women; they are arranging, we understand, to begin improvement classes for those who are waiting for employment. Further details may be learned of Mrs. Macneal, 350, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow. There is an excellent registry and employment agency in London, we may add, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

We would specially commend to our readers a recently published pamphlet by Dr. Adolph Saphir, entitled, "The Everlasting Nation" (J. F. Shaw & Co., 6d.) It contains an admirable digest of Bible truth on the present position and future prospects of the Jewish race, together with a review of recent movements in relation to Christianity among Jews in Bessarabia and other parts of the world. It is a most timely utterance on a subject of deepening interest, and is of practical moment at the present time. It should be widely circulated by the friends of Israel.

Another loss has befallen the African branch of the Baptist Missionary Society's operations. Dr. Sydney Comber, brother of the Rev. T. J. Comber, one of the pioneers of Mission work in the Dark Continent, lately died at Wathen Station, on the banks of the Congo. He went out little more than a year ago full of heart and hope, well equipped as a medical missionary, and devotedly set on advancing the Saviour's cause, but the Lord of the vineyard has called him higher, and he has died at his post. We tender to his friends, and to the Society thus again bereft of a valued agent, cordial and prayerful sympathy. Africa is costing us dear in many ways just now, but in such a cause as that in which Sydney Comber has fallen, we may rejoice in the sacrifice even of life itself.

The subject of Mr. Guinness Rogers' closing Merchants' Lecture on Tuesday week was "The Duty of the Church to the Poor." He spoke some wise and timely words about the need of impressing on the poor that a change of inward condition is as essential to their improvement as outside methods of amelioration:—

> "Beyond and behind all else that might be done, there must be the Divine principle of Christian sympathy. We must love our neighbour as ourselves, cultivating generous thoughts and broad sympathies, breaking down, as far as possible, the miserable barriers of class and caste which have so separated this nation into different sections. The salvation of the world was not to be brought about by institutions or social revolutions, but by revolution in human hearts, and by living out the lesson taught by Christ of love to our neighbour."

It is a mistake to suppose that the principle of returning good for evil was unknown in the days of the Old Covenant, e.g., Joseph and his brethren: "Fear ye not: I will nourish you and your little ones" (Gen. l. 15—21). Moses' law: "If thou see thine enemy's ox or ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back again" (Exod. xxiii. 4, 5). Saul to David: "Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil" (1 Sam. xxiv. 17, 18). Elisha to the King of Israel: "Wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive? Set bread and water before them" (2 Kings vi. 21—23). Paul, quoting Solomon: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him" (Rom. xii. 20; Prov. xxv. 21, 22.)

The directions of David to Solomon respecting Shimei and others (1 Kings ii.) must not be regarded as arising from personal vindictiveness (see the solemn introduction, 1—4). Solomon was the type of the King of Peace, first being king of righteousness, and after that king Solomon, which, by interpretation, is king of peace (compare Melchisedec, Heb. vii. 1). Therefore, in the Psalm for Solomon (lxxii.), David says, "The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness." See David's last words: "The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue. The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." Psalm xcii. is "A Song for the Sabbath-day" of the world, and begins a series of millennial Psalms, ending with ci., the last verse of which is, "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord." In the light of these Scriptures David's commands to his son and successor must be understood.

Many of our American contemporaries report an unusually manifest and wide-spread spiritual revival among the churches, north and south. Zion's Herald says:—

> "There has been no period for several years past when our exchanges have chronicled so many revivals and additions to the churches. The awakening spirit seems to pervade the whole country. The striking feature is the prevalence of the work under home agencies, although many evangelists are labouring with great success. We trust this gracious movement has but just begun. May it deepen where it has commenced, and spread over all the land!"

The word "Sabbatarianism" does not in these days always mean the same thing as Sabbath rest, but understanding it in this sense we gladly quote and endorse the following paragraph from the "City Notes" of the Pall Mall Gazette:—

> "The London Road Car Company has once more proved that sabbatarianism is sound economical policy. Last year they determined to discontinue Sunday traffic, and the chairman states that there has been a very remarkable improvement in the value of their property. The traffic receipts have gone up nearly a thousand pounds over those of the previous year, although they ran six days as against seven, and the value of their stud of horses has increased 20 per cent owing to the discontinuance of Sunday traffic, to improved feeding, and the weeding out of useless horses. Whatever may be said concerning Sunday keeping, the fact that neither horse nor man should work more than six days in seven is a great economical truth which can never be violated without incurring in the long run financial loss."

Such facts as these ought to convince the most sceptical that God's ordinance of Sabbath rest is not an arbitrary interference with man's happiness, but a most gracious appointment for the true well-being of the race.

It is long since we have read anything so fresh and inspiriting as the opening chapters of Dr. Parker's "People's Bible" (Hodder & Stoughton). Those on "Inspiration" and "The Spiritual Organ" are beyond measure excellent, and raise the discussion to a level altogether higher than that of ordinary disputants. His use of Messrs. Huxley and Tyndal is superb.

The Wesleyan Methodists are about to follow in the wake of the Congregational body in the effort to answer the bitter cry of outcast London. We bid them a hearty God-speed. The Methodist Times of last week, in a note on this subject, says:—

> "It is high time that Methodism were energetically and visibly doing her share in terminating the spiritual destitution of London. We believe that the supreme necessity now is to appoint a suitable minister to work this great enterprise. The danger of all committees is to be too sensible, and therefore to select men more distinguished for moderation and discretion than for energy and enthusiasm. The terrible destitution of London demands neither a business man nor a cautious man, but a man with a touch of General Gordon in him—a man, in brief, who is really willing, if necessary, to die for Christ. The devil cannot be dislodged from the London slums except by men almost as much beside themselves as the apostle Paul. Let us secure such men, and there will be no difficulty about the money."

In another part of the same issue our energetic contemporary says: "The time has fully come for all our most educated young people to take the lead in direct spiritual soul-saving work."

Some of our American contemporaries have a novel way of distributing their good things. On the other side of choice extracts from Mr. Spurgeon are to be found puffing advertisements of a toilet soap and an effectual hair dye; while a praiseful commentary on Heb. xii. 2 is sandwiched between the announcements of cream balm and hop bitters, and hair dye and sarsaparilla!

This may have its advantages, as it compels readers to seek for the truth, if they desire it. But it also suggests the thought, how many "Christians," all the world over, are receiving their good things, the truths of the Gospel, as sandwiches? Theatre-going on Saturday, "spiritual exercises" on Sunday, and novel-reading on Monday. What a poor, beggarly bit of reality can be squeezed in there! The truth can contain no relish, packed between such absorbing elements. The church that goes in for fancy fairs and lotteries, and comic songs and private theatricals, is dispensing its minimum of Christ on the sandwich system. What wonder that the younger members of such a church are mere worldlings! What wonder that worldlings themselves look on, and smile with complacency at their own likeness to such church-goers!

The following is an extract from Lord Hatherley's memoir: "August, 1875. To-day we [himself and Lady Hatherley] have just finished our reading of the Bible through together for the 44th time. In my old age I begin so immensely to prefer the Bible to all good books of what kind soever. It is always new; at least one always finds something new that escaped our observation at the last reading; and how wonderfully independent it is of a various reading here or a mistaken translation there, being the whole that it is, a living whole, that is and will be 'spirit and life' till time shall be no more. 'For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven.'"

2 The widow's God! the Lord hath been
A husband by her side;
A Father to her fatherless;
Her never-failing Guide.

3 The day she called He heard her cry,
And came to her relief;
And through these years H's faithfulness
Hath answered her belief.

4 Through waters deep she oft hath passed,
The trial has been sore;
But grace sufficient from the Lord
Hath brought her safely o'er.

Let glory flood the sky;
The pilgrim race is nearly run,
The glorious end is nigh!

A YOUNG KNIGHT OF PURITY.

THE town of Uxbridge has lately been chiefly before the public in connection with murders and suicides, or attempted suicides, but on Tuesday of last week this border town of Middlesex and Buckinghamshire was the scene of a more wholesome excitement. The Montague Hall was filled with an exclusively male audience, in response to large bills which had been extensively placarded, announcing that "Charles James, the young Welsh orator, will give a special lecture on 'Fallen Men,'" under the auspices of the Uxbridge and District Social Purity Society.

Notwithstanding the announcement, many in the audience were evidently surprised at the youthful appearance of the lecturer, who did not appear to be over twenty. But Rev. Selwyn Blackett, the chairman, appropriately remarked upon the suitability of a young man being heard upon a subject of special interest and importance to young men. The young Knight of Purity was accompanied to the platform by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, the president of the Society, by General Swanstone, and others. He spoke for nearly an hour and a half amidst deep attention. Some of the men were greatly moved. The lecture was characterised by intense earnestness, and a fervent religious spirit. Mr. James, although a young man, feels that God has called him to this work, and many of those who listened to him must have felt the reality of his call.

Since this meeting the Committee of the Gospel Purity Association have commissioned him as one of their speakers, so that any friends of purity who may wish for the services of one specially adapted to address working men—he would also do admirably for gatherings of soldiers—may communicate with him at 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.

CHATHAM.

One of the most encouraging meetings held in this locality, in support of personal purity and the respectful treatment of women, took place on Tuesday week in the Public Hall, New Brompton, the building being filled in all parts by a gathering of men only, who listened most attentively to what was said, and appeared to be greatly impressed. Canon Jelf (rector of Chatham), who presided, said the subject was one that wanted plain speaking, though a delicate one to handle. Speaking as one who had been through a public school, he said that often boys went to school and did not have any warning on the side of God against those evils which were sure to beset them on the side of the devil. Even in Christian England the want of purity in the present day was eating at the heart of the national life, and it was one of those things in which the upper classes had set an example to the lower, and had brought the working classes into sins they would not otherwise have thought of. Mr. J. B. Wookey gave a powerful address. He showed that physical health and spiritual growth were proportionate to the extent to which the laws of morality were observed; he appealed to all the best feelings of men to observe themselves, and inculcate in their sons and those around them, a chivalrous and Christian respect for women. He strongly deprecated the obscene jest or tale which too often polluted the workshop, and said that the older employés in such an establishment as Chatham Dockyard had a greater responsibility in respect to the lads around them than even those lads' Sunday-school teachers.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LIVERPOOL.—At the great Hengler's Circus a crowded meeting was recently held in connection with the excellent work carried on in Gordon Hall among the young women of the city, under the direction of Mrs. Menzies. The vast auditorium was nearly filled with the class sought to be benefited, and stirring addresses were given by Mr. S. Smith, M.P., Mr. A. Balfour, Mrs. Menzies, and others.

WITH REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN DUBLIN.

IT is early morning in Dublin—a damp, cold Sunday. Very few foot-passengers are astir, but in the neighbourhood of Lower Abbey-street groups of ragged men, women, and children are wending their way towards the Union-buildings for a free breakfast. Their wretched, haggard faces show plainly the traces of want, sin, and misery. Sunday after Sunday throughout the year a little band of workers gather, and tell them the old story of the love of Jesus; thus 700 hear of Him each Sabbath.

Inside the buildings the grown people are grouped together in the gymnasium taking their breakfast. In another part of the buildings the children are gathered into little classes to be taught. Upon the platform facing the adults stands Mr. Hammond, the choir sit behind him. The subject of the address was, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." All are still, and deeply interested. Presently tears moisten many eyes, and at the close of the address several press forward to grasp Mr. Hammond's hand, and say, "I mean to trust in Jesus."

Mr. Hammond gives them each one of his "Familiar Talks," and as they slowly file out, the children are gathered together in one class, the big boys in front to help the singing. Our Dublin city arabs have such sweet voices, it would be a blessing if they all sung for Jesus. Plenty of bright singing and anecdotes while away another half hour, and it is almost ten o'clock when Mr. Hammond leaves the building. Much good must have resulted. At least nine out of ten are Roman Catholics; poor people! many of them would be out-spoken Christians, only they dread the persecution sure to follow.

About three miles from the Union Buildings in a good part of Dublin stands the Charleston-road Methodist Church, where a children's meeting has been advertised for four in the afternoon. As early as three, the church was well filled with the children and their friends; the choir of the Union Buildings, with their conductor, Mr. Roxburg, had willingly come to help, and half an hour was passed in singing sweet hymns from "Gems of Praise." The address was simple, and illustrated by many stories to teach the great lesson of saving grace intended to be conveyed. The after-meeting was a time of great blessing. One lady said, with tears, "Seventeen years ago I was converted when you were holding meetings here, and to-day my little boy is converted." It is nearly six o'clock before the meeting is left.

At seven o'clock Mr. Hammond is back again, addressing a church full of people, who listen attentively as he warns them of the danger and folly of not giving themselves to the Lord. An after-meeting is announced; no one moves or attempts to go. With difficulty Mr. Hammond presses his way out, surrounded as he goes by people wishing to speak to him. The meeting is left in the hands of Rev. Mr. Jameson, pastor of the church, with the instruction to have no dull prayer-meeting, but an out-and-out inquiry-meeting.

The Christian Union Buildings are reached with difficulty at 8.30. The people are already there, awaiting the preacher. The choir are singing, and on the raised platform many friends are gathered. One at least of the neighbouring churches has closed early so that all may attend the service. One minister, well known in the city and beloved for his large-hearted generous sympathy with all evangelistic effort, brought his choir with him to assist. A lady sings a solo, "What shall it profit me by and by?" which is listened to with the utmost attention, after which Mr. Hammond addresses the meeting.

Although the hour is late and both speaker and people weary, few seem inclined to move when an after-meeting is proposed. Down the aisles the workers move slowly, stopping here and there to say, with voices soft and tender, in a manner which showed their earnestness and solicitude for others, the few words addressed to each. After a while many are weeping their way to the Cross. Many earnest brothers' supplications rise to the Throne of Grace from workers and inquirers. After a time the meeting takes the form of a testimony-meeting. Young converts grasp each other's hands warmly. Christians talk of remarkable cases which have come under their notice, and the meeting could not be broken up until at 10.50 the stewards commence to put out the gas. Still the interest seems unbroken, and groups are formed to walk home, talking happily as they go, and praising God for what they have seen and heard.

Mr. Hammond left Dublin on Friday last for Glasgow. The last days of his work here were certainly the most blessed. On Monday last week a very large number of Christian workers and converts gathered at the noon meeting. It was a time of great power and blessing; many fervent prayers ascended to God, for friends and relatives; many letters were received praising God for blessing sought and found during the Mission.

At the close of the meeting a lady stepped forward and said: "I should like to tell you something, Mr. Hammond. Seventeen years ago, when you were here, a boy I know well was converted in your meetings; he was too shy to say anything about it, but he told me. I have just received a letter telling me how he went home to glory triumphantly. He had been a missionary for the last three years."

On Wednesday evening a farewell address was given to the converts, after which an inquiry meeting was held, and after that a testimony meeting. One after another of the young converts stood up and told in a few simple sentences how God had saved them. Sometimes the converts were old men, sometimes young children. How the heart of the evangelist rejoiced when some little one spoke, for all children are dear to him.

On Thursday evening a good meeting was held. Short addresses were given by Mr. Hammond, Surgeon-General Gunn, Mr. Nixon (Sunday-school superintendent), and an English clergyman. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond have left warm friends in Dublin, and many will remember them daily at the throne of grace. A Worker.

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

Mr. Hammond is now on his third visit to Glasgow. The Mail of Monday says:—The large hall of the Christian Institute was crowded on Saturday evening to welcome the evangelist. The Chairman, Dr. Bonar, testified to the great benefits experienced by the churches as the fruit of Mr. Hammond's labours in 1861 and 1867. He requested for Mr. Hammond the most hearty welcome of the Christians in the city.

Rev. Messrs. Howie and Fullerton gave similar emphatic testimony. At the close of the meeting a great many of Mr. Hammond's friends converted in former years pressed forward to the platform to greet their friend.

On Sabbath evening Dr. Bonar's church was crowded; many anxious ones remained for conversation after the solemn address of the evangelist. There was no lack of earnest, intelligent workers, as the Evangelistic Association, the Sabbath School Union, and the Foundry Boys' Society have all united in supporting Mr. Hammond in his Mission to the young people of Glasgow and suburbs.

HEBREW CHRISTIANS IN NEW YORK.—The third annual report of Rev. Jacob Freshman's Mission among Jews in the city of New York has reached us. As an example of the opposition sometimes manifested, the following case is given: "On one occasion an Israelite arose in the meeting, and thus addressed his brethren: 'I am sent here by the Rabbi to command you to listen to this teaching no longer; whosoever does so is not a good Jew.' He at once left the hall, taking the entire audience with him." On the ether hand, the superintendent, Mr. Jacob Freshman, has baptized eleven converts during the year, all of whom are pursuing faithfully their Christian course. The Mission includes preaching services in English and German, prayer-meetings, a reading-room, &c., all of which are prospering. Mr. Freshman's address is 25, Seventh-street, New York.

In Memoriam.

CHARLES G. GORDON.

ONE figure stands on the horizon's rim,
Fair with an immortality unique
In human story—great with deeds that speak
World-wide the imperishable fame of Him
Who, dwelling 'mid the burning Seraphim,
Dowers with his own Omnipotence the meek,
Heaven-hid 'mid fellow-men, like some iron peak
By light etherealised into a dream.
Gordon, thou lost ideal of our time,
While men believe not, and belief grows pale
Before the daring doubters that assail,
We need thy child-like faith, thy gaze sublime
That pierced the near gloom, and still onward strode
Through death and darkness, seeing only GOD!

Charles A. Fox.

THE desert holds the secret of how gallant Gordon died,
Wild winds tell forth the story—parched sands refuse to hide;
Yield up the tale to England, as she sorroweth in vain,
That never word from that brave heart shall thrill her land again.

"Yield up!" the desert answers, "ay, when my sands are red,
Your bravest blood shall stain it, for the secret of the dead."
What sayest thou, O England? only, "Would to God that he Had lived one comrade's hand to clasp, one comrade's face to see."

The beacon fire we gave him, how well its flame was kept
By the hand that would not tire, and the heart that never slept;
It wakens now no longer—howe'er the nations call,
And thrones may shake, and kingdoms reel, he is beyond them all.

We had the laurels ready those patient brows to crown,
The traitor steel was swift and sharp to dash such honours down;
God his own victor crowneth—He counts not gain or loss,
But the dauntless heart that battles 'neath the shadow of the cross.

Rest for the gallant soldier—where'er he lieth low,
His rest is deep and still to-day 'mid clash of friend and foe;
He standeth in the Light he loved, whence all the clouds depart,
But, oh! the gap within our ranks, and the void within our heart!

SINGING FOR JESUS.—I should be thankful for offers of assistance from any really good solo singers (male or female), who will volunteer help at our Sunday Evening Services in Victoria Hall, at 7 p.m.; or who will give special assistance on Good Friday evening next, at the service beginning at 6.30 and lasting till 9.30 p.m. Only those who have good, powerful voices need respond to this letter, and only those who will "sing for Jesus" alone.

Yours faithfully,
Alfred Sargent.

BUCKS. EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The report and balance-sheet, issued by the manager, Mr. Taylor, Aylesbury, says that many of the very worst men in the locality have attended the meetings, and become Christians and workers. In some instances whole households have been led to the Saviour. "Without exaggerating," continues the writer, "we can say that hundreds have been saved and are now living for God." The pamphlet is published at the Bible Depôt, Aylesbury. All the money spent is for real aggressive work in needy places. The Sunday-school branch of the mission sets a good example by sending £8 annually for the support of a native teacher among the Santhal tribes of India. Another much-needed mission hall is about to be built in a village of the county.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN THE EAST.

On Thursday, January 29, Dr. Somerville and his two companions, accompanied by Dr. Constantine, of Smyrna, as interpreter, left Smyrna, travelling by the railway now made up the Meander plain. In answer to a call to preach to the Greeks at Sokia, they left the railroad at Derminjik, where they were met by a guard of men, who conducted them to Sokia, which is several hours' ride down the valley. Here they enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Forbes. It seemed strange to find an English family in the interior of Asia Minor. Mr. Forbes is at the head of the liquorice trade, an industry which gives employment to tens of thousands in that extensive plain, and his house is a centre of Christian life for the whole surrounding district. On one of the days Dr. Somerville had an expedition to Priene, for the purpose of having a service there. A space had been cleared on the floor of the ancient temple of Athene Polias—in the open air—and there Dr. Somerville addressed an assembly of almost one hundred people from the neighbouring villages.

On the other side of the wide plain it was easy to distinguish the ruins of Miletus—the Miletus visited by Paul. The elders of Ephesus, who came to visit Paul at Miletus, very probably travelled by Sokia, situated at the entrance to that Pass, which is still the high road for horsemen between Ephesus and the lower reach of the River Meander. At Sokia Dr. Somerville held in all six meetings, both general addresses and some specially for Greek men, Greek women, and Greek children, who crowded to hear the Gospel. During these meetings the Service of Song was conducted in Greek by Mr. Bliss, nephew to Mr. and Mrs. Forbes.

Dr. Somerville afterwards heard that the Bishop of the diocese had begun to oppose the work. The Bishop's deacon had announced that the Communion would not be administered for three years to those women who had attended the meetings. And yet, two days before, the Bishop had received Dr. Somerville most pleasantly. May such persecution be the means, in God's providence, for the spread of the Gospel and the advancement of his Kingdom.

After leaving Sokia, Dr. Somerville again took the railway to Seraikeŭy, a growing town—the terminus of the railway—situated near the confluence of the Meander and Lycus. Here the party were entertained by Mr. Markovitz and his excellent wife. The first day the party rode across the plain to the remains of the ancient Hierapolis (Col. iv. 13). The place is utterly without inhabitants, and the site of the ancient city is marked by tombs. But the most interesting feature lies in several warm mineral springs, which bubble up upon the elevated plateau. The streams from these have covered the hillside with a limestone crust. On the evening after the return from Hierapolis, Dr. Somerville held a crowded meeting at Seraikeŭy, and the address was well translated into Turkish by the station-master of the railway.

The next day the party went to Laodicea situated on the other side of the plain, which is also about fifteen miles from Seraikeŭy. Laodicea stood upon several hills, and must have been a large and important city. The church to which our Saviour said, "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth," is totally desolate. The ruins of a large theatre, odeum, and baths, give token of its former greatness and luxury. This may help to explain the language of our Saviour in the Epistle, terrible with rebuke, but rich with precious promise. The party assembled and read the Epistle with comment and prayer, and, being read on the very spot to whose people it was written, seemed to have a peculiar significance.

After having spent two hours on this memorable spot, the journey was continued some three hours more to the site of ancient Colosse. The very stones of Colosse, as in many other instances, have been removed to build the modern town of Rhonas: only a few monumental remains indicate the beautiful situation of the town of Philemon, Apphia, Archippus, Epaphras, and the slave Onesimus. After leaving Seraikeŭy a night was spent in Aidin, and Dr. Somerville held a service there. Above the town the hill is crowned with a few remains of Tralles, to which Ignatius addressed an epistle.

The next place visited was Ephesus, on the marshy plain of the Cayster, not far from the sea. The ruins of the ancient temple of Diana, and the theatre where the uproar took place (Acts xix.) lend a great interest to this place. Ephesus was the most important of the seven churches at the time of the Christian era: here Paul laboured three years, and to the Christians here he addressed one of his richest epistles.

In Smyrna and some other places a cautious distribution of New Testaments in different languages took place. This Dr. Somerville was enabled to do through the kindness of Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, of the "Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures."

After having been in Smyrna a few days Dr. Somerville went out with a party to Bondja, a little town about five miles off, the place where his early friend, Rev. Robert McCheyne, lay ill of a fever on his return from Palestine. At Bondja Mr. and Mrs. Forbes placed their house at his disposal for a Greek meeting, to which about 250 people crowded in.

After returning to Smyrna Dr. Somerville held several meetings in that city. Since his arrival on Jan. 3 till Feb. 13 he has held sixty meetings in Symrna and those parts of Asia Minor which he has visited, some to the English-speaking communities, some interpreted into Greek, Armenian, Turkish and Judæo-Spanish, and has availed himself of the services of six interpreters.

On Friday, Feb. 13, the Doctor and his two companions left Smyrna for Constantinople, passing by Mitylene and Tenedos, and the seabord of the plains of Troy. The steamer was a day late, an occurrence not uncommon in the East; and it was not till Sabbath morning that she anchored at the mouth of the Golden Horn. Some arrangements have been made for the Mission in that city, and prayer is earnestly requested that the efforts in it may be richly blessed.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN MANCHESTER.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Children's Aid Society, was lately held at the Town Hall. The Institution contains a very complete network of agencies. While all applicants cannot possibly be received into the Refuges, no destitute child is refused help in some form. During the year 150 were admitted, making altogether 405 now in the Refuges. The report contained detailed reference to each branch of the work; it is hoped ere long greatly to increase the number of emigrants.

The Rev. S. Hocking moved and advocated a resolution deploring the number of children still to be found growing up under the worst street influence, and expressing the conviction that no system of education for the poorer classes would be completely efficient which did not provide an industrial as well as a mental training. Mr. Isaac Hoyle said these charitable institutions were a bright spot in their city. Miss Macpherson spoke at some length on the subject of emigration to Canada, pointing out the good results which had attended her work in that direction.

The Bishop of Manchester confessed that he was sadly discouraged at the enormously perplexing social phenomena which presented themselves in dealing with this subject. It was painful to think that there was so much misery and poverty, and crime, and destitution, all of which might be preventible if only society were better organised, if the one half knew and cared to know how the other half lived, and would stretch out a more systematically directed hand. Several other gentlemen gave addresses. The chairman, Mr. Herbert Phillips, referred to the importance of getting parents so dealt with if they were cruel to their children, or tried to evade their responsibilities with regard to them, as would tend to lessen the supply of destitute street children.

FAITH v. UNFAITH.

DR. SINCLAIR PATERSON'S LECTURES.

The second lecture of the series at Devonshire-house, Bishopsgate, dealt with the conflicting claims of faith and unbelief. The antagonism between them, said the lecturer, is as great as that between light and darkness, and it has existed for many centuries. The one asserts what the other denies; if the one be true and right, the other must be false and wrong. Faith not only sees in the world distinct evidence of Divine power and wisdom, but it accepts the Scriptures as a true record of the revelation which God has made in his Son Jesus Christ. The Bible is a unique and incomparable book. Its teachings have never yet failed, when they have been thoroughly accepted and submitted to, in changing a man's being to its very centre. There are numberless illustrations of this in the history of the Christian Church. We have heard much about the holy books of the East. These are now accessible to us through Max Muller's translations, and he asserts that in no setting does the Bible shine so brightly as in a setting of these so-called sacred books.

Then in the Bible, notwithstanding that it was written by many different persons at different periods with long intervals between, we find the progressive development of the idea lodged in the very beginning of the volume—the coming of One who should bring deliverance from the bondage and penalty of sin. In due time that One so long predicted did come, and all that was foretold concerning him was actually fulfilled. We read also in the Book concerning the Jews to whom the oracles of God were committed, that if they turned aside from the truth to serve idols, the judgments of God would visit them; this we know has happened just as it was predicted long before. Another remarkable proof of the genuineness of the sacred writings is the wonderful care with which they were preserved by the Jews, notwithstanding the fact that they foreshadowed these judgments of God on the nation because of their rebellion and idolatry. The whole history of the Jewish people is one irrefragable testimony to the truth of the inspired Word of God. It has been well said, with respect to the Bible, that no mere man could have written it if he would, nor would he have written it if he could.

Dr. Paterson then dwelt on the teaching of the Scriptures with regard to the relation of man to God, and the provision made by God for dealing with the sin of the world, in the free gift of his Son. The Bible claims to set forth the way in which man may be reconciled to God, and it has proved itself to be true in this respect in innumerable cases. All that is needed is that men should put it to the test of personal experiment. That is just what the opponents of the Scripture do not do, and yet they consider themselves qualified to sit in judgment upon it. The lecturer proceeded to show, as another notable proof of the divinity of the Scriptures, how all the good to be found in modern systems of thought, legislation, &c., has been borrowed from the Bible itself. In so far as these systems contravene the revealed Word of God they are mutually destructive, proving conclusively that they are only the speulations of fallible and misguided men.

Several questions that had previously been sent to the lecturer were answered very clearly and satisfactorily. One question was with reference to the length of the periods termed "days" in the Genesis account of the creation. Dr. Paterson drew attention to the exact phrasing of the Hebrew, which was "Evening and morning —first day," and so on. From evening to morning do not make a day, but a night, and the recurring phrase therefore simply marks off the creative periods or days, without implying or asserting anything whatever as to their duration. The Bible gave no information on the subject, and therefore he held no theory about it. At the same time, he remarked that before the sun was set in his place we could not imagine their being days of twenty-four hours.

THE Y.M.C.A. AT HOME AND ABROAD.

186, ALDERSGATE-STREET, E.C.

THE next course of lectures, on "Foundation Truths: the Faith once delivered," which Dr. Robert Anderson proposes to deliver to the Aldersgate-street Young Men's Christian Association, promises to be even more fruitful and timely than the excellent series already delivered on Prophecy and Scepticism. On Thursday (this day) at eight o'clock he commences with a lecture on "Sin and Grace," to be followed on successive Thursdays by "Faith, Repentance, and the New Birth," and "Eternal Life and Eternal Judgment."

IPSWICH.

A meeting for conference and prayer was held here last Thursday. Representatives of the branches in the eastern counties were present. A District Union for the eastern counties was formed The delegates from Norwich, Lowestoft, and other centres reported most favourably of the progress of the work in these districts. The Ipswich branch is very vigorous, and has recently been instrumental in starting three country branches, all of which are in working order, and doing good service.

NEW YORK.

Association Hall was crowded at the thirty-second anniversary of this flourishing Society, and all the exercises showed the deep interest felt in its vigorous execution by our best citizens. Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, of the Madison-square Presbyterian Church, in the opening address electrified the audience by his earnest thought and his terse, crisp, epigrammatic style. He showed that true piety must be diffusive. Piety which had no other aim than to remain pious simply sent back the rays of divine light to their source without benefiting anyone but their owner. Many Christians are charged with Pentecostal electricity every Sunday, but during the rest of the week they allow it to be dissipated into the air. Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, in a speech of great eloquence, described the Association as a Christian democracy, within the pale of all sects, but attached to none. He referred with interest and approval to the work it is doing among the railroad operatives, with which he is especially familiar.

The report of the Committee, as read by the secretary, Mr. R. R. McBurney, was very inspiring. Outside of the grand work constantly going on in its own hall there are six flourishing branches in various parts of the city. Much encouraging, aggressive Christian work for young men by young men is carried forward week by week.

BROOKLYN.

The annual muster of the members and friends of this Association has lately been held. A Brooklyn paper, in reporting the proceedings, says that the most interesting part of them was the singing of Mr. Sankey and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins. They sang a new hymn, "The Wanderer," the words of which were written by Dr. H. Bonar.

A year of encouraging work was reported, the chief drawback being financial difficulty. "The amount of personal work of every description in the rooms by the employés cannot be tabulated. To the young men strangers in our city, seasonable counsel and advice have been given, continual spiritual dealing with the wandering has blessedly occupied much time; letters to young men leaving us, and letters about young men coming to us, are constant occurrences."

The chief speaker was Rev. I. Lansing, who said he considered the Association as the advance guard of Christian effort; he would point to its noble achievements as an answer to the hypocrites who stand on platforms for a price, and pick flaws in the seamless garments of Christianity.

BOSTON, U.S.

This Association, says a contemporary, is enjoying unusual prosperity in all departments of its work. Its present membership is over 4000, and the daily attendance averages 1500.

It would be difficult to summarise in statistics the endless variety of requests for service or information constantly received by telegraph, mail, or personal application. There is an unceasing stream of inquiries after lost sons and daughters, and concerning young men whose address is known, but who have commenced to go the downward path. A single letter of this kind often requires long-continued effort on the part of officers or members of the Association. The story of such efforts, if related, would equal in pathos most of those which find their way into the daily Press.

The following incident, recently published in a Chicago paper, gives the reader a vivid and truthful conception of the fierce conflict of evil and good in great cities, and of the value of aggressive Christian work:—

Twenty-two years ago a boy went from a northern Vermont town to Boston to work his way in the world. After a time he found himself an apprentice in a large machine shop. One evening he wandered into the Y.M.C.A. free reading-room, was welcomed, came again and again. He is now a leading man in his town, has invented many useful and valuable machines, and attributes his present position to the influences that were thrown around him at the Y.M.C.A. The following figures tell the story of himself and twenty-nine fellow-apprentices: "Four went to State Prison for from five to twenty years, five died from delirium tremens, one is keeping a low place in Boston, and but three of the remaining twenty have made a success in life. The several influences which kept these three in the path of right were, for the first, his natural ambition; the second, home instruction and care; the third, the Y.M.C.A."

SAN FRANCISCO.

The following figures are taken from the reports presented at a recent meeting: Total number of visits made to the building during the month of January, 21,548; number of situations found for young men, 15; young men assisted in various ways, 35; number of calls made upon sick young men, 30; watchers furnished for eleven nights. One hundred and sixty-seven new members were elected during the evening, fifty of whom were clerks from one large business firm, their membership tickets having been paid for by the firm for the third consecutive year. Interesting reports were presented from the German branch and from the boys' branch. Parlours for the exclusive use of the boy members will be fitted up at once. This Association is doing a great work, and several of our prominent business firms are appreciating this fact, and are making their clerks members of the Association.

THE WORKING GIRLS' CLUB, situated in Chalmers'-close, 81, High-street, Edinburgh, was opened about two years ago as a place of resort during evenings for girls who are at work during the day. The brief statement just issued says: "The various services, classes, and evangelistic meetings have not been in vain; the change in the girls being obvious. The work is quite unsectarian, and is carried on by eighteen young ladies." Miss Ellice Hopkins has visited the club, and bears testimony to its excellence and advantages. Miss H. B. Thompson is the Secretary.

MR. DENHAM SMITH has been delivering a series of addresses on Sunday evenings, at St. George's Hall, on the following subjects:—(1) The Eternity of the Saved: Their Present State; their Resurrection; their Freedom from Judgment; and their Final and Eternal State. (2) The Eternity of the Lost: The Scripture Account of their Present State; their Resurrection; their Judgment; their Sentence; and their Doom. (3) Satan: His Personality; his Original Glory; his Past and Present; his Eternal Doom and Place. (4) The Love of God in Relation to the Lost. (5) Immortality, Incorruptibility and Eternal Life: Are they the Same? The congregations have been very large, a great number of young men attending. The show of Bibles when Scripture has been referred to has been most remarkable.

THE JEWISH MOVEMENT IN BESSARABIA.

DEAR SIR,—Recent letters from Mr. Rabinowitch and Pastor Faltin state that a bitter persecution has been raised by the Jews in Kischeneff, and that Mr. Rabinowitch has been compelled to leave his residence (his own property), situated in the Jewish Quarter, and rent a house near to Pastor Faltin. The burden of the work is becoming heavy, and the need of prayerful and practical sympathy great and pressing. He has lost all his clients as a lawyer, and his means of subsistence are gone. He needs aid for himself and family. He needs about 1500 roubles for his place of worship; a further 1500 for school for boys and girls; a further 1000 for aiding teachers and others who have lost their position among the Jews and are in need. After help given for two or three years, he thinks his friends on the spot would be able to meet their own expenses.

It would be very gratifying on all sides if some united effort could be made to aid our brother in his blessed work; but if this be not practicable at present, let all the friends of Israel send help, either direct to Mr. Rabinowitch at Kischeneff, or through any of the various organisations at home. His letters are full of Scripture truth, and of deep love to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Faithfully yours, J. WILKINSON.

A GOOD WORK IN RIGA.

A GOOD Gospel work has been commenced by Pastor Herrmann among the many thousand souls in Riga, the spiritual condition of whom is very deplorable. He began in 1877, and since then 200 souls have professed conversion. The pastor's work of preaching the simple Gospel has attracted large numbers, so that the meeting-place became too strait for them, and they had to remove to a larger building. Unfortunately, many difficulties were thrown in the way; the little flock was driven from place to place, and every effort made to suppress it. A Sunday-school was opened, the first and only one in Riga, but through the action of the authorities it had ultimately to be shut up. Still the work of God went on increasing, and stations have been opened at Libau and Estland.

Many are anxious to hear the word of life, but are unable, through want of a proper place for meeting. There is no City Mission in Riga, no Mission to the Jews, and only one Sunday-school. A great need is now felt for a building to seat 800 to 1000 people. Pastor Herrmann's congregation, very poor themselves, have done their utmost in raising £500 towards the £2500 needed. The pastor has come over to England to raise, if possible, the necessary £2000. It is hoped that Christian friends will help liberally, as he is anxious to return to resume his work, so that the Lord's cause may not suffer. Pastor Herrmann's address is 16, Poplar-grove, West Kensington-park, London, W.

SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES.—Such is the title of a neat pamphlet containing a full report of the Conference of the Y.W.C.A. of Ireland, held in Dublin last October. In addition to the large amount of information relative to general and practical work done by the association, the pamphlet is well worthy of being read by Christian workers on account of the excellent addresses delivered by several of the ladies who were present. A letter from Mrs. W. Hatt Noble, the president of the association, accompanying the report, says it is doing good work in Ireland, not only in its Bible-classes, but by its evangelistic agencies.

THE LONDON AND BRIGHTON FEMALE CONVALESCENT HOME received more than two thousand convalescents during 1884, the largest number ever received in one year. The fifteenth annual report says: "With 120 persons to maintain every day during the summer, our expenditure must necessarily be large. A convalescent home, to be efficiently worked, requires abundance of nourishing diet, a daily drive in the summer for those too weak to walk, warm sea-baths, and various other things to invigorate exhausted frames. "But a bounteous Hand has hitherto supplied our needs." A new class-room has been built, more accommodation being necessary. One who had been staying at the Home writes: "Please accept my best thanks for my free fortnight at that dear Home. It was to me an oasis in the desert. I feel quite strong now, and ready again for the battle of life. I know now that God cares for me, and has filled your heart with kindness to me." Mrs. Marshman, whose address is 4, Ladbroke-square, London, W., hopes for continued support, and invites Brighton visitors to pay a visit to the Home.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

A Great Revival is in progress in Weardale, under the labours of a Mr. Smith, of Leeds. At Stanhope over 100 persons have professed conversion.

Weston-super-Mare.—A correspondent writes: "We have had a three weeks' Mission here by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, with very gracious results."

Mrs. Hampson has closed a series of Gospel services at Honolulu which have been greatly owned of God, in the reviving of the Church and the awakening of those who were dead in trespasses with sins.

Mr. E. P. Telford has concluded a most successful twenty-days' Mission at Cheslyn Heny, near Cannock. The village has not eighteen hundred inhabitants, yet between four and five hundred were collected nightly to hear the Gospel, and over two hundred went into the inquiry-room.

Sadlers' Wells Theatre.—The Sunday evening Gospel services here, conducted by Mr. W. Catlin, are now closed for the season. They were largely attended, and were marked by evident tokens of God's presence and power. We understand that the theatre is closed for performances on week evenings for lack of public patronage.

Streatley, Berks.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan, with their Bible-carriage, have just been resting for a week in this village. They held three services during their stay, and visited the people in their homes, faithfully and earnestly delivering the Gospel message. They have now gone on to Salisbury, taking the villages on the way. L. M. H.

Mr. W. Forbes, since his return from the North, has been giving addresses in various districts of the Metropolis. At meetings last week in Clerkenwell a considerable number signed the pledge, and many put on the blue ribbon. All applications to conduct evangelistic services or Gospel Temperance meetings should be sent to Mr. Forbes, 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, London, N.

Boddam, Peterhead, N.B.—At this fishing village the Lord's work has had a fresh stimulus given to it within the past few weeks. Large audiences have been gathered to hear the Gospel preached and sung by Mrs. Ferrier and Miss Grierson, evangelists. Believers have been revived, and many of those who knew not God have been brought to know and love Him through Jesus Christ.

The Church Army is commencing a campaign which will probably last for some time, in St. Stephen's parish, in the centre of a poor part of Nottingham. In St. Columbas parish, Liverpool, part of which is well known as a dark spot in the town, over fifty adult candidates for confirmation have come forward, as the result of three months' steady campaign. In Penzance the work has taken such a hold on the place that a second campaign is being begun at Newlyn, which is adjacent.

Bourne.—Mr. John Harris has concluded a very successful series of services (the second this winter) at Bourne. Believers have been much quickened and strengthened, backsliders have been brought back to Christ, and the unconverted have been led to decision. At Aslackby also, Mr. Harris has held a week's services, with good results. Mr. F. Hyatt has conducted a month's Mission at Billingborough, and his labours likewise have been abundantly blessed. Thomas Baron.

Bourne.

Messrs. Hurditch and Spurr in Cornwall.—These evangelists have paid us a visit at Gunnislake, at the invitation of a united committee formed for the purpose. They commenced on Sunday, February 8, and have been with us a fortnight, holding united meetings in the Bible Christian and Wesleyan chapels. The power of the Lord has been manifest, and there has been a considerable awakening in the town. The meetings were largely attended throughout. We thank God for the visit of our friends, and believe that there will be yet greater fruit springing from the seed sown by them. The united denominations are still carrying on the work.

J. H. Blackwell, Bible Christian Minister.

Gunnislake.

Clapham Conference Hall.—A ten days' Gospel Mission has been held here, the preacher being Mr. Herbert Francis. The numbers were small at the earlier meetings, but the increased attendance was remarkable. On every occasion a large proportion of the meeting rose to ask for prayer, and many testified to finding peace. On the afternoon of each day Mr. Francis held a meeting for instruction and prayer. On Saturday evening, at the praise meeting, many gave testimony of their joy in the Lord. On February 23 Mr. Francis held a thanksgiving meeting, which was well attended.

Frodsham, Cheshire.—Mr. Thomas Eyres has been conducting a Mission to children in connection with the Nonconformist churches of this town. The meetings have been fairly well attended, much good seed has been sown, and it is hoped that permanent fruit will remain.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of America has extended its sphere of action to Honolulu.

Chloral and bromide are said to be giving place to the more fascinating Cologne water, which is taken largely on loaf sugar by those who desire the effects of Cognac without its less pleasant odour.

Mr. William Noble has held a four days' Mission at Barnstaple. A report embracing the first three nights shows that as a result of Mr. Noble's earnest advocacy nearly 140 pledges were taken.

Abingdon.—A most successful five days' Gospel Temperance Mission has just been held here. The Town-hall was well filled each evening. One hundred and sixty new pledges were taken, and in addition to these, at the children's meeting, which was addressed by Mr. Arrowsmith, seventy-six signed the pledge.

New Hall, Wellington, Salop.—Major Evered Poole and Mrs. Poole have held a week's Gospel Temperance Mission here with blessed results. Major Poole's addresses were most powerful and convincing. Mrs. Poole's were simply thrilling, full of deep pathos and tenderness. A large number signed the pledge and donned the Blue, and we hope many rested in the Saviour. J. E. C.

The Poole Perjury Case.—A crowded and enthusiastic public meeting was held in the Memorial Hall on Monday week to protest against the imprisonment of Mr. H. Williams, the detective who is undergoing penal servitude for alleged perjury in connection with the prosecution of publicans in Poole. Strong language was used with reference to the partiality of the judge's charge to the jury, and it was determined to memorialize the Home Secretary for a remission of the sentence.

Mr. Francis Murphy has scored another success in a Gospel Temperance campaign, two weeks in Des Moines, Iowa. A local paper says that "an untold amount of good has been done. Men, women, and young people have not only been induced to sign the pledge, but a healthy public sentiment has been built up." The farewell meeting is described as the greatest public gathering ever seen in the city. Among the speakers was Mrs. Anne Wittenmeyer, of Philadelphia.

A Lesson from the Soudan.—That the non-supply of liquor to our soldiers in Egypt is a beneficent arrangement, the war correspondents are constrained to acknowledge. Especially does the correspondent of The Times emphasise the fact. He says: "If further proof were required that drink is the source of ninety per cent. of the crime in the army, it would be furnished by the conduct of these troops who have nothing to get drunk upon; while their conduct is all that could be desired, their physique has certainly not suffered, for a finer body of men it would be impossible to pick out of any army in the world."

LAY PREACHERS' ASSOCIATON.—At the recent annual meeting, held at 186, Aldersgate-street, of the City of London Lay Preachers' Association, it was reported that the agents sent out by it had conducted upwards of 200 Gospel services during the year in London and elsewhere. A number of grateful testimonies were received from places where they had declared the Gospel message. An interesting and valuable discussion took place at the meeting on the best methods of presenting the Gospel to the people. This Association is only a year old, but has done a noble work, and is growing in the estimation of those who have been visited by its preachers.

A TRUE BLUE BAND.—A band, bearing this designation, has been successfully formed in the village of Southall, among the brickmakers of that neglected neighbourhood. This work has been carried on entirely by the self-denying efforts of Miss Baxter and her family. Prizes and badges are given each half year to those who have observed the rules of the band. On Friday week the prizes were distributed by the Earl of Jersey, who gave a tea to the entire band, and a handsome prize also. It is a pleasing thing to know that many of these young people (who are forty in number) have given their hearts to the Lord, and are exercising much influence for good amongst their fellow-workmen.

EMIGRANTS AT THE BLACKWALL HOME.

MUCH hearty thanksgiving has been evoked of late at the Monday Noon Prayer-meetings in Aldersgate-street, by the reports of God's wonderful saving grace in connection with the labours of his servants on the preceding Lord's Day. Last Monday a perfect chorus of praise ascended for the work that has been going on among the emigrants who sojourn for a brief season at the Blackwall Home, before taking ship for some foreign land. Meetings are held with them, and efforts are made individually to lead them to a definite surrender of their lives to Christ before leaving the old country; these efforts are being crowned with much success.

At this meeting very encouraging statements of the work were made by Mr. E. Trotter, Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Wilkie (manager of the Home), and Mr. Seagram. Special reference was made to a party of emigrants who were sailing that day, and concerning whom some deeply interesting facts were reported as to the readiness with which they had responded to the efforts of the workers. It is found that the time of their saying good-bye to Old England, perhaps for ever, is a favourable opportunity for pressing upon them the claims of the Saviour; their hearts are sensitive and open to any words of loving entreaty. Another great advantage referred to was the fact of their becoming acquainted before going on board ship. This tends to the increase of Christian communion on the voyage, and to the deepening of any good impressions made. The friends at the Blackwall Home desire that their hands may be upheld by the prayers of all interested in this good work.

TIMES OF REFRESHING IN SOUTHWARK.

AN eight days' Gospel Mission, just held by Rev. F. C. Stuart at the Wesleyan Chapel, Long-lane, Borough, has been a most fruitful time in th quickening of believers, the restoring of backsliders, and the conversion of the careless. Over a hundred have been recorded as earnest seekers after salvation. There was much preparation, in the shape of prayer, of renewed consecration among the Christian workers, of conference as to the best means of advancing spiritual life, and of visitation among the surrounding families.

A meeting for men only on Sunday afternoon, February 22, was something of a novelty, but proved a great success. The Mission preacher dealt most impressively with the besetting sins of the day, and the congregation appeared to be greatly moved. The evening meetings were very large, and on each occasion many repaired to the inquiry-room at the close of Mr. Stuart's thrilling exhortations and appeals. He has special tact in dealing with anxious ones, and his wise counsels at the after-meetings will be long remembered by all. The closing meeting for converts was a deeply interesting occasion. The hearts of the workers are greatly rejoiced, and they are looking for a continuance of the good work through the regular services of the church.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—An interesting coloured diagram, vividly reproducing the portraits of many well known friends of Ragged-school work (including Lord Shaftesbury and General Gordon), and varied scenes in the history of destitute children, has been prepared on behalf of the Union, and published by Messrs. Partridge & Co., price 1s. Mr. W. C. Miles is the artistic designer.

THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.—A special interest was imparted to Dr. Parker's last Thursday midday service by the presence of some 200 orphans from Mr. Spurgeon's Stockwell Orphanage. The master of the orphanage, Mr. Charlesworth, assisted in conducting the service. Special hymns had been printed, which the young people sang faultlessly. At the close of his discourse Dr. Parker pleaded very heartily for a liberal collection, and said the boys and girls would themselves go from pew to pew and thus secure the best response from the congregation. In very kind and brotherly terms he referred to Mr. Spurgeon's enforced absence from his labours; and he did not know how they could better cheer the heart of the founder of this admirable institution than by giving liberally of their substance to its support.

Letters to the Editor.

THE MAHDI AND THE SOUDANESE.

Dear Sir,—While thoroughly in accord with your sentiments regarding war I am of opinion that your readers should not be led to believe that the Soudanese Arabs are patriots endeavouring to free themselves from the tyranny of Egypt.

In May, 1881, the Mahdi declared himself to be the prophet Mahomet had foretold, and he enlisted the sympathies of the people by promising to establish equality, and make the rich share with the poor. The Mahdi is a fanatical adventurer (a wild beast) who has unfurled the flag of Islam with the declaration that he would destroy all who will not receive him.

In contrast with his profession of equality it is well to remember that the Arabs in the Soudan are slaveholders, and are cruel and oppressive, and, if unchecked, would rapidly overrun and destroy Egypt. R. Cathcart Dobbs.

EVANGELISATION IN FRANCE.

Dear Sir,—It seems to be a great pity that more attention is not turned towards France at this time. There is a wonderful field for Gospel work there just now. The door is wide open everywhere, and few to go in and occupy. The nation is fast drifting into infidelity, and this seems a golden opportunity for devoted men and women to go in and possess the land. Are there not many Christian men and women in England, who have independent means, and who, speaking French, could go and circulate the Scriptures, distribute tracts, hold meetings? This opportunity may not last long, and I write to stir up the hearts of the Lord's people in these missionary times to go forth to a field of labour, just at their very doors. Some are willing to go who have not the means. I am sure, Mr. Editor, you would not refuse to receive the contributions of Christians who have means and cannot go themselves, to send over faithful and earnest men of God to do God's work in La belle France. There is a dear servant of the Lord here ready and willing to go, if the Lord provides the means. He is known to many of your readers as a devoted evangelist in France in days gone by. He longs to go over again, and devote his time and talents to the Master's work. I refer to M. Sinel. Should any of your readers wish to communicate further with me on this subject, I shall be glad to hear from them, or receive any sum entrusted to me.

Yours faithfully, T. Shuldham Henry.
Hillside, St. Saviour's, Jersey.

[We shall, of course, be happy to receive any contributions for the furtherance of the work of M. Sinel, whom we have known for years as an earnest and efficient worker.]

CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

Sir,—The reply of the Editor of Eastward Ho, in your issue of the 26th February, will not do. He says "Peter the Hermit" was dealing with the income of the Charity Organisation Society. The distinction is not of much importance, because the amount of the Society's income is the measure of its expenditure. But it was with expenditure he was dealing, and he said, "I only know that men of business have stated that the expenditure on direct relief was £465 15s. 4d., against a total expenditure of £20,094 2s. 2d." In the next paragraph of the article he stated that relief had been given to the extent of £3,322 9s. 1d.: the truth being that the expenditure on relief in the year in question, 1883, was £15,578 16s. 7d. This your readers can verify for themselves by reference to the Society's report for that year.

I agree that the money raised by the Society for special cases could not "without fraud" have been applied to any other purpose; but this is equally true of all other moneys passing through the Society's hands (including those which are entrusted to them for the promotion of the main object of the Society, which, as everyone acquainted with it knows, is rather the organisation on sound principles of existing charitable agencies than the granting of relief from the Society's own funds), and I fail to see on what ground it is suggested that credit is due to the Society for one part of its work and not for another. As a matter of fact, there is no more laborious part of its work than that which is connected with "special cases."

The present question, however, is not as to what is the Society's proper work, or the comparative value of the various departments of that work, but the accuracy of "Peter the Hermit's" figures, and I trust it will be unnecessary for me again to have to show that these are grossly inaccurate.—Your obedient servant, C. S. Loch, Secretary.

THE TEACHING OF THE APOSTLES.

Dear Sir,—In consequence of numerous communications which come to me, and all of which express interest in the article that appeared in your number for December 25, on the manuscript entitled as above, it is necessary to draw attention to the following qualification in relation to the document. Nothing whatever was said in the article concerning the doctrine of "The Teaching." Expressly were the words used: "The value of the document is in the vindication it gives of the opinion which maintained the authenticity and genuineness of the New Testament writings." It was spoken of as valuable, because it comes out of a period the most obscure in Church history, and shows that at a very early date the New Testament writings were in the hands of Christians, and that their authority was then recognised. The sole bearing, therefore, of drawing attention to "The Teaching" was to point out that its existence and early date were a complete answer and antidote to the most dangerous and destructive attack ever made on the Christian faith.

I may add that those who have been reading the recently published "Life of George Eliot," and remember how a highly-gifted intellect was bewildered and turned aside by the writers of the Tübingen school, will rejoice that the discovery of the "Teaching" goes far to silence the deadly modern speculations which have been so widely strengthening unbelief. Surely we ought to give thanks for this, even while unable to express full approval of the MS.

Doubtless, as all ecclesiastical students know, no single writing of the post-apostolic period will stand the criticism of those who have a more facile access to inspired teaching, and, in addition, the warning and guidance of nearly nineteen Christian centuries. But while painfully admitting that their theology was crude, the spirit of candour will admit that the early Christian writers knew how to deny the world, to suffer heavily with their Master, and to enforce his doctrine that all who profess to be Jesus Christ's should depart from iniquity.

At the time, then, when this early Christian document will be read, I ask insertion for these lines to justify the opinion of many that, in spite of its doctrinal omissions, the document offers an invaluable evidence on behalf of the blessed volume, which not only is able to make wise unto salvation, but which grows more wonderful in its fulness and wisdom when compared with writings that immediately followed it.—Yours faithfully, The Writer of the Article.

THE ABERDEEN SAILORS' MISSION is doing a steady and successful work among the seamen of this northern port. An extension of the efforts put forth is contemplated.

LORD SHAFTESBURY.—A ladies' committee has been formed in the West-end of London for the purpose of collecting and offering to Lord Shaftesbury on his eighty-fourth birthday (the 28th of April next) a sum of money to be applied by him at his discretion in relieving the distress of the Jews in Palestine, and especially in assisting them to emigrate. It is hoped that a "Syrian Colonisation Fund" will be raised in aid of this work.

SEAMEN AT RIO DE JANEIRO.—Mr. Thomas Hooper, the missionary to seamen at this point, in connection with the South-American Missionary Society, writes to ask the help of our readers in providing a good supply of religious periodicals to those who frequent the port. We doubt not some will gladly respond, by post, or any other channel that may present itself. The postage of each paper is 1d. Mr. Hooper's address is 34, Travessa Alice, Donna Luiza, Rio de Janeiro.

GERMANS IN LONDON.—Herr F. von Schluembach, whose evangelistic labours in Berlin have been accompanied with marked and continued blessing, opened a series of addresses to Germans at 28, Finsbury-square, on Tuesday last. The Mission will be continued next week at the larger Hall of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, and it is the desire of all those interested in God's work amongst Germans that there may be a very full attendance. Would Christian friends kindly send names and addresses of Germans to Mr. Robert Burn, Secretary Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., that he may be able to post the notices to them individually?

Requests for Prayer.

For families long out of employment; that suitable situations may open for them.——For blessing on meetings now being held in Birmingham by Mr. George Hefford.——For blessing on Rev. E. P. Hammond's special services for children and young people in Glasgow.——For blessing in connection with evangelistic meetings in Dunkeld, by Mr. Anderson, of Ayr.——For the conversion of French Canadian Roman Catholics in Chicago, and especially for blessing upon a Mission to reach them, carried on by a converted Roman Catholic priest.——That God may awaken a deep interest in the hearts of believers for the many thousands of Jews in America, and that Gospel agencies may be set to work in every city where Jews reside.——For blessing on a Mission at Blandford, conducted by Mr. G. Brealey.——For much blessing on a Gospel Mission at Loampit Vale, Lewisham, conducted by Mr. William Packer.

REV. J. SMITH, of Berwick-on-Tweed, has accepted a call, preferred the second time, to become colleague and successor to Dr. Andrew Thompson, Edinburgh.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.—The Leathersellers' Company have sent a contribution of ten guineas to Mrs. Hilton's Crèche and Orphan Home in Stepney-causeway.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—The report of Dr. Monro Gibson's congregation for the past year states that over two hundred have been added to the church roll during that period. The Mission at Kilburn flourishes. The total income for the year was £4360.

GENERAL BOOTH'S latest device is the building of a number of wagons for use in country towns and villages where there are no public halls. They are to be called forts, and will be manned by cadets and officers, who are to move about the country in them.

PASTEUR J. MASSIS, of Brighton, has started a little religious journal, entitled Téléphone Evangélique, for the benefit of those in England, whether French or Swiss, who have hitherto had no newspaper of this kind in French. It may be procured on application to the editor and publisher, 33, Lansdowne-street, Brighton.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Committee have arranged to hold a weekly prayer-meeting in their large new Committee-room, in Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, every Thursday afternoon at four o'clock, for one hour. At this meeting the special needs of the Mission-field all round the world will be briefly stated each week, and the various missionaries and Missions will be individually prayed for. All friends will be welcome. The first meeting will be on Thursday, March 12.

GOLDEN WORDS BY BISHOP TEMPLE.—The Bishop-designate of London will not lower in the metropolis any flag he has unfurled in his former sphere. If possible, he is speaking out with even greater emphasis since his promotion on subjects which a few years ago no occupant of the Bench would have touched. At Derby, the other evening, he advocated the cause of the Social Purity Alliance with almost fiery vehemence. He summoned his hearers to do battle with the degrading opinions which prevail in society.—Christian Leader.

WOMEN AT GEORGE-YARD, WHITECHAPEL.—A crowded meeting of poor women was held in the Mission-hall (arranged by Y.M.C.A. Gracechurch-street Branch) on Monday, February 23. Over 100 women partook of a subtantial tea at an earlier hour. Mr. John Tod occupied the chair. A Service of Song by forty members of the South London Evangelistic Choir, was greatly appreciated. Appropriate remarks in the intervals were delivered by Mr. George Holland and others, the proceedings being closed by an earnest Gospel address from the Chairman.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College Avenue, Hackney, London.—We are making special efforts to clear off, by the end of March, the debt upon the Home, which is now reduced to £100. We intend, so soon as the debt is removed, to receive some very sad and destitute cases, and trust God for the funds required for the support of these little ones. There are numbers of poor little blind children who, because they have a second affliction, cannot be admitted into any institution, and are almost without friends to care for them. May God help us to rescue some of these little ones, and place them with our other children! The gift of an old piano for our schoolroom would also be very acceptable.

S. Rye.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

MARCH 5.–MARK VIII.

v. 23.—"He led him out of the town."—This miracle, and that of the healing "one that was deaf," in chap. vii., are peculiar to Mark. Mr. Jukes thus indicates their special teaching: "In both I find, not only in word, but in act, the Lord manifesting a desire to throw a veil of secrecy over these gracious actions. And surely this is one unfailing mark of service according to God: 'alms in secret,' 'the right hand ignorant of what the left hand doeth.' This comes out brightly here. We read, 'He took him aside, and charged them that they should tell no man.' Again: 'He took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and said, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.' Words like these, requiring secrecy, though not so frequently repeated, may be found elsewhere; but acts in which the Servant so remarkably strives to hide Himself, are peculiar to this Gospel. For this is perfection in service—to serve unseen, unthanked. Such service is heavenly, like that of the holy angels. 'Are they not all ministering spirits?' and yet who sees them, who thanks them? Nor do they ask, nor would they receive, our praise. Enough for them that they are doing the will of God; for they know that 'in keeping, as well as for keeping, his commandments is great reward.'"

v. 31.—"He began to teach them, that the Son of Man must suffer."—This is our Lord's first clear and direct announcement of his approaching rejection by Israel, death on the cross, and subsequent resurrection. Ver. 32 says, "He spake it openly," i.e., plainly, not in metaphor, or darkly. The word "must" literally means "it is necessary;" this necessity for the Son of Man to die in order to the salvation of the world the disciples did not as yet understand, hence Peter scouted the idea as impossible and unreasonable, took the part of a satan (= an adversary) to it as a doctrine of Christ, and so became an instrument of Satan in urging Christ to avert it. Hence the rebuke which followed, "Get thee behind Me, Satan."

v. 2.—"He was transfigured before them."—Literally, "He was changed in form." Canon Cook illustrates this by reference to Phil. ii. 6, "being in the form of God," the radiant form of the Transfiguration being an effulgence of the Divine glory.

v. 4.—"They were talking with Jesus."—Blest employ! Moses and Elijah in common with the glorified spirits above, have this joy in fulness, but we who know the Lord on earth, may have it spiritually and really also, for in prayer and by means of the inspired Word, when led by the Holy Ghost, we can, we do, talk with Jesus. The personal fellowship of our Lord is the highest bliss of heaven, spiritual communion with Him here is the chiefest joy on earth.

v. 24.—"Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief."—I see, but enlighten my darkness; I hear, but cure my deafness; I move, but quicken my dulness; I desire, but help my unwillingness; I remember, but remove my forgetfulness.—Secker.

v. 39.—"But Jesus said, Forbid him not."—It cannot be denied that this furnishes a strong reproof to bigots, who are ready to deny the Christian or the churchly name to those who are not of their own organisation. Where those who differ from us do not endanger the fundamentals of repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, we must be very cautious how we forbid them, because they follow not us. We may love our own doctrines, discipline, usages, and denomination; we may defend them at the proper time with firmness and boldness: but let us not be unjust to the piety and the zeal in the cause of Christ and the good of mankind, which exist in other denominations of Christians.

v. 49.—"Everyone shall be salted with fire."—That same fire of God's holiness which purifies the saint constitutes the penal fire of the obdurate sinner, so that the essential base of the fire in vv. 48, 49 is the same. The particle "for" connects 49 with 47, and shows that the severity of the purgation which is expressed by fire here is the same as that expressed by cutting off in the previous verses. Undergo this purgative severity of cutting off and plucking out all the members of sin, for it is by this severe and fiery ordeal that we are purified, as a meat-offering is purified by salt.—Whedon.

MARCH 7.—MARK X.

v. 15.—"Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God. . . ."—Let us remember that these few and simple words do verily contain the key to everlasting life and glory. In knowing what they mean, we know, infallibly, the way to heaven. That which hinders us is our pride, our "manhood." The act of faith is a child's act, and a child's act, though intrinsically the easiest of any, is relatively the most difficult of all. It implies the surrender of our self-will, our self-love, our proud manhood; and never was a truer remark made than that of Ullmann, that "in no one thing is the strength of a man's will so manifested as in his having no will of his own." Christianity, says Jeremy Taylor, "is the easiest and the hardest thing in the world. It is like a secret in arithmetic; infinitely hard till it be found out by a right operation, and then it is so plain we wonder we did not understand it earlier."—Dr. Shedd.

v. 22.—"He went away grieved: for he had great possessions."—He turned away from the gate of the kingdom, just as it was being opened to receive him, because it was not large enough to receive him and his wealth. He seemed earnest, determined, resolute, zealous; but beneath and underlying all appearances, there was one bosom-sin, he loved his money, clung tenaciously to his "large possessions," kept hold of them with both his hands, and he had not another with which to take hold of heaven too. So that slipped away from him, and he from it. One bosom-sin determinately retained will harden the heart, stupefy the conscience, darken the mind, and damn the man! It will resist and overcome inward monitions, it will frustrate and render nugatory all influence from without. . . Without God's grace—and extraordinary grace—where wealth is in the hand as a possession, Mammon will be in the heart as a power; and "ye cannot serve God and Mammon."—Binney.

v. 39.—"Ye shall indeed drink of the cup."—"Through much tribulation must we enter into the kingdom of heaven." There was never a wedge of gold that did not first pass through the fire; there never was pure grain that did not undergo the flail. In vain shall we dream of our immediate passage from the pleasures and jollity of earth to the glory of heaven. Let who will hope to walk upon roses and violets to the throne of heaven; O Saviour, let me trace Thee by the track of thy blood, and by thy red steps follow Thee to thine eternal rest and happiness. "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him."—Bishop Hall.

MARCH 8.—MARK XI.

v. 14.—"No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever."—This is the only miracle of punishment our Lord wrought while on earth, and it is symbolical. Stier says: "The tree is Israel. Already, at Luke xiii. 6—9, had he uttered the parable prepared in the Prophets (Hos. ix. 10.; Joel i. 7.), and his present action recalls this to mind. There were leaves enough—words and hypocritical works; as if it were really the Israel which it was called to be, the people of God wonderfully ripened, earlier than all other nations—but no fruit! A striking prophetic word speaks also of this: "I, the Lord, have dried up the green tree, and made the dry tree to flourish" (Ez. xvii. 24). Perhaps this passage also was particularly present to the mind of our Lord, for we may almost suppose that He, on every occasion, remembered every Scripture that was exactly appropriate to what He did.

v. 24.—"What things soever ye desire when ye pray."—In the Greek it is λαμβάνετε, in the present tense, "ye do receive them," to show the certainty of receiving them. You shall as certainly receive the good things that believingly you ask in prayer as if you had them already in your hand. God will never let the hand of faith go empty away in prayer. Faith is God's darling, and He never fails to give it a worthy portion, a Benjamin's portion, a Hannah's portion, a double portion.—Brooks.

v. 25.—"When ye stand praying, forgive."—These words are part of our Lord's application of the miracle of the withered fig-tree, and demand special attention as connected with the utterance of a curse upon its barrenness. The two lessons taught by our Lord as to effectual prayer are that it must be offered, as the Apostle says, in 1 Tim. ii. 8, "Without wrath and doubting." Faith cannot thrive in a heart-soil of unforgivingness and ill-will.

MARCH 9.—MARK XII.

v. 1-9.—The parable of the Vineyard and Husbandmen.—Here our Lord very definitely shows the Pharisees whence his authority was derived. In ver. 6, He declares Himself the Son of God, the Father's "Well-beloved," sent to the vineyard, of which we read in Isa. v. 7, "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and He looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry." The speech of Stephen before the Sanhedrin, recorded in Acts vii., is a striking commentary on this parable.

v. 10, 11.—"The Stone which the builders rejected."—These verses refer us to Psalm cxviii., and change the figure to confirm the fact. Professor Bruce observes: "The men who have just been compared to vinedressers are now become builders, and the heir, cast out of the vineyard and murdered, is now a stone, thrown aside as useless. But the new figure enables Jesus to give a glimpse of what is to happen to Himself after evil men have wrought their worst. . . . He will be raised to a place of power, an object of admiration to friends, a source of dismay to foes."

v. 24.—"Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures."—The revealed Word of God, then, takes away all error by its truth; and in particular this word, as being written by the Holy Ghost, and summed up in the Scripture. Let this axiom, here unconditionally expressed and taken for granted in the mouth of the true and faithful witness, be well considered! All philosophy, and all so-called theology which has no Holy Scripture—which is not built upon this foundation, and does not learn what it knows from this source—is, when it opposes the existing Scripture with λέγειν μὴ εἶναι, with saying what is and what is not, a foolish not knowing, a great error. When Christ puts the Scripture, rightly known, in opposition to all error, He thereby declares it to be itself free from error, and infallible; namely, in its unity and totality as the Word which cannot be broken (John x. 35).—Stier.

MARCH 10.—MARK XIII.

v. 32.—"Of that day and that hour knoweth no man. . . ."—Mr. Jukes strikingly remarks on these words that, as they are peculiar to this Gospel, so also they are very characteristic; for here the Son is seen with glory laid aside, clothed in the likeness of man, in very deed a true Servant. And in this aspect, like other servants, He awaits another's will, not knowing the Lord's secrets; for "the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth." And so as Servant He says, naming Himself with other blessed servants, the holy angels: "Of that day knoweth no man: no, not the angels, neither the Son; but the Father." Nor does this touch the truth of his Person, for that is not the question here. But just as in St. Luke, the words "He increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man," spoke of Him as Son of Adam, without in any way contradicting that He is also "the Word made flesh;" just as his death in one aspect is spoken of as "a sweet savour," man freely giving to God what is most sweet to Him, while in another aspect it is regarded as penal and a sin-offering, the due judgment for the sins of men: so in like manner what is true of Him as Servant does not deny his Lordship, which is but another view of the same wondrous and blessed Lord.

MARCH 11.—MARK XIV.

v. 4.—"Why was this waste of the ointment made?"—Wherefore this waste? literally "this perdition?" Fit question, according to Bengel, in the lips of the son of perdition. Wherefore? Because it was "kept" for a still nobler use. It was right to remember the poor. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." "To do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." To have sold the ointment for three hundred pence and given all to the poor would have been well, had Mary thought of it. It was better still to spend it as she actually did. The noblest use of money, time, power, intellect, genius, is to surrender them all in love and honour to the Lord Jesus; and they who do so are not likely to forget the poor, or be hard-hearted.—Dr. Culross.

v. 34.—"My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death."

"O gaze, my soul! with awe hold back thy breath;
My soul is sorrowful, even unto death.
O grief which mocks the agony of speech!
O pangs of love no heart but God's could reach!
"Oh, may that sin which filled my Lord with grief,
And left e'en Him awhile without relief,
Be seen and hated in its own true light,
The curse and burden of the Infinite."
W. Poole Balfern.

The sufferings of his body were but the body of his sufferings; the soul of his sufferings were the sufferings of his soul, which was now beset with sorrows, and heavy as a heart could hold. "The sorrows of death compassed him, the pains of hell gat hold upon him." It was altogether unspeakable; hence the Greek litany, "By thine unknown sufferings, good Lord, deliver us."—Trapp.

[As it is found that Infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, February 28, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Convalescent Home for Children.—Dear Sir,—I have during the past seven years in this house—previously for three years in Paris—been endeavouring to support a Convalescent Home for Delicate or Orphan Children. If any lady would like to send children, and to aid in defraying the expenses, I should gratefully accept aid. Many children have found health here by the pure air and nourishing diet combined with unremitting care.—Yours, &c., Mary A. Heath, 2, Springfield-terrace, London-road, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

MADAGASCAR AND FRANCE.

With some account of the Island, its People, its Resources, and Development.

BY GEORGE A. SHAW, F.Z.S., London Mission, Tamatave.

With many Illustrations and a Map.

The work seeks not only to set forth a true historical sketch of the connection of France with Madagascar from the earliest times to the present, by which it will be seen how little claim the former has to the island, or to the sympathies of its inhabitants; but also to answer various questions which are arising in the minds of many with regard to the country—its products and adaptability for foreign enterprise and commerce—and its people, their character, habits, employments, and advance in civilisation and Christianity.

The volume is of unusual interest, possessing in the narratives the vividness of an eye-witness and the accuracy of one who writes from first-hand knowledge. A personal interest attaches to the work from the prominent part played by Mr. Shaw himself in many of the scenes described. The book contains a large new map of Madagascar, and many illustrations from original sketches or photographs, finely engraved by E. Whymper.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, Paternoster-row, London.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

Some Thoughts on Christian Confidence.

Limp Cloth, 6d. Cheap Edition, for General Distribution, 2s. per dozen.

"A wise little book by Mr. Moody, that believers troubled with doubts and fears would do well to read and act upon."—Christian Treasury.

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE.

Some Thoughts and Suggestions on Profitable Bible Reading.

Price 1d. 7s. 6d. per 100.

"I don't think there is a book in the world we neglect so much as the Bible. Merely reading the Bible is no use at all without we study it thoroughly, and hunt it through as it were for some great truth. Read the Bible, my friends, as if you were seeking for something of value. It is a good deal better to take a single chapter and spend a month on it, than to read the Bible at random for a month." Extract.

CASES FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED PHTHISIS.

CASE of MR. JONES, TALYWAIN, PONTYPOOL.

The Editor of the "Christian Globe," referring to this case, says:—

"We communicated with a Mr. Arthur Jones, of Talywain Station, Pontypool, Mon., with reference to a letter of his, and he in every particular bears out the statements therein conveyed as to the benefit received by his brother after he placed himself under Mr. Congreve's charge. Mr. Jones's brother was attacked by Phthisis—and he was at death's door. He attributed his recovery entirely to Mr. Congreve's medicine and advice."

In his last Mr. A. Jones writes me as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—My brother is still enjoying good health and continuing his work. Your medicine has wrought a perfect cure for him. The other patient, George Prothers, is now looking well, and says he feels nothing the matter with him now."

CASE of a LITTLE GIRL at COCKENZIE near PRESTON PANS, N.B.

R. B. D. writing concerning a little girl says:—

"She was five years old when attacked with measles; inflammation of the lungs followed, which left her with severe cough and expectoration, to the deep anxiety of her parents. Through the kindness of Mr. Weatherburn, of Berwick-on-Tweed, advising us of your treatment, we have reason to thank God she is now quite well."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The work of this School and Mission has increased so much of late years that neither the premises nor the income are at all equal to the requirements. Many children are of necessity refused admittance to the School, owing to the want of room, and even for the present number of children, between 600 and 700, there is very insufficient accommodation. The income, little exceeding £300 per annum, is much too small to carry on the work with vigour.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

The prizes taken in 187 were 37; 1879, 48; 1880, 48; 1881, 53; 1882, 74; 1883, 83; 1884, 66.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL,
394, Hackney-road, E.

An Urgent Appeal on behalf of the unfortunate sons of Abraham. It is heartrending to see them in the lamentable state they are in. If any of the Lord's children would take a midnight's walk, they would meet many who are wandering through the streets of London the whole night, clothesless and shoeless, cold and hungry. You ask, Who are they? The answer is, Israelites, who, like the Blessed One, have nowhere to lay their heads. Friends, can you shut the bowels of compassion against them? We are besieged with these helpless brethren all the day long. What am I to do? Some have told me that for two days their first meal was that which they had on Friday, when we gave them the cup of tea and the bread. We only give the poor Jews tea and bread once a week. I wish I could give them a meal every day. I earnestly ask Christians to come and see the distressing sight. Our meetings for the Jews are Friday and Tuesday, at 8 p.m. We are also in great need of Bibles for our Sunday-school.—Yours in the Lord,

D. C. Joseph.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. Founded at Pentonville, 1807.—Owing to the loss by death of former friends and supporters, this successful and deserving charity is urgently in want of funds to meet pressing claims. Since the foundation nearly 6,000 fallen women have entered and benefited by the Institution. Annual subscribers are much needed. Contributions, however small, will be gratefully received by Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., Bankers, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or at the above Institution.—W. E. Page, Secretary.

TO THE FRIENDS OF SAILORS.—We have just opened a new Bethel at Gravesend, on which there is a small debt. We earnestly appeal to you for needlework, curiosities, books, or anything we can sell at the forthcoming bazaar. The smallest donation gratefully received by J. T. Chapman, The Bethel, Gravesend. Reports of work sent free. Sailors supplied with the Holy Scriptures free of cost.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION, Christian Association, and Homes for Men and Women Servants. Ladies and Gentlemen can be supplied with respectable Servants through the Registries, and Servants of good character may obtain comfortable lodgings and suitable situations. Office hours 10 to 4. Closed on Saturday. Women's Home removed from 186, Buckingham Palace-road to 162, Warwick-street, Ebury-bridge, S.W. Matron, Miss Freeman. Men's Home, 14, Sloane-terrace, Sloane-square, S.W. Superintendent, Mr. James Goodchild.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

Educational.

SEASIDE, Southport.—Superior School for Young Ladies. Conducted by a member of the Church of England (Evangelical), assisted by English and foreign governesses, and eminent visiting professors. Pupils prepared for Trinity College examinations.—Miss Poole, Eagley Bank, Southport. Referees, Rev. Canon Clarke, Southport, and Rev. John Burbidge, Everton-road, Liverpool.

HOLLAND HOUSE, Clarence-parade, Southsea.—School for the Daughters of Gentlemen. Special educational advantages, with home comforts and care. Indian charges received. References kindly permitted to the parents of present and former pupils. Prospectus on application to the Principal.

LONDON.—First-class Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate Professors—their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles.—Delta, Boddington's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. Fleming can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations which are optional. Resident foreign and English governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 guineas.

MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES, Larkbeare, Exeter, Devon (For Resident Pupils only). In association with, and under the same supervision, are Erdsleigh House, London, and Clarendon House, Topsham. Misses Bamber and Churton, with the Misses Pope, assisted by an efficient staff of certificated teachers and visiting professors, offer every educational advantage to parents seeking a high-class education, with Christian training, for their daughters. Numerous references to parents, clergymen, and ministers in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and abroad.

HASTINGS.—Wellington College for Ladies.—The object of the Council is to provide in this seaside healthy town an education of the best possible kind, based on Christian principles. An excellent gymnasium is attached, also Kindergarten.—For prospectus, apply to the Secretary, the Rev. F. Leaver, Chalvington Rectory, Sussex, or 4, Wellington-square, Hastings.

SWITZERLAND.—Rev. Ed. and Madame Descombaz receive a few young Ladies who have every educational advantage combined with a most comfortable home. Beautiful situation on the Lake of Geneva. French, German, music, painting, visiting professors. First-class references in England, France, Germany, and Switzerland.—Sadex près Nyon, Vaud.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The under-mentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. Thorn, Paddington, London.

MR. EDWIN ARROWSMITH, of The Children's Special Mission Services, strongly recommends any parents desiring the comforts and privileges of a kind Christian home, combined with the best education and training possible, for their daughters, to apply to D. C. L., care of Mr. Farley, Fitz-John's-parade, Hampstead, N.W. There will be one vacancy at Easter.

DOES MAGNETISM REALLY AND PERMANENTLY CURE?

Is a question repeatedly put to us, and without hesitation we give an affirmative reply. Indeed, we could not do otherwise, after the testimonials which so constantly come to hand in favour of the treatment, proving, beyond all doubt, as they do, the curative power of Magnetism.

Recently, we have deemed it advisable to substantiate many of the reports received from patients in times gone by, and the result of our inquiry has been singularly gratifying, and convincing in the extreme. The many years' experience that some have had assures them of the value of the remedy more firmly than ever.

Hence it is with unabated confidence that we answer "Yes" to both questions, and gladly append statements which cannot fail to encourage sufferers in the anticipation of decided help.

From the Rev. HY. S. SMITH, Fenny Stratford.

"Some time since you supplied an Appliance to a poor man in this town by my recommendation, who was suffering from sciatica, and he now says but for that he could not leave his room, and he dares not leave it off; but with it he can work almost without weariness, and can walk without pain, and can never feel thankful enough for it."

"February 24, 1885.

"I would most emphatically reiterate my former statement, anent your treatment, and if I knew how to make it plainer or stronger, I would.

"Last summer, owing to the excessive heat, the patient, about whom I wrote some time since, left off his Appliance entirely, and did not resume it in the cold weather. He caught cold, and about last Christmas-time was laid aside for some weeks with Rheumatism, when I strongly urged him to seek your further advice and help. He did so, and his recovery was most rapid, for within a week of receiving the belt back from you he was able to walk out, and in about fourteen days was at work, and still continues improving.

"You also supplied one to my wife when she was on what we all thought to be her dying-bed in the spring of 1883, but within a very short of wearing the appliances the change for the better was most marked, and she was soon restored to health, a wonder to all who had seen her during her severe illness. I think your Appliances invaluable."

Mr. BARTLEY ELLIS, care of Mr. Jas. Marsden, Wigan.

"November 21, 1882.

"You will be grateful to hear that my sister, for whom you prescribed some years since, and who has suffered from Epileptic attacks for 15 years, is quite well. The case was introduced to you by our medical man, who has acknowledged your success in treating such affections. For many years after wearing your Appliances my sister had no return of the fits, except on two occasions of extreme nervous excitement; once from a robbery, and once when the house took fire. This result is to us a great boon (for which we are most thankful), as in all human probability, but for the use of such a remedy, my sister would have been an Epileptic all her life; but is now, and has been for some time past, maintaining herself in a situation."

"February 28, 1885.

"My sister is still keeping well, and still able to earn her livelihood. There is not the slightest trace of the fits, and this remarkable change I attribute to the wearing of your Appliances. I have recommended Magnetism to many, and always do so with confidence in its curative power. I wish that thousands of suffering ones could only be induced to make a trial of it."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

Readings for each Day of the Month.

By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A., Incumbent of Christ Church, Pau.

This little book is intended to be personal, particular, and practical.

It starts from the fact that we are saved for service; and its suggestions are founded on the certainty that He who has saved us will help us to serve; and that the means of our obtaining this help is simply a living faith.

It offers to busy people one thought each day in connection with the service of our bodies, and gives two or three words of prayer as suggesting a particular petition.

The Christian.

THE WITNESS OF RUST.

James v. 3.

A CORRESPONDENT who informs the Editor of this paper that she has been greatly struck by the apparent excellence now of the clothing of village children, whose parents' wages are ordinarily from ten to twelve shillings per week, asks, "Has it not been forgotten that the extraordinary cheapness of common things as compared with what were the prices some years ago benefits the poor workers and their children?" and requests that the answer to her query may contain "argument and reason, and not run only on the lines of philanthropy and compassion."

We trust that most, if not all, of the readers of The Christian will consider, as we do, that lines of compassion are not unsuitable ones for those to follow who are endeavouring reverently to walk after the Master; and that, perhaps, if we had somewhat less of argument and reasoning, and more of the loving spirit of Jesus, we should be better able to deal practically with the crying social wrongs and evils of the time. It is somewhat difficult to keep in a calculating, reasoning frame of mind when we consider some of the painful questions which of late have been so prominently put forward, and as Christians we cannot help thinking how Christ, in all probability, would have dealt with them, what words of tender, divine pity He would have bestowed upon the sufferers, and what scathing terms He would have applied to those who sought speciously to defend unrighteous gain; for God and Mammon were the two poles of much of the teaching of Jesus.

We are not, however, prepared to say that competition is not, in certain cases, an advantage to the consumer; but to admit that it is, we must put on one side all questions as to the real cheapness of what a satirist has termed our "shoddy clothes, matchwood furniture, and cardboard boots." The question of cruel cheapness, however, is just one of those subjects which cannot be looked at from one side only, at least three classes of the community being immediately and directly concerned in it—the workman, the employer, and the purchaser or consumer; and as the interests of each are intimately related and dependent, anything which affects the consumer affects the other two.

If, therefore, the village labourer's children wear clothing of "apparent excellence," which of necessity must be of a cheap kind, as the labourer himself admittedly has but ten or twelve shilings per week, with which wages he has to feed, and clothe, and keep a roof over his family, some one must receive very little for producing the garments, and if that clothing is cheaper now than it was some years ago, when Charles Kingsley wrote words respecting the poor needlewomen which, out of very pity for our tender-hearted readers, we cannot reproduce here, it simply means that the workman—or, what is more likely, the workwoman—is now receiving less than was paid then; and that the articles come from the large city where not only the employer but a couple of middlemen, sweaters, also have made a profit upon them.

On no less an authority than that of the gifted author of "The Earthly Paradise," it has recently been asserted that large firms in Whitechapel give out coats to be made at sixpence each, and vests at threepence, and these low rates are paid to "sweaters" who let out the work at still lower rates, and leave the workmen and workwomen to find their own thread; and that for making a policeman's overcoat, which occupies about four days of sixteen hours, the sum of two shillings and sixpence is paid. For shirtmaking the rates are even lower, tenpence being the remuneration for making a dozen. These shirts may be of "apparent excellence," but, as poor Tom Hood sang—

> "It is not linen you're wearing out,
> But human creatures' lives."

And if the labourer and the labourer's children are going about decked in the sweater's finery, they are—fortunately for themselves unconsciously—wearing a piece of the starved workwoman's shroud.

There is perhaps not a single evil upon which some individuals or some class do not batten and thrive, but it is none the less an evil, and as the water brought from the well of Bethlehem at the jeopardy of human lives seemed to thirsting David blood of men, much of our wealth, golden in human sight, may be crimson in the eyes of the angels.

That women and children are starving and sinking into degradation and vice in order that the wearers of cheap clothing may be numbered by thousands, and that middlemen may grow rich, shows only too clearly that the Christianity of Christ has been widely departed from, and the sooner we get back to the old-fashioned eternal principles we have left behind, the better will it be for us individually and collectively.

More of us than we care to think are "selling the poor for a pair of shoes," and this question of cheapness has so many side-issues and ramifications that perhaps but few people are guiltless in the matter. It therefore becomes us to face the subject manfully, and in the light of God's Word and Christ's life to endeavour to discover what we ought to do with regard to the matter. Considering the state of things in any of our large cities at a time when one of our greatest and noblest thinkers and most practical Christians has said, "luxury at present can only be enjoyed by the ignorant; the cruellest man living could not sit at his feast unless he sat blindfold;" which of us shall venture to look up to heaven and say, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

NESCIENCE v. SCIENCE.

IN this third lecture at Devonshire House, Dr. Sinclair Paterson went on to deal with the "present issues" of Faith and Unfaith, the special subject being the Agnostic Philosophy. Agnostics, he said, not only profess their own ignorance, but they proclaim that of others. He would be content to allow them to boast of their own know-nothingness, but he was not prepared to be charged by them with the same ignorance. It is impossible, they tell us, by any effort of the human mind, or through any discoveries of the Divine Being, to gain any reliable knowledge concerning Him. He sharply contended, on the other hand, that man is so constituted that he feels after God, if haply he may find Him. God has also been pleased to reveal Himself to man in the person of his Son, who was the express image of the Father translated into humanity. The writers of the Scriptures speak on this point with the utmost certainty, "We know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true." "I know whom I have believed," &c.

Dr. Paterson traced the history of the agnostic philosophy from Kant downwards. The contention is that we do not and cannot know "things," but only "relations." We say a book has substance, extension, shape, and colour, but the agnostic argues that these are only relations, and not the thing itself, which is apart from them. Dr. Paterson maintained, on the other hand, that such argument is mere word jugglery; if these properties are taken away, there is nothing left. Reference was made to the writings of Mr. Herbert Spencer. He asserts in his "First Principles" that not only God, but matter and force are unknowable yet he proceeds, in many large volumes, to take cognizance of, to discuss, and elucidate these very things about which he laid it down as an axiom that we can know nothing. In one of his most recent utterances in the Nineteenth Century he has advanced so far as to admit that "we stand in the presence of an infinite and eternal energy, which is the cause of all things that exist." If he will only add to these attributes those of intelligence and will, his definition of the "cause of all things" may be gladly accepted by the most orthodox believer. His doctrine of the "persistence of force" must, if intelligently and logically held, resolve itself into the law of God, which, though regular in its action, may yet be mutable, at the will of Him who set it in motion.

Our quarrel with the opponents of Christianity is that they refuse to examine the historical facts on which it is based. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is the corner-stone of the Christian system, and it has as ample proof as any other accepted historical event. Yet we do not find in the writings of Mr. Herbert Spencer the slightest intimation that he has ever heard of the Resurrection. Agnostics decry what they call a "traditional" faith, while they themselves hold views which are mainly derived from traditions, though not so venerable as those of the Christian religion. Another accusation the lecturer brought against agnostics was that when their theories are exploded, as they have been, they ignore the refutation and repeat the statements as if they were a fresh discovery. The teaching of Comte, the founder of Positivism, or "the worship of humanity," was analysed and shown to be at root a system of self-worship, and altogether inadequate to meet the spiritual needs of sinful men. The sum of the whole matter was this: though man cannot by any unaided searching of his own find out God, yet it has pleased God to make Himself known to man, as One who has made the fullest provision in the gift of Jesus Christ for all the present needs and future aspirations of the race.

JUDAIZING THE NEW TESTAMENT.

HAVING a warm regard for the writer as a personal friend and a brother beloved, and also great respect for him as a spiritual man and an able expositor of Scripture, we read with regret the following view of the Epistle to the Hebrews in a prophetic periodical recently commenced:—

> "In chapter ii. 5, it is definitely stated that the Epistle is about the 'habitable world in its future condition.' Like all the Word of God, it is about Christ, but it is about Him specially as God's High Priestly King for Israel, blessing the nation and the earth during the Age to Come, 'the times of the restitution of all things, which (times) were spoken of by the mouth of the holy prophets since the world began.' We shall thus find this Epistle connected closely with all Old Testament prophecy in a way in which no purely Church epistle is, our existence and special place in 'the Christ' never having been foretold.
> "It may be asked, however, how it is that since the Epistle is neither written to the Church nor about the Church, we should be able clearly to see its import and enjoy its truths? The answer is, 'All things are ours.' We, as the Bride of Christ, have the joy of entering beforehand, along with Christ Himself, into the knowledge of all this. Very soon, as we know from other Scripture, He shall call us hence, and shall, when we meet Him in the air, 'present us to Himself in glory' (Eph. v.). Then the whole heavenly company having been gathered, and the full body of resurrection glory completed, our blessed Lord shall take up in Melchisedec priesthood Israel's case, as in Rev. v."

It is going far beyond a safe exegesis to expound "the world to come whereof we speak" as meaning that the whole Epistle is "about the habitable world in its future condition." It certainly has not so been generally understood, and very unquestionable proof would be necessary to substantiate this view.

Is it really the case that this Epistle "is not directly addressed to the Church, and that the theme of it is neither the Church nor Christ's connection with the Church"? Is our part in it only the joy of entering beforehand, along with Christ Himself, into the knowledge of all this"? "Seeing, then, that we have a great High Priest," is not this directly and inalienably mine? Is not the "so great a salvation" mine? Is not the rest in believing and in ceasing from my own works mine? Is not the intercessory efficacy to uttermost salvation of the untransferable priesthood mine? Is not the right to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus mine? Yes; "we as the bride of Christ have the joy of entering beforehand, along with Christ Himself, into the knowledge of all this"—that is, of all this blessing to the Jew "in the habitable world in its future condition."* Ah, me! but I, living and tempted in this inhabited world, in its present condition, want a personal experience and possession of my sympathising Priest, and not merely a knowledge that He will be the high-priestly King of Israel, when I have been called hence to meet Him in the air, and to be with Him in his glory.

The Epistle to the Hebrews was confessedly written to Jews who had believed in the Lord Jesus, and who were under strong temptation to revert to their old ritual. But a converted Jew is a Christian. He is a member of the Church of Christ, in which there is neither Jew nor Gentile, but all are one in Christ Jesus. Therefore, all inspired Epistles to believers in the crucified and risen Lord Jesus are written to the Church—some with relation to some special condition, others giving instruction of a more general character; but all essential to the edifying of the saints, and none more necessary than the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Having submitted these remarks to the writer, asking if we have misrepresented his views, he replies that we have: that he claims for the Church, and for himself as an individual believer, the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, and regards every sentence of it as necessary to his Christian life and growth. But that at least many parts of Scripture have a twofold meaning and application—the one what may be called the ordinary, the other the prophetic or dispensational; and that in these papers he is dealing with the Epistle to the Hebrews in its prophetic or dispensational aspect, and in that alone. While, therefore, he rejoices in its ordinary application to all believers, he maintains that, dispensationally, it does not apply to the Church, but to the Jewish nation, and is sure that all students of prophecy will know what he means.

Now, to some small extent, at least, we claim to be students of prophecy, though not the adherents of any school; but we confess that we do not understand our brother's double method; that we do not think any such distinction is taught in the Epistle itself; and that we are unable to reconcile the explanation above given with the printed article. For example: In the article it is said that "the Epistle is about the habitable world in its future condition;" about "God's High-Priestly King for Israel . . . . during the age to come;" and that "the Epistle is neither written to the Church nor about the Church." But in his letter to us our friend admits the "ordinary meaning and application," which assuredly regards this Epistle as addressed to the Church of this dispensation, and the Lord Jesus as our Great High Priest; and he claims "every sentence of it as necessary to his Christian life and growth."

The magazine in which these articles are appearing is said to be for exposition, not controversy. Its articles therefore are ex cathedrâ, and are intended to be regarded by its readers as authoritative and final utterances. But as some fellow prophetic students of its Editor are as much puzzled by these views as ourselves, we shall be much obliged by some well-attested Scriptural proof of their soundness; and all the more because in this very epistle the Holy Spirit warns us, "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing for the heart to be established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein" (xiii. 9).

A well-known student of prophecy writes us: "I think it is a very lame reply to your most timely strictures on a most mischievous mode of in- or rather misin-terpreting Scripture, which has become very fashionable of late with a certain school." The reason we feel constrained to issue these remarks is that we believe this Judaising of New Testament Scripture to be at once mischievous and on the increase in certain directions. We repeat that we have the highest esteem and regard for the writer, and we thus enter our protest against these views, "not that we love him less, but that we love the truth more."

We cannot help expressing the hope that the evident unscripturalness of Judaising the Epistle to the Hebrews—an epistle written to holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling (compare Eph. i. 18, ii. 7, and Col. iii. 1—3)—will lead other dear brethren, who shrink from this, to reconsider their Judaistic interpretation of the Apocalypse. All go together—Matthew, Hebrews, James, Peter, Jude, Revelation—if one is Jewish all are Jewish: and if these are Jewish, then inasmuch as the very same truths are taught in the other books, all of them are Jewish also.

* A friend refers to the promised return of Christ (x. 35—38) as proof that the Epistle deals with the present, not with the future; and well remarks that the contradiction of sinners against Himself, and the exhortation to go forth unto Him without the camp bearing his reproach (xii. 3; xiii. 13), will not be characteristic of the future age, though they certainly are of the present one.

RAGGED SCHOOLS IN LEICESTER.

THIS work received an impetus by the recent opening of additional commodious premises erected at the junction of Bedford-street and George-street. Mr. T. Howard Lloyd occupied the chair. A letter from the Earl of Shaftesbury was read, in which his Lordship accepted the office of President of the mission, and expressed his intention at an early date of personally visiting the place.

The Chairman gave some details of the origin and progress of the mission. During the twenty years that had elapsed since its humble origin, it had experienced many trying vicissitudes, but had outlived them all. After four years of prayer and effort they had succeeded in purchasing the present block of buildings, which, after an outlay in all of £3000, formed a splendid institution in which to carry on the work. They had now a large mission hall for adult meetings, a girls' and boys' school and class-rooms, soup-kitchen, caretaker's cottage, &c.. The constitution of the mission was purely unsectarian, the workers representing many branches of the Christian Church, and all working together in hearty, loving sympathy. There remained a debt of about £1600 on the buildings, which he hoped would soon be cleared off.

Among those who took part in the afternoon meeting were Revs. A. A. Isaacs, F. B. Meyer, J. Gair, J. C. Forth, and A. Lamb; Aldermen Stevenson and Chambers, and Mr. Geo. Holland. About 300 were entertained at tea in the new hall.

In the evening, Mr. Geo. Holland, of George-yard, London, and Miss Annie Macpherson, of the Spitalfields Home of Industry, gave addresses. The hall was crowded in every part, and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Mr. Holland expressed his deep gratification at the way in which the Lord had blessed them since his last visit. After a deeply interesting recital of incidents connected with his work in London, he appealed to the people of Leicester to strengthen the hands of the teachers by helping to pay off the debt.

Miss Macpherson rejoiced to see such evidences of healthy spiritual life. After recounting some touching incidents in connection with her own labours amongst the neglected children of London, she pleaded for help for the Leicester Ragged-school Mission, on account of the grand and noble work that was being done for the Lord.

MISS ANNA BOOBBYER has published a little book entitled "Our Sailors and how to help them." Those who are desirous of knowing "an easy way of doing good" may here get much helpful information. It contains a history of the work from its commencement, the general plan of operations, and a list of stations where books and bags will be thankfully received. The book is sold at twopence, for the benefit of the mission, and may be obtained of the author, at Dulwich House, North Malvern, Worcestershire. She says, "Bibles, books, and bags are required by thousands."

ENTERTAINMENT TO THE POOR.—Dr. and Mrs. Griffith, who have for many years past evinced a warm interest in the poor in different parts of London, gave their annual tea and entertainment to one hundred mothers connected with St. Stephen, Coleman-street, at the Albion Hall, London-wall, on Tuesday week. These annual entertainments are the culmination of a series of bi-weekly meetings, and also many visitings and other kind attentions. A very pleasant and profitable evening was spent. On Friday evening a similar tea and entertainment was given to about 150 more mothers, at the Allen-street School-rooms, Goswell-road, and several addresses of a religious and Temperance character were delivered.—City Press.

DR. SAPHIR ON PERFECTION.

LAST Sunday morning, at his church in West Halkin-street, Belgrave-square, Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR preached a remarkable discourse on "Perfection: what it is, and what it is not." It came in the ordinary course of his weekly expositions of the Epistle to the Phillipians. The passage commented on in this discourse was chap. iii. 12—21. The sermon was a lengthy and exhaustive one (as this able preacher's sermons usually are), and would fill many columns of THE CHRISTIAN. In our present issue we can only give a short portion of it, reserving some further extracts. The complete discourse will most probably be issued in pamphlet form by Dr. Saphir's publishers.

After dwelling on the portrait of himself given by Paul in the previous part of the chapter—how he had been clothed with the righteousness of Jesus Christ for justification—the preacher said the Apostle was anxious that the Phillipians should not have a wrong impression of him. They might think that he experienced nothing but joy and victory and triumph: that he did not feel the painful burden of his own sinfulness and failure. He, therefore, assures them that although Christ was his perfect righteousness, he had not already attained, neither was he already perfected. It could only produce a pernicious effect on them that they should have a false impression of Christian perfection, as being a course of unmingled joy and ceaseless victory. Dr. Saphir continued:—

In considering this subject it is extremely necessary for us to remember what we receive from God when first we are brought to Christ. Many people talk about the perfection into which we are to grow during our life here upon earth, who yet forget the perfection which is given to us when we are converted by the power of God's Spirit. In the Epistles which we have in the New Testament there is never any second start for sanctification mentioned. The whole of the Christian faith is traced back to its source, when first we repent and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. There is then first given to the believing sinner the complete forgiveness of his sins past, present, and future. They are forgiven and forgotten; they shall not be brought into remembrance or judgment any more. Not only so, but righteousness, perfect, divine, and glorious is imputed unto him who believes in Jesus Who died for the ungodly. The forgiven and justified one is therefore the object of God's delight, even as Jesus Himself is. In Jesus we stand before God, and although our communion is interrupted, our standing before God is never interrupted. Although the believer has constantly to confess his sins—although repentance and faith are always repeated, justification is never repeated. When the prodigal was yet a far way off the father saw him, and the father received his confession. When we have once been clothed with the white robe it is not a far way off that we stand confessing our sins; but inside the Father's house. When the backslider who is full of sorrow, and also of trouble and fear, comes again unto the Lord Jesus Christ, he comes to the throne of grace where Jesus is the advocate—not before the Judge, but before the Father. Under the old covenant, the sacrifices had to be repeated continually; the day of atonement came round every year; the forgiveness of sins was given, as it were, only in instalments. Not so is it now. Being justified by faith, we always stand before God in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord.

There are many who do not see this truth—many who have received the Lord Jesus Christ, we trust, in sincerity, but are yet kept in bondage, and who view their position altogether from the Old Testament standpoint. When, after weeks or months, their sins have accumulated, and they are roused by the Spirit of God to see their condition, they come to God and to Christ, as though they had never come unto God before, seeking to be justified, and hoping that with this new acceptance they will go on through the next weeks and months doing better than they have done, half trusting in Jesus and half trusting in the amendment which they promise, and which they sincerely purpose. They received, as it were, a new instalment of forgiveness. After a few months they are still less satisfied with themselves than before, and there is another approach to Jesus Christ. So they go on from year to year, never understanding the blessed truth that Jesus is our righteousness, even while we forget and forsake Him. It is unto a loving Father, and an all-sufficient Redeemer, that we, with all our sins and backslidings, have continually to come, and we confess our sins in the light of God, because the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.

But along with this gift of righteousness there is another perfect work, and another perfect gift, and it is because this has so often been neglected, that attempts are afterwards made in an unscriptural manner to supplement what is already complete at the time. When we are first brought to God not merely is perfect righteousness given, but perfect renewal. He who forgives our sins renews our hearts. There never is genuine conversion unless there be sorrow for sin, trust in the mercy of God and a resolute turning away from sin unto the service of the living God. There can be no forgiveness without the renewal of the heart. There can be no acceptance of the sinner without a fulfilment of the new covenant, that with the blood of Christ there is given unto us also the Spirit of God. Therefore it is that if any man be in Christ he is a new creature. When is a man in Christ? The moment he believes in Jesus. Therefore he is made a new creature the moment he is justified. "Old things have passed away; all things have become new; and all things are of God."

How does Jesus bless us? By turning away everyone of us from our iniquities. This renewal is radical. Here is the great difference between conversion and improvement. It is not merely that a new motive or a new direction has been given to us; the heart has been changed. As the renewal is radical, so it is also complete. The man who is brought to Christ hates all and every sin. He delights himself in all the commandments of God. No compromise is made with God at the time of conversion. Suppose a man has been addicted to gross sin—say, he has been a thief. He is converted. Can you imagine him saying, "I believe in Jesus; therefore in future I do not intend to steal so often, or to steal so much"? Nay, is it not that he turns away from every sin, and not merely from gross sins?

Now, remember this righteousness and renewal come from the same source. There is no start for the one which is different from the other. Therefore, you never find in any of the Epistles that Christians are exhorted, after having believed in Jesus for justification, to make a new start for sanctification. They are always exhorted to cleave unto the grace of God in Christ Jesus, to hold fast the beginning of their confidence even unto the end, to remember they were baptized unto the death of Christ, and are also risen with Him. Ephesus became luke-warm, but Ephesus is not exhorted to make a new start; it is rebuked for having left its first love; it is exhorted to repent, and do the first works. There are many restorations in the experience of the believer, but only one source and starting point.

Dr. Saphir next dealt with the teaching of the Epistles as to "the old man;" some notes of his remarks on this point we must defer.

FRENCH PASTORAL RELIEF FUND.—The committee have been able to vote grants to sixteen pastors during the past year. The hon. secretary, Mr. J. Pollard, of Highdown, Hitchin, Herts, pleads fervently for continued aid. In the annual report brief extracts from letters received by the committee from some of the grateful recipients are touching in the extreme. The next distribution will take place during this month. These servants of the Lord are carrying on the work of evangelisation in France amid many difficulties; scarcely any of them have a salary beyond 1800 francs (£72) per annum.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—The past months have brought much blessing from the Lord, both in town and country. Many have been turned to the Lord through the Gospel, specially among our villages. In some places the village has been stirred from end to end; night after night the most hopeless characters have listened to the message of salvation, and have in many cases received it.

When the daily preachings are followed up by personal visiting from house to house, the work is deepened. One man said, in reply to a question as to his state of soul: "I be all confused, like; I don't seem to understand what a poor man can do to be saved. I've been a rough fellow all my life, nearly. I have been a hard drinker, and have done things when the worse for drink that I've been ashamed of afterwards. So I put on the blue ribbon, and gave up the drink; but that did not change my heart. I be just the same with all my trying." "Yes," I replied, "the axe must be laid at the root of the tree. It may be that God has been teaching you the utter hopelessness of mere human doings. God is the Giver of life, and this life is in his Son Jesus Christ. When sinners receive the Son of God as their personal Saviour, they have life. But this life is brought to us in the Scriptures." I sought to bring before him such passages as John i. 12, iii. 14—16, v. 24, vi. 38—40. The Lord was pleased to open his eyes, and he was able to say, "God has taken me in hand, and done the work, bless his name."

In another village where there has been much blessing, many who have received the word have spread it among their friends, and it has produced contrary effects. In some cases the house has been divided. The hatred to the truth has been manifested, as it has shown the power of the Word in separating converts from former habits and companions. In other cases it has been a power for blessing to all the family. There are often to be found in the villages a simplicity and a readiness to receive the Gospel which are not to be found in the larger centres.

We have recently visited many places, and personally visited the homes of the poor. There is much distress, not through drunkenness, but from low wages, large families, and no room. Farmers cannot employ labourers, consequently the people have to remove to the towns. In one small hamlet I found a poor woman heartbroken over the scattering of her family. She had five sons in the army, two of them now at Suakim. Another mother had two sons in the army, and others were about to enlist from the same place. The wages are scarcely enough to keep life in their bodies. "What wages," I asked a poor woman, "does your husband earn?" "Nine shillings a week," she said, "when he can work all the week." There were nine persons to live out of this, and rent to be paid besides. I found another family of ten, mother, father, and eight children, where the man could earn ten shillings when able to work; but he often lost weeks together from sickness. This is about the average for farm-labour in many parts around us.

So the "Bitter Cry" is heard in all parts of the country. Yet there is quiet endurance, and a hoping for better things to come. "'Tis hard to bear," said a poor man and his godly wife, a few days since; "but 'tis only for a little while. We have never been without bread and water, as the Lord promised; and we never shall, because He is faithful." And their faces were lit up with joy, as they looked forward to the hope which maketh not ashamed.

We have much to encourage in all parts of our Mission, amidst all the trials which are consequent on times of distress. We should know well what to do with a little help for many distressed families both in clothing and food if the Lord is pleased to send it through his servants.

Yours faithfully in the Gospel,
GEO. BREALEY.

THE GOSPEL OF LUKE.

IN view of our Notes on Daily Readings this week (p. 19) commencing the Gospel of Luke, the following introductory remarks on the distinctive character of that book will be helpful to our readers.

Referring to the cherubic symbol as suggestive of the Evangelistic records, Mr. Jukes writes: "'The third living creature had a face as a man;' agreeable to which the third Gospel sets forth the Lord as Son of Adam or Son of Man. St. Luke throughout writes very broadly and plainly the memoir of the Son of Man, showing the Lord as very man, and therefore linked, not only to a certain kingdom, but to all the sons of Adam. Here is a man according to God, the pattern man, in and through whom man is blessed and God glorified; seen, not only in moral perfectness, but in all the sufferings and honours which, according to God's purpose, are the heritage of the sons of men; first humbled into the dust of death, then exalted to God's right hand, his image and likeness, to rule as Lord of all. For man had been God's image, set by Him to rule the creature; and though this image had failed in the first Adam, it was to be renewed with greater blessings in 'the Second Man, the Lord from heaven.'"

"This is the picture drawn by St. Luke. And as in St. Matthew, the Gospel of the Kingdom, we had the professing children of the Kingdom, and their zeal for God, though not according to knowledge,—their washings of the outside of the cup, their tithing mint and cummin, their compassing sea and land to make one proselyte, —set very brightly in contrast with the true Heir, and his kingdom of righteousness, and joy, and peace in the Holy Ghost; so here, in the Gospel of the Son of Man, as the pattern Man walks before us, we have men as they are, set side by side in strong and marked contrast with man as he should be, the Man Christ Jesus."

The humanity of Christ is strikingly emphasised in the second chapter, where we have records of the taxing of "the whole world," and so of his parents; the infancy, the childhood, how the child grew, and the grace of God was upon Him; how He went up to Jerusalem when He was twelve years old, and how He tarried behind, and his parents sought Him sorrowing; how He increased in wisdom and stature; of which facts the same author says: "These, and points like these, as they are peculiar to this Gospel, distinctly mark our Lord as man, personally entering man's lot, and Himself fully tasting it; joining Himself to us in birth, in childhood, and in youth, that, being very man, He might, in his own blessed Person, bring man near to God."

Special regard should be had to the sacerdotal character of this Gospel, Christ the Priest being as clearly pointed out as Christ the Man. Hence, as Prof. Williams says, "It begins with the Priest, dwelling on the priestly family of the Baptist; and ends with the Victim, in our Lord's death. Instead of the wise men with their royal gifts, we have Zacharias the priest standing at the altar of incense; in this Gospel alone we have the three hymns of the Church, the character of which is sacerdotal. Here we have the events occurring in the Temple, Simeon and Anna dwelling there. Here the Circumcision, and the Purification, and Presentation. In the last chapter, instead of the authoritative injunctions at the close of St. Matthew, our Lord is walking with two disciples, expounding the Scriptures respecting his own sufferings, and making Himself known to them in 'the breaking of bread;' while our last view of Him here is 'lifting up his hands' as the priests of old, and blessing them, and while in that act parted from them, and they in the last chapter are 'continually in the Temple, praising and blessing God.'"

Another point of special significance in this Gospel is its distinctively Gentile character. Luke himself appears to have been a Gentile; Theophilus, to whom the Evangelist addresses his records in verses 1-4, also a Gentile. This is the more noteworthy because of Luke's undoubted companionship with Paul, the great "Apostle of the Gentiles." The Fathers of the early Church held the expression "my Gospel," used three times by Paul, to refer to this particular evangel (though we think it referred to that which he himself preached). Certain it is that in the parables and incidents peculiar to this book, as well as in its general structure and scope, we have wide and universal aspects of our Lord's life and character, such as find their fitting analogue in the worldwide mission of Paul as breaking down the barrier between the Jewish and the Gentile Church. Not as the son of Abraham, but as the son of Adam, is Christ here set forth, and herein is shown with graphic clearness the love of God in Him, not only to the elder brother, but to the prodigal son.

Some demur to accepting the idea of Divine purpose in the diversities which thus mark the Gospel records. Such may profitably consider the remarks of Professor Isaac Williams, who says: "As in nature the more closely any subject is investigated, the further is there seen to extend order, and variety, and distinctness of purpose, so may we suppose the same to exist in no less degree in the words of God in revelation; and that industry and attention, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, may be able to trace them even beyond what is usually supposed. The distinct classification under which flowers are found to range themselves is quite beyond the thoughts of any but a botanist. . . . Nor does there seem any reason why a reverent and humble study of Scripture may not discover systems as great and perfect in the written word, and the revelations it affords us, as the research and pursuits of later ages have done in the material universe."

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

AT the invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, a large company assembled at the Mansion House, on Friday evening, on behalf of the London City Mission. The chief magistrate expressed his heartiest goodwill with the object of the meeting. When viewing the terrible distress and crime at our very doors he had often thought that some of those who go to China and elsewhere would do well to remember the Saviour's command, to "begin at Jerusalem." He appealed for very much more help, so that the operations of the Society might be extended.

Mr. F. A. Bevan said that more than a hundred additional missionaries could be set to work at once if a sufficient annual income were secured. Rev. Dr. Stoughton moved a resolution, setting forth that the Mission had a special claim on the wealthy inhabitants of the City and its suburbs. He could not imagine anything more fitted to stir one's deepest feelings than the present condition of those to whom this Society carries the Gospel. Sir Joseph Bazalgette, whom the Mayor introduced as the Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Good Works, read part of a letter he had received from a working-man, saying, "If these missionaries would come among us more, we chaps would get on better, and there would not be any strikes." He was quite sure they were having a most salutary effect on the people. He would rather take a missionary with him for protection in some parts of London than a policeman.

Mr. Samuel Morley urged strongly the increase of the staff of missionaries. Rev. Burman Cassin said he felt there was no agency in London so truly valuable as the City missionaries. Mr. Walter Ellis and Rev. P. B. Power also addressed the meeting.

THE PLYMOUTH LADIES' ASSOCIATION for supplying bags containing Bibles, books, tracts, &c., to the crews of merchant and emigrant vessels coming into this port, have published a report for 1884. Nearly 1000 bags were distributed during the year. The missionary who distributes them gives some interesting details of the work, remarking on the readiness of the sailors to listen to the words of counsel and prayer with which he accompanies the gifts.

"WITH ME."

"And He cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?"—MATT. xxvi. 40.

THE shadows lay so deep on Olivet,
  And silent midnight was on all the land,
One Watcher only in the darkness craved
  A thought of love, a touch from human hand.

He came at last to seek it, but in vain,
  And sadly through the darkness went away:
One tender word, one look of love, that night
  Had been how sweet to Jesus none may say.

But once again He comes, and comes to thee,
  His busy worker in the harvest-field:
"Canst thou not watch with Me one silent hour?
  I crave far more than busy hands can yield.

'I want the fervent love that tells itself
  In deep sweet breathings of a heart at rest
Beneath the shadow of Eternal wings,
  Like the belov'd disciple on my breast."

Then in the silence let Him speak to thee,
  And in the reverent hush look up and tell
The love that He hath kindled in thine heart,
  And seek in that blest presence thus to dwell.

Yea, "tell it out,"—unto thy Father tell
  The preciousness of Christ to thine own heart,
Then wait, and listen till He speaks again:
  Thou hast in wondrous fellowship a part.

And He hath need of thee, thy love is dear—
  Thine uttered love—told waiting at his feet;
And hurry not to service till prepared
  By quiet waiting in his presence sweet.

EAST-END DISTRESS.

WE have received the following from Lady Dent:—

As a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN for years, I should feel very grateful if you would insert this appeal for assistance to mitigate in some measure the woeful distress in the East-end.

If only every reader of your widely-circulated paper would send me a postal order for one shilling (enclosing addressed post-card if they wish for acknowledgment), I would undertake to have it distributed in kind or money by a gentleman who visits there, to some of the most deserving and distressing cases, without any danger of pauperisation.

I give three or four specimen cases out of thirty visited yesterday:—

A girl, just recovering from rheumatic fever, supports herself and father (aged seventy, with bronchitis and asthma) by match-making, at which she earns 6$\frac{3}{4}$d. in a day of fourteen hours.

Widow, three children, youngest eight months, makes shirts at 4d. a dozen.

Widow, seven children, eldest nine, which prevents regular work.

Old woman, 95, bronchitis and asthma, alone in the world; 2s. 6d. a week and one loaf from parish; rent, 1s. 6d.; coals, 6d.; lives on 6d.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—At a meeting of this society last week a paper, entitled "Was Primeval Man a Savage?" was read by Mr. J. Hassell, in which he referred to Dr. Darwin's description of the habits and mode of life of man in primeval times, when Dr. Darwin considered him to have been a savage. The author, however, disputed that this was man's first condition, and urged that there was a total absence of historical evidence to show that uncivilised men, left to themselves, had ever risen out of a savage state. No nation had ever been known to civilise itself. On the contrary, whole systems of civilisation, left to themselves, had been lost, and had perished, and races had relapsed into barbarism. The author referred to the investigations on this point by Dr. Wallace and others. The conclusions of Professor Max Muller were also referred to. He, agreeing with the Duke of Argyll, considered that the present savages are degraded races, and not specimens of primitive man. Their languages show signs of this, and give evidence of their having fallen from a higher and nobler condition.

NOTES ON THE
SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MARCH 12.—MATTHEW XXI. 33–46.

v. 42.—"This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."—2 Chron. xxxvi. 14-16 explains the former part of the parable in this portion, while the treatment Christ received at the hands of the Jewish nation answers to the latter part, their punishment being also foreshown in ver. 41. Then Christ is compared to a stone, as in Psalm cxviii. 22, here quoted; also in Isa. xxviii. 16, Eph. ii. 20, 1 Peter ii. 4, 5. Though rejected by the Jews, God has exalted Him, and made Him to be a sure foundation, and also a beautiful corner-stone, knitting together all who rest upon Him and trust in Him. But in the Psalm you will see that the Jews are the builders, and that while Christ is the precious stone of his Church to-day, the time is coming when the Jews, who now reject Him, will also glory in Him, and make these very words their song. Do not forget to pray for the Jews, that God may soon work this wondrous change; and be sure all to build on Christ yourselves.

MARCH 13.—MATTHEW XXII. 1–14.

v. 12.—"Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment?"—The Gospel of Christ is here compared to a feast provided by God, and it is, as Isaiah says (ch. xxv. 6.), "a feast of fat things, a feast of wine on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wine on the lees well refined." But there are many called to it who will not come; they despise God's provision, and care nothing for his grace and love. Some profess to accept his invitation and come to the feast, but they do not come aright. So we read of one here who went without a robe such as the King required all his guests to wear. This was all the more sinful because He had provided one for each guest, and this man had rejected it. What was this robe? Isaiah lxi. 10 answers the question; read it, and also Luke xv. 22. If you go to the Father as the prodigal did, you will also be welcomed, and then you can sing—

"And lest the shadow of a spot
Should on my soul be found,
He took the robe the Saviour wrought,
And cast it all around.
How far the heavenly robe exceeds
What earthly princes wear;
These ornaments, how bright they shine,
How white these garments are."

MARCH 14.—MATTHEW XXII. 15–33.

v. 29.—"Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures."—Learn to-day that Jesus Christ would have you make the Word of God your constant guide. He once said "Search the Scriptures," and if you wish to be "wise unto salvation," this is the way to become so. It was good advice Mr. R. Murray McCheyne once gave to a little boy, "You read your Bible regularly, of course; but do try and understand it, and still more to feel it. Read more parts than one at a time. For example, if you are reading Genesis, read a Psalm also; or if you are reading Matthew, read a small bit of an Epistle also. Turn the Bible into prayer. Thus, if you were reading the first Psalm, spread the Bible on the chair before you, and kneel, and pray, 'O Lord, give me the blessedness of the man,' &c. 'Let me not stand in the counsel of the ungodly,' &c. This is the best way of knowing the meaning of the Bible, and of learning to pray."

MARCH 15.—MATTHEW XXII. 34–46.

v. 39.—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."—In Luke x. 27—37, our Lord teaches us that anyone who comes in our way needing our help is to be regarded as our "neighbour." Though a stranger, or even an enemy, he is to be loved. Dr. Stanford in one of his works tells a story of a slave who had by the force of his sterling worth risen high in the confidence of his master, and who saw one day trembling in the slave market a negro, whose grey head and bent form showed him to be in the last weakness of old age. He implored his master to purchase him. He expressed his surprise, but gave his consent. The old man was bought and conveyed to the estate. When there he who had pleaded for him took him to his own cabin, placed him in his own bed, fed him at his own board, gave him water from his own cup; when he shivered, carried him into the sunshine; when he drooped in the sunshine carried him gently into the shade. "What is the meaning of all this?" asked a witness. "Is he your father?" "No." "Is he your brother or your friend?" "No; he is my enemy. Years ago he stole me from my native village, and sold me for a slave; but the good Lord has said, 'If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink.'" This was loving his neighbour as himself.

MARCH 16.—MATTHEW XXIII. 1–15.

v. 12.—"He that shall humble himself shall be exalted."

"The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest:
In lark and nightingale we see
What honour hath humility.

When Mary chose the 'better part,'
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet;
And Lydia's gently opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet;
Fairest and best adorned is she
Whose clothing is humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
The most when most his soul ascends.
Nearest the throne itself must be The footstool of humility."

—Montgomery.

MARCH 17.—MATTHEW XXIII. 16–28.

v. 28.—"Ye also outwardly appear righteous."—Among the many things Bunyan tells us Christiana and her children saw in Mr. Interpreter's house, was one which well illustrates these words. He took them into his garden and showed them a tree, whose inside was all rotten and gone, and yet it grew and had leaves. Then said Mercy, "What means this?" "This tree," said he, "whose outside is fair, and whose inside is rotten, it is to which many may be compared that are in the Garden of God; who with their mouths speak high in behalf of God, but indeed will do nothing for Him; whose leaves are fair, but their heart good for nothing but to be tinder for the devil's tinder-box." Let us remember that "the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

MARCH 18.—MATTHEW XXIII. 29–39.

v. 37.—"How often would I have gathered thee . . . ."—Exquisitely tender words! How complete is the well-being of the helpless brood under the mother's wing; they have warmth, comfort, rest, protection; and the hen, at other times so timid, will dare anything for its young "He shall cover thee with his feathers" (Ps. xci. 4). What may we find there? Why do we so often wander from Him? This verse contains Gospel truth enough for the saving of a soul, if written by the Holy Spirit on the heart. He loved Jerusalem, not for its worthiness, but in spite of all its sins. How this encourages us to believe that, in spite of everything, He loves us too. Believe it and be happy. He loves you, not in the mass, but individually; and when He has safely led you one by one through life's mazes to the Father's house, He will give each a special welcome: "My ransomed child, thou art come home at last!" But there is an awful possibility of forfeiting all this, for He adds, "Ye would not."—Mrs. C. B. Wheeler.

TRUE SERVICE.

BY M. ROUTH.

"I want to do some great thing," cried Sophy Gibson, impetuously, "so that the world may revere and honour me, instead of going through, day by day, my humdrum existence."

"But why, my child," answered the old grandmother tenderly, "should your life be humdrum? It seems to me you have everything to make it the contrary,—brothers and sisters, mother and father, a beautiful home, and plenty of work to interest yourself in!"

"Oh! but grannie, look at me! I do nothing, and am nothing; people round the next street, maybe, never even heard of me! Look at Florence Nightingale, Grace Darling, Joan of Arc, and hundreds of other women who have made a stir in the world, while I am bound to pass a monotonous home life, with no great gifts, and doing no good to anybody!" And the full brown eyes filled with tears as Sophy laid her chestnut head on her grandmother's knees.

"I heard little Herbert saying last night," the old lady replied, "that he loved his Sophy because she was always so kind, and I think God accepts such service, if done to please Him, as much as if you were a great reformer."

"But, grannie, no one can help loving Bertie, because he is such a pet; and besides, that is a very little thing after all."

"Well, darling," answered grannie, lovingly, "God does not require the same service from all, and He will not judge us by the quantity of work that we do, but by the quality. And if He has placed you in a quiet home, He sees that there is the place where you can best serve Him and the service with which He will be most pleased."

"But, grannie, I don't see how doing such little things can be doing Him service!"

"Fetch the Bible, my child, and find Numbers iv., and read verses 32 and 33. There you see that the service appointed for the sons of Merari was the smallest in connection with the Tabernacle. It is not doing the little things only that pleases Him, but doing them well and for Him, because He gave them you to do."

Sophy read slowly through the verses mentioned by her grandmother, and then said, looking up, "I see, grannie, that the sons of Merari had 'the pins and the cords' to look after; but still that was very little service. I wonder they were satisfied to do so little!"

"Was it less service, or less important, darling, because it was small service? The Tabernacle was not complete without its pins, and I expect the sons of Merari recognised God's hand in giving them that life-work. And so it is in the Temple of God which we are building. Our little niche has to be 'prepared and made ready,' and our daily life, with its duties and discipline, moulds us into his likeness."

"I understand now, grannie," cried Sophy, eagerly. "I have only 'the pins and the cords' to take care of for a little time, but who knows what I may be later on!"

"That's right, pet; I leave you this verse, 'Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.'"

And Sophy did not forget the old lady's words, and fulfilled the small services faithfully given by her Master; in after years she was looked up to, and revered by hundreds of her friends and relations.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.—The last report of this Mission and dispensary (47, Endell-street, St. Giles', W.C.), shows that several thousand cases of sickness came under treatment during the year, exclusive of those visited by the doctors at their homes. The Gospel meetings and Sunday-school have been mediums of much blessing to many of the poor in the neighbourhood. Wearied mothers and poor children to the number of 400 enjoyed a visit to "Holiday House," while many sufferers have found invigoration at the Folkestone Convalescent Home. Many instances of spiritual benefit are recorded. Hopes are expressed that funds may be forthcoming to build new premises, and so extend each department of the entire Mission.

SINGING FOR JESUS.

CENTRAL GOSPEL MALE CHOIR.

ABOUT fifty members of this choir met at Exeter Hall on Friday last for a social gathering, at the kind invitation of Mr. George Williams. The Hon. Secretary (Mr. Rowland Cross) gave an interesting résumé of the choir work since its formation. The choir purposes to work in conjunction with the Gracechurch-street branch of the Y.M.C.A. Further particulars may be obtained of Mr. Rowland Cross, Fern Glen, Sydenham Park, S.E., or of the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 61, Gracechurch-street, E.C.

THE CLAPHAM MALE CHOIR.

This choir held their first annual meeting last Thursday evening in Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road, Mr. M. H. Hodder presiding. The choir was in full strength and song, and the building was well filled by sympathising friends. Many neighbouring ministers came, and the burden of their messages was that of thanks for the excellent services that the choir had rendered. Instances were related in which the song had been blessed to the conversion of souls.

The past year has been an eventful and a busy one. The choir have been present at sixty-eight services, covering ground throughout the Metropolitan district from Greenwich to Kingston-on-Thames, and many meetings had to be declined. The services of the choir are given without charge, and even the cost of travelling is not asked for in missions where funds are not plentiful. All the speakers seemed impressed with the revelation God had given to them of the power of song in bringing men and women to the Cross.

STRATFORD EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.

This band of Christian singers, formed just a year ago under the leadership of Mr. J. W. Godfrey, out of the large choir gathered for Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services at Stratford, held its first anniversary meeting on Thursday, Feb. 26, at the new Conference Hall, West Ham-lane. Mr. C. Boardman presided. A report of the past year's work, presented by the Secretary, stated that during the twelve months the choir had taken part in sixty-five meetings, a large number of them entirely under their own management, and all of a purely evangelistic character.

Churches, chapels, mission-halls, and schoolrooms in Stratford, Stepney, Forest Gate, Woodford, and other contiguous districts have been freely thrown open to them for their song services, in which the Gospel message has always been clearly and simply spoken as well as sung. Their single aim is the salvation of souls, and though the work of such a choir must necessarily be rather that of sowing the seed than of gathering in the harvest, there have been many signs of blessing attending their labour.

The choir, which now numbers some 200 voices, has its headquarters at the Conference Hall, Stratford, where a practice-meeting is held on the third Friday in every month. Fresh members, possessing the requisite qualifications, will be gladly welcomed on application to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. Thomas, 19, Ham-park-road, Stratford, E.

SHACKLEWELL GOSPEL MISSION.—This Mission, begun some years since, was subsequently removed to the present room, which is the top-floor of a warehouse in Winchester-place, High-street, Kingsland. On Monday week Mr. C. Gull, the superintendent, held his annual meeting. A number of poor people and workers assembled for tea, afterwards holding an open-air meeting, followed by a public meeting, when addresses were given by the superintendent and some gentlemen interested in work here. The work goes on, and is supported entirely by voluntary contributions. The poor people contribute as much as their means will allow, but just now we have some pressing needs. Opportunities for further usefulness are also presenting themselves, but we hesitate, in our present position, to launch further. The address of Mr. Gull is 4, Stafford-place, Grove-road, Stamford-hill.

THE KABYLES OF THE SAHEL VALLEY.

LEAVING Tunisie, on the rail between Soukahras and Khroub, in a lovely mountainous country, we passed the remarkable sulphate of lime baths of Hammam Meskoutine, efficacious in cases of rheumatism, nervous and cutaneous disorders. In the neighbourhood are also saline and ferruginous springs. The surface of the rock whence the waters rise and over which they fall 200 feet, is encrusted with lime as white as marble. The natives cook their food in the springs, as they are at boiling heat. Looking up at the falls from below, at the white shining rock and steaming water, the scene is very strange and almost unearthly.

On taking the rail at Khroub, two families of Arabs were waiting at the station to be conveyed with their black tents to a distant market. I am bound to say that the employés took great care of the unwieldy luggage. We were soon on the best of terms with them, for my wife took the baby (having his little finger nails already died with henna), out of its mother's arms, and tossed, and nursed, and kissed the little Mohammed, who smiled, fixing his large eyes on her, unwilling to leave her. Little Fatima, too, was pleased to be noticed by the Roumi. Grandfather, father, and mother, all showed pleasure and emotion, as it is seldom the French fraternise with the natives. Love is soon understood.

We quitted the rails at Bordj-bou-Arreridj, and were put down by the diligence at Bordj-Beni-Mansour, in the pitch-darkness, at half-past two in the morning, alongside a poor little auberge. It was with difficulty we could persuade the landlord to give us shelter, but we had accommodation, such as it was. We were glad to turn out at six in the morning, and mount to a neighbouring Kabyle village. Here we met the villagers in the Djemâa. We were well rewarded in seeing the men and boys sitting on the ground, with eager faces, drinking in the sweet Gospel sounds, the elders nodding one to another. On quitting them, one of the most elderly came down the hill to hear more about Sidna-Aïssa.

We now waited for an opportunity to proceed to the fort and village of Tazmalt, fifteen kilos. distant; but as owners of mules and donkeys were not disposed to take us on reasonable terms, we looked to the Lord to help us. Just then five Kabyles came along with a train of donkeys, laden with corn, on their way to the Ouled Said, in our direction. They were willing to take our luggage, but as the poor beasts were sufficiently laden we would not ride, but walked to Tazmalt, up hill and down dale. We were carried on their backs across the streams. The fine swarthy fellows listened well to our Gospel teachings, and with friendly words left us at the door of our hotel, which has a fine view of the Beni Mellikeuch on the north, and the successive ranges of the mountains of the Beni Abbes to the south.

The great rocky wall which shuts in the Kabylia of the Jur-Jura, seen from its northern side, has an aspect of savage grandeur. The Lalla-Khedidja, 8000 feet high, towers over all with its snow-clad peaks. The mountaineers whom it encloses partake with its scenery something of the rude and savage in character. The wind which passes over its snowy summits brings with it a breath of liberty and independence. Not so with its southern side, where we are; its aspect is gentler and more genial, its green and well-cultivated slopes, gradually descending to the bed of the River Sahel, are dotted over by its numerous picturesquely-situated villages. The glorious heights above afford a view ravishing to behold. The inhabitants of this region are brought more into communication with the outside world, and they have a more cosmopolitan character. A spirit of enterprise brings them into contact with distant places, and, like their scenery, they are more approachable and genial.

As all these tribes bordering on the valley of the Sahel speak the same language as those within the Jur-Jura range, we were desirous of visiting this part of the country, to see how they could be approached from the French villages on the banks of the river, such as the Beni Abbes, the Beni Yadel, the Ouled Abd el Djebbar, on the south, whose mountains, in successive ranges, covered with villages, are elevated several thousand feet above the plains. The tribes on the northern side of the river are too numerous to mention, but we were much attracted to the Beni Oughlis, with their villages crowning the topmost mountains, though tolerably accessible on mule-back. A very intelligent young Kabyle strongly recommended us to give our attention to this tribe, on account of the friendliness and accessibility of its people.

Tazmalt has a very large market. The souk, or market, has great attractions for the Kabyle, and seems as necessary to him as the air he breathes. Here he ascertains the prices of produce, sells his own, and purchases what is needed for his family. He learns from the Marabout the days of the fêtes, gathers all the news of the neighbourhood, which he reports to his own Djemâa, discusses the affairs of the Cof, the Tribe, and the Confederation. The market is generally held on ground common to one or more villages, or which may have been ceeded by the proprietor. Each kind of merchandise has its appropriated spot — grains, sheep, goats, mules, oils, stuffs, tobacco, planks, and pottery. The butcher has his special location, where sheep and oxen are slaughtered. Formerly the tolbas, or students of the neighbourhood, could claim two cuts from the oxen and one from the sheep. Stuffs, silks, and groceries are sold under little tents, and the invariable café is found under a gourbi. There are very few important villages which have not their weekly market.

We had some visitors at our hotel, who were desirous of hearing more of our doctrine, and gladly received Arab Gospels.

Leaving Tazmalt, the mountains approach nearer to the high road. At one spot we were told that 150 villages were within five or six kilometres from it. On coming to Sidi Aiche, near the Beni Oughlis, we were received at the French Hotel by a very superior-looking Kabyle woman of 65, who moved in and out in her Kabyle costume with much grace. Here we found that there were 200 villages within a circuit of seven kilometres, so that this would be a grand centre for missionary operations. We lost no opportunity of talking to groups of Kabyles on the road, and giving Arab Gospels to those who could read. On the railway and in towns and villages my wife distributed French tracts to people who were unaccustomed to see such things. What is wanted here, however, is permanent work by two French-speaking young missionaries.

On our way to our next stopping-place, El-Kseur, we passed the "Tombeau de la Niége," marking the spot where a thousand French soldiers were lost in a snowstorm. We passed through a most lovely country all along our route. The many French villages skirting the river are formed on territory sequestrated after the insurrections against the French authority. Many of the Kabyles cultivate the land belonging to the present holders, retaining three-fifths of the produce, whilst two-fifths go to the landowner.

From El-Kseur we again proceeded on our way, taking down the names of the villages within sight from the road, and arriving at Bougie, took the steamer which brought us back to Algiers.—Yours ever truly, L'Agha, Algiers. Geo. Pearse.

A COLPORTEUR AT WORK.—A correspondent sends to us some particulars in reference to Charles Clements, a colporteur, in Lancashire and Cheshire, in connection with the Manchester and Salford Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. "I was attracted to his stall by his open manner and the clear stentorian voice in which he speaks. He begins by relating some incident in every-day life in a very humorous and pleasing style. Then he introduces his books, giving some Scriptural truths and texts in a very homely way, appearing to have full command of his audience, and ending in a good sale of books. Within nine months he has sold upwards of 30,000 Bibles and Testaments."

Y.M.C.A. WORK.

PORTGLENONE, CO. ANTRIM.

THERE is a remarkable movement going on in this district, which lies quite near to the place where the revival in 1859 was first felt in Ireland. A number of young men and others have professed conversion.

BALLYMENA, IRELAND.

This Association, recently formed, is prosecuting its work with great vigour. The membership has increased to seventy. About twenty cottage meetings are conducted by the members of the Association in the town. Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary for Ireland, recently visited the Association, and gave an address on "Young men, their influence and future."

BELFAST.

The annual meeting was held on Thursday, 6th inst., in the Exhibition Hall. The attendance at the meeting was very large. The Mayor, who presided, warmly commended the Association to the sympathy and support of the merchants of the town. An encouraging report was read by Mr. D. A. Black, General Secretary. An effort is being made to raise the remaining debt of £3000. Addresses were deliverd by Rev. Charles Seaur, Rev. J. W. McKay, D.D., and Rev. Thomas L. Johnson, coloured African missionary.

SOUTH BRANCH, CLAPHAM.

A meeting of an interesting character was held at the rooms in Fentiman-road on Feb. 26, to commend to God the brethren who have recently set sail for China (one of these, Rev. W. W. Cassells, was a member of this branch), and to awaken continued interest in foreign missions. Stirring and earnest addresses were listened to by a crowded audience from Mr. A. V. Liley, recently returned from the Congo, Mr. J. R. Landale, and Mr. H. Gill, who is expecting shortly to leave for China. It is hoped that others may, as a result of the meeting, feel constrained to go.

BERWICK-ON-TWEED.

A correspondent writes: Our Y.M.C.A. here have a capital trained choir, who sing on our Town Hall stairs, every Lord's-day evening, pieces from the Christian Choir and Songs and Solos, and an address is given, followed by an after-meeting in the Association's rooms near by. A very large crowd gathers outside. We have got a well-lit lamp on the end of a staff, encircled with short and striking texts.

We are all sorry at losing Mr. Smith, our minister, who goes to Edinburgh. He is such a humble, earnest man—a very Paul in fervour and faithful testimony. May the Lord send us another soon.

THE EARTHQUAKE IN SPAIN.—M. Lallave, of Seville, in writing to Mr. W. Greene, acknowledging contributions from English friends, says: "I gladly accept the office of giving myself to distribute the money, as it will furnish me with the opportunity of offering at the same time the Bread of Life to all who need it. I trust these offerings of Christians will be, in the hands of the Lord, the means of drawing many to a knowledge of the Saviour, and to make them partakers of the unsearchable riches of his love in the Gospel."

BRIXTON ORPHANAGE FOR GIRLS.—The ninth anniversary of this institution was held on Monday, March 2, at the Brixton Hall, Acre-lane, S.W. Mr George Williams presided. The meeting, which was well attended, was addressed by Revs. Burman Cassin, Owen Davies, J. T. Gadsdun, W. Herbert, D. A. Herschell, Marmaduke Osborn, and others. The annual report stated that 202 orphans are now being maintained, clothed, and educated in the Home, and trained for domestic service. The children, who looked both well and happy, were present at the meeting, and sung at intervals. The trustees are endeavouring to raise funds for providing a commodious schoolroom, there being only room for dining, school, and play. A collection was made, amounting to about £165, including £50 by a member of the Common Council, £12 kindly given by Chairman for one year's support of an orphan, and £10 per cent. on the whole amount given as usual by one of the trustees.

PROTESTANT SCHOOL AT SAN REMO.

EDUCATION in Italy is now national and secular. This has produced good results already, although it has only been a few years in operation. Parents who cannot read nor write are anxious that their children should. But one factor at work which hinders the full development of the present free system is that the teachers are largely in connection with the Church of Rome. These cannot legally, and dare not publicly and openly, make the advancement of that Church their first care in their mode of teaching, but its interests are not forgotten by them. The "religious element" from the devotee of the Church of Rome's point of view, is unduly pushed to the front, to the detriment of the children in general, especially of those whose parents are Protestants, or at any rate out of sympathy with the doctrine and practice of the Church of Rome. In some cases priests and nuns, zealous over much, have descended to the infliction of petty persecutions on the children of Protestants.

Accordingly, the idea of a Protestant Relief School was entertained. But those Italians for whose use it was mainly designed were amongst the "poor ones of the earth." A number of English were willing to assist, but one must take the responsibility of getting it up and of keeping it up. Such an one was found in Mrs. Clode Braddon, who was installed Secretary. It was mainly owing to the exertions of this lady and Miss Kaye-Shuttleworth that funds were raised in San Remo sufficient to start the undertaking. A first-rate teacher was found, and the school was opened in April last. The attendance was at first small, but it steadily increased. At first the children were all those of Protestants, but soon Roman Catholic children came, asking to be allowed to attend. When the school had been about a month in existence, and all was going on quietly and satisfactorily, suddenly all the Roman Catholic children disappeared. The priests had taken alarm, and exercised their authority.

The school necessarily brought us into acquaintance with the parents of the children, and with Italians generally. We discovered in some cases much poverty and misery. We were asked to take charge of little children who were utterly destitute. That involved the adding of an "Asilo" or "Home" to the school. The cost of maintaining a child we found to be twelve pounds sterling a year. The Scotch clergyman here communicated with Sir Peter Coats, who kindly agreed to support the first orphan. Since then another generous friend here, Mrs. Curtis, has followed his example, and we hope this branch of the Institution will grow and prosper too. One other branch was added lately, namely, a soup-kitchen. The necessity for this is temporary.

Towards the support of the Institution liberal help here has been given. All the English colony, except a few whose High Churchism throws them into mistaken friendship with the Church of Rome and antagonism to everything that smells of "Protestantism," extend to us their sympathy and support. Still the dearth of strangers here, which lessens the gains of the Italians, lessens necessarily also the number of our contributors, and we should feel grateful if your readers at home would help us in maintaining and extending the efficiency of our newly established institution. Communications to be addressed to the Secretary, Mrs. Clode Braddon, Casa Gaglietto, Via Umberto, San Remo; or to Mrs. Wilson, 13, Dean's-yard, Westminster Abbey, S. W. J. A.

MRS. REANEY has paid a visit to Sunderland, and greatly delighted the Christians there by her earnest, attractive, evangelistic, and Temperance addresses. She spoke in three of the largest halls in the town, besides holding drawing-room and other meetings of a less public kind. Rev. H. Martin, who presided at her last meeting, said that many would remember her words as long as they lived.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

A LENGTHY report appears in the Newark, N. J., Morning Register, of February 19, of a three days' Conference conducted there by the two evangelists. With regard to the afternoon service on the last day the reporter says:—

"Hundreds of people stood shivering outside in the cold in the vain expectation that they would be able to obtain admission by hook or crook; but after a while they were obliged to go away in sore disappointment at missing the rare opportunity of hearing one of the greatest evangelists of these days. Inside the church the congregation listened with bated breath to every word that dropped from the preacher's lips. At times, when Mr. Moody would warm to his subject, tears would glisten in many eyes, and ever and anon someone, into whose soul the iron of misfortune had pierced, would utter a deep, long-drawn sigh of sympathy or affection."

In another part of the report we read with pleasure that "Mr. Sankey was in splendid voice."

An editorial in the same issue of the Morning Register says:—

"Let no caviller, no cynic, no pessimist, no atheist declare that they have done no good here. Whatever curiosity may have had to do with the large gatherings, whatever desire to be simply entertained, whatever wish to follow a general fashion, this community is better for the evangelists having visited it. People driving headlong to evil have been led to stop and think whither they are tending. Persons who have not darkened church doors for years have been impressed and inspired with purer desires and loftier aims. Regarding the subject from the point of political economy, their visit has been a social blessing.

"But, in a wider and in a religious sense, the work has been successful. If they have been instrumental in reclaiming in Newark a single wicked or reckless life, then their work has been abundantly rewarded. We doubt not they have reclaimed scores."

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

IN response to an invitation sent by the Nonconformist Ministers' Association, these brethren commenced a united mission at St. Helen's on Sunday, Feb. 22. Though the weather has been mostly unfavourable, the attendances have been very large, and each evening manifest results have been seen. Some two hundred persons have confessed Christ. Many more are under impression and conviction, and the work is widening and deepening.

The Saturday evening song services have been crowded, and have been attended with cheering results. They attracted many who would otherwise have spent the time in the public-house. A meeting was held on two successive Sunday mornings for the special benefit of those not in the habit of attending any place of worship. Meetings have also been held for men only and women only. Altogether the mission has been an eminently successful one, and will be memorable in the history of many a heart and many a home.

THE BETHESDA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH, with which is incorporated the Portsea Island Town Mission, still retains the services of Commander B. H. Key, who it was feared would be compelled to relinquish his position as superintendent on account of the agricultural depression. In the annual report of last year we read: "The extraordinary spread of Romanism and Ritualism in Portsmouth during the past two years has made us the more zealous in the Mission work; and we can testify that the Lord has, and is still, blessing the word preached to the conversion and establishment of souls." Accompanying the report is a circular signed by some of the clergy and ministers of the neighbourhood, who earnestly pray for the continued support of the mission. It is described as being very important and extensive, and full of bright prospect and encouragement; it employs five paid missionaries, has seven Sunday-schools, and maintains regularly nearly fifty weekly services in different parts of the borough. Communications may be made to the Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea.

Notes and Comments.

A MOST gratifying account of the evangelistic labours of Dr. Somerville in Constantinople comes to us from our friend Miss West. We hope to give particulars in our next issue.

Few inquiries go more to the heart of the question of Evolution than that of "Primeval Man" discussed last week at the Victoria Institute. That primeval man was rude and uncivilised is a necessity of the Darwinian theory. But there is a total absence of historical evidence that this was man's first condition, or that man, left to himself, has ever risen out of a savage state. It is well that this aspect of the question is coming to the front. The believers in Genesis have everything to gain by it.

It is no new objection to the Bible to affirm, as certain evolutionists do, that the early characters who appear on its pages were little better than the idolatrous tribes around them. But the more the hints given of them are studied and compared, the more will the grand godliness of these ancient men come out. They knew they were related to God; their faith was full of intelligence, reverence, hope, and courage; if there was simplicity, there was manly reality in their religion; and they worshipped and walked through the earth as God's immediate dwelling place.

Professor Huxley in his "Lay Sermons" has written of orthodox theologians who, before every advance of science, have retired bleeding and extinguished. In The Monthly Interpreter Dr. Mair admirably says that this is an impertinence, and that the very contrary is the fact. It is science that has retreated and changed, not theology, in its proper sphere. The theology of the age of Augustine is more closely allied to the theology of to-day, than is the science of the past to that of the present.

At a late meeting of the Directors of the London Missionary Society, Rev. J. H. Budden bore emphatic testimony to the fact that the people of India are just now in a special state of preparedness and willingness to listen to the Gospel. This witness is the more valuable as coming from a veteran Indian missionary, who has been forty-four years in that great empire.

Letters received from the band of seven young men who lately left England for service in connection with the China Inland Mission, tell of many conversions on board ship.

> "The Bishop of Lichfield supports the action of the Rev. G. B. Vaux, the clergyman who withheld from certain Sunday-school children prizes which they had rightfully won, because they were not baptized. Dr. Maclagan says: 'Strictly speaking, no unbaptized child should be admitted to a Church Sunday-school except in the immediate prospect of baptism. . . It would, therefore, be perfectly legitimate to exclude such children from a Church school until such time as they were baptized.' The Bishop suggests that unbaptized children might be permitted to attend; 'but,' he says, 'I think you may fairly separate them in some way or other from the rest of the chilldren in the school.'"

This is simple Paganism. If such monstrous utterances as these should but lead to an exhaustive and candid consideration of the question, "What is Christian baptism?" the unintended benefit would be very great.

Tuesday next, March 17, is the day set apart by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance for united prayer to God on behalf of their country. While thankful to God for the measure of contentment and prosperity granted to the sister isle, there is yet abundant need that we should join our brethren in desiring for Ireland a more effectual deliverance from the evils that afflict her. But let us not forget to help in answering our own prayer by earnest and unremitting effort to bring the people to a saving knowledge and practice of the Christian faith.

One of the great hindrances to popular weal in Ireland is the misapplied power of the Papacy. Our kinsmen in the United States are continually making the same discovery. The Evangelical Alliance in New York have issued a strong protest against a measure that has been introduced into the legislature ostensibly to secure freedom of worship for the inmates of institutions for the care of the poor. Practically it is a bill to legalise Romish proselytism. We need to meet these attempted encroachments of Rome with a corresponding "eternal vigilance" on behalf of liberty and purity of doctrine.

It is much to be regretted that the apparent miscarriage of justice which has taken place in the sentence of seven years' penal servitude on Henry Williams, for alleged perjury at Poole, is endorsed and perpetuated by the Home Secretary. When a number of men of character and standing, who have no personal interest in the matter, are found persistently declaring that injustice has been done, while on the other side are deeply interested parties, a strong primâ facie case at least is made out for a further and exhaustive and impartial inquiry.

> "On Saturday morning next an amateur performance of Douglas Jerrold's comedy 'The White Milliner,' and an original operetta by Lady Arthur Hill, entitled 'The Lost Husband,' will be given at the Criterion in aid of the funds for the restoration of Wolferton Church, near Sandringham. The Princess of Wales has signified her intention to be present."

The foregoing speaks for itself. A Japanese gentleman, who has been in England for some years, on reading it, wrote: "A strange people! they must have something for their money—they must pass their gifts through a strainer in the form of a fancy fair, a lottery, or a theatrical performance, at immense cost of time and labour to themselves, and they must make a crutch of the devil to support them in their labours for God." Yes, a "strange people!" Fancy reading in our histories: "The comedies of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle' and 'Ralph Royster-Doyster' were performed at a well-known gambling-house, in aid of the funds for the re-building of St. Paul's Cathedral. His Majesty, the Court beauties, and Sir Christopher Wren were present."

In the Oxford Town Hall, on Sunday week, four undergraduates gave testimony to God's saving grace, all of whom had been converted since they entered the University. When it is added that they are all of good family and influential position, and three of them of considerable success in the athletic world, the effect of their public testimony can be somewhat appreciated. Says a correspondent: "Such open testimony from men of this class, converted when undergraduates, has never been known in Oxford before."

We understand that the life of Dr. Moffat will be published in the autumn: it is nearly ready now.

The Daily News for February 25 contained the account of a sale of rare orchids, one of which, without spot or blemish, was purchased for £131! The same issue had a list of modern pictures, the sale of which realised £2039 3s., and a description of jade carvings, sold on a recent occasion, included a pair of vases, for which the sum of £60 18s. was given, there being other articles of the kind bought to the amount of over £500 at the same sale. Put these sums together, or look at them separately, and the thought is suggested that one of the least regarded of our Lord's commands is that which negatives hoarding or extravagance: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth."

One day when a poor, half-starved girl appeared before Wesley, he found he had scarcely any money left to give her. His reflection on this was: "It immediately struck me. Will thy Master say, 'Well done, good and faithful steward! Thou hast adorned thy walls with the money which might have screened this poor creature from the cold!'? O justice! O mercy! Are not these pictures the blood of this poor maid?" How many of the possessors of rare orchids, fine pictures, and costly ornaments, will address themselves in like manner?

We have been privileged to peruse some recent reports of Scripture-readers in connection with the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, and are more strongly convinced than ever of the adaptation of this agency to the spiritual needs of the population. Wherever these devoted men have gone, with Bible in hand and love to souls in their hearts, they have been welcomed, and their message has received most respectful attention. Captain Kearney White, the secretary (27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin), is now preparing his annual report of the Society's work; when it appears we hope all the true friends of Ireland will possess themselves of a copy, and give it an attentive perusal.

We (like the Rock) have received an anonymous pamphlet, published by Messrs. Waterlow & Sons, entitled, CASTE IN THE EVANGELICAL WORLD: A PROTEST. Our contemporary says:—

> "The author writes good English, and upon the whole we are not very much disposed to quarrel with him. There is a great deal too much of what he calls snobbishness in English society generally, but we are not aware that there is more of it among evangelicals than among other people. The author, however, thinks there is, and is very hard upon the Evangelisation Society, and upon the London City Mission, for the class distinctions which those organisations recognise. It is much easier to denounce things of this kind, however, than to say how they are to be got rid of. Englishmen, it is said, love a lord, and next to a lord they love a rich man. It is a pity, and we shall do well to strive against a besetting fault. But we doubt whether there is any use in running a tilt against religious bodies which merely recognise the actual state of society."

It is surely being content with small blessings for us Evangelicals to congratulate ourselves that we are not more snobbish than other people. The Apostle James is very hard upon those who love lords and rich men, because they are such. The raison d'être of Evangelicals, and of Evangelical Societies, is not to merely recognise, but to run a perpetual tilt against the actual state of society. This is exactly what Jesus did, and for doing which the "Society" of that day put Him to death.

In addition to the letter in our last on "The Mahdi and the Soudanese," another correspondent (F. A. V.) writes:—

"The Arabs of the Soudan are not 'in their own land.' They and their ancestors crossed over the Red Sea from Arabia, and invaded the Soudan, carrying rapine and bloodshed into the peaceable Soudanese villages, selling the inhabitants into slavery, and carrying off their cattle, and this they continue to do to the present day. The Soudanese are negroes, and fearfully oppressed by the Arabs, with whom we are now fighting, The Arabs, I need hardly add, are descendants of Ishmael, and as such, their hand is against every man, and every man's hand against them, and always will be so, till they purge themselves from the curse and become Christians."

We are indebted to the current number of our valued contemporary, The Irish Congregational Magazine, for the following generous recognition of our endeavour to consider social and national questions in the light of the Word of God:—

"We have been much struck with the earnest tone and temper of this excellent weekly paper in connection with great social questions. Our Christian journals are at times timid on these points, probably not wishing to offend their readers by making Christian life too difficult. The Christian speaks out with a boldness that is refreshing in these days. The subject of Temperance, so long shunned by popular religious papers, so timidly handled by many still, finds here its Scriptural level in Christian life. Social purity is not considered too delicate a subject for Christian readers, and the vices of modern civilisation are fearlessly rebuked. There is a good word for all who are trying to help that righteousness which exalts a nation, and a faith in the political economy of the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles which is much needed. Indeed, we always turn to the editorial 'Notes and Comments' with the assurance that there will be found something worth reading, and that all questions will be weighed in the balances of the sanctuary. The editor, while keeping to what some may call Puritan views of the Bible, has an open eye for all that is generous, and true, and just, even in Society journals, and some of his remarks on current events are full of deepest interest. Are we not too apt to forget that upon all moral and spiritual questions the Bible 'gives a light to every age'? Take questions about dress, modes of living, personal habits, speech, temper, daily pursuits, tastes, associations, &c.—why should we be so regardless of the One Voice that never leads astray, and the standard that is never out of date? We do not know where to find wiser or more truly Scriptural comments on many of these themes than in the editorial pages of this journal. . . . These are 'wholesome words' and they cannot but further the best interests of the people. Clearly The Christian believes that the law of God is binding upon the people, rich and poor, and that the 'blessing of God' still counts for much in personal, social, and national life."

With reference to these subjects a highly esteemed minister and missionary writes:—"I fear the authority of Holy Scripture is but little recognised in many of these matters. One thing has often struck me in this connection, viz., the all but total disregard by Christian women of the express teachings of Apostles about dress. They seem to regard the latest fashion, no matter how unseemly, not the Divine message, as the proper guide. Yet they are probably shocked at theories of inspiration which they do not formulate, but which they certainly illustrate."

G. D. H. points out that is was an error in our Notes on Daily Readings to speak of the parable of the sheep and the goats. These are parabolic terms, but the whole passage is a very solemn prophecy. Alford well says: "This description is not a parable, though there are in it parabolic passages (e.g., 'as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats'), and for that reason, that which is illustrated by those likenesses is not itself parabolic. It will heighten our estimation of the wonderful sublimity of this description when we recollect that it was spoken by the Lord only three days before his sufferings."

"Whether Paul, Apollos, or Cephas . . . all are yours." If there be a Paul, an Apollos, and a Cephas in one town, they cannot each rightly belong to any one congregation. No arrangement made with Paul by one Church can do away with the right of others to a share in the ministry of the gift which God has given him; and so of Apollos and Cephas, and all other apostles, pastors, teachers, and evangelists. They are every one responsible, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, to use their gifts for the edification of the whole Church of Christ.

The recognition of this right, in the most modified form, would produce a desirable revolution in Church affairs. Instead of separate congregations being Paulites, Apollites, Cephites, they would each partake of the characteristics of all three; and the tendency to sectarianism would so far be checked.

Why should not ministers of evangelical churches interchange pulpits much more than they do? One good result would be—supposing they preached once a day to the same congregation instead of twice—that they would only need to prepare half the number of sermons; they would thus have time to put more thought and prayer into the one sermon, and still have time to do a great deal more pastoral work. The people would also have the advantage of hearing the truth of the Gospel from men of varied ability and gift, and those who were not touched by one might be brought to their knees, and to Christ, by another.

There never was more need than now to "stand in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths," for as the end draws near all sorts of delusions may be expected. There has lately died at Gillingham, Kent, a deceived deceiver, professedly the author of a new divine book called "The Flying Roll," and leader of a so-called religious movement under the name of "The New and Latter House of Israel." His followers, to the very day of his burial, buoyed themselves up with the hope that "he is not dead but sleepeth."

There is no doubt that God answers prayer in healing the sick, but the multiplication of such faith-healing professions and performances as are now being exhibited in various places appears to us greatly to be dreaded. We know of well-authenticated cases of healing, where all human skill had failed; but they are very different from those described in the "testimonies" given at these sensational assemblages, and which are a very poor imitation of the work of Dorothea Trüdel, Pastor Blumhardt, and others.

The evangelistic movement among University students in Scotland appears to be developing in a remarkable way. Professor Greenfield and a deputation of Edinburgh students have proceeded to Aberdeen to initiate meetings in the northern University similar to those being held in the Scottish capital. Other deputations we learn are to visit Glasgow and St. Andrew's for a like purpose. This spiritual revival among the future leaders of Scottish thought and action is likely to exercise a most potent and blessed influence, not only on the British nation, but in all the lands whither these young men may go.

We hope the earnest call to extended evangelisation in France, which appears in another column from the pen of Mrs. Dodds, will fall on ready ears and reach willing hearts. Her plea has a singularly pathetic value, when we recollect that her beloved and devoted husband poured out his young life for the furtherance of this cause.

We have pleasure in directing the attention of young men and others interested in foreign missions to the announcement in our advertising columns of a meeting in Exeter Hall, on the evening of the 24th inst., when the claims of the heathen and the Mohammedan world will be set forth by a number of experienced speakers.

Mr. Cameron Churchill having resigned the office of General Secretary at the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., a successor has been found in Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who has been well known in connection with evangelistic work among young men. We earnestly join in the hope expressed in the current issue of The Monthly Review, "that the Lord will give him the grace and wisdom needed for the difficult post he has been called upon to fill."

The two weeks' mission by Rev. W. H. Aitken and his helpers at Marylebone Parish Church has been a season of much spiritual blessing to the crowds that have daily flocked to this fine and spacious building. Last Sunday evening the church was filled to overflowing, and a large after-meeting followed a sermon of singular power and impressiveness from the mission preacher. The mission closed on Monday evening with a thanksgiving service; we hope to give a detailed notice in our next issue.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE AT GREENOCK.

At the invitation of the United Evangelistic Committee Mr. Scroggie has concluded a short mission of three weeks in Greenock. The meetings were well attended. The Town Hall was crowded by an audience of about 3000 people every Sabbath evening, and the Temperance Institute filled almost every week night of the Mission. Not a night passed without manifest tokens of the Divine presence and blessing. Scores seemed to be melted under the power of the truth. The numbers who waited for the after meetings varied from 100 to 500, and many were in soul anxiety. During the meetings about 450 persons were conversed with by the workers, there being many clear decisions for Christ. A good number, on the other hand, professed to have passed from death unto life during the delivery of Mr. Scroggie's addresses, and without any personal dealing.

Mr. Scroggie's exhortations to Christians, both during the week and on Sabbath mornings, were largely attended and much blessed. The spirit of prayer seemed to be poured out in a remarkable degree, and the number of requests, both written and verbal, was quite unprecedented. The work, as far as one can judge, has been the most fruitful since the memorable visit of Mr. Moody and Mr. Scroggie to Greenock in 1882.

W. L.

DERBY THEATRE GOSPEL-HALL.—The good work here continues to develop, and permanent results appear to be shown. Both the Sunday and week-evening services have been well-attended through the past year, during which period some sixty persons have professed conversion. The Sunday-school and Band of Hope are conducted with increasing zeal. The open-air meetings were highly successful. The report sent to us adds:—"Some who have been induced to attend the various meetings and Bible-classes are from the lowest depths of society, but they have been brought to Christ, and into happy fellowship with his people."

YOUNG MEN IN THE WEST-END.

IF the members and friends of the West-London Branch of the Y.M.C.A. do not become the wisest and best of their generation, it must be because they have not the capacity for digesting and assimilating all the good advice they received at their annual meeting in Burlington Hall last Thursday evening. The report submitted by the faithful secretary, Mr. Pearce, was, as usual, precise in construction, hopeful in tone, and full of encouraging facts. We need not specify all the varied branches of work carried on, as these are now pretty well known. The edification of the members is, of course, a primary concern, and so is the evangelisation of "those that are without." In both departments the work is sustained with vigour and with a good measure of success. Mr. Pearce was able to boast that Mr. Stanley Smith, whose name is fresh in the recollection of our readers, was a member of his branch; others besides him have been thrust forth into public Christian work, one of them being Mr. W. Wild, the present secretary of the Lowestoft Association. The financial statement, unfortunately, showed a deficit of nearly £200.

The president of the evening was Lord Mount-Temple, who, exercising his prerogative, favoured his younger brethren with a lengthened address full of weighty matter and valuable exhortation, as to the proper discharge of life's duties. Following the strongest current of popular thought, he made some pointed references to the late lamented General Gordon that were much cheered. It seemed a little ominous indeed, though capable of easy explanation, that by far the loudest applause of the evening was given to the military references of the various speakers. The noble Chairman looked upon General Gordon as a tip-top Christian, who utterly got rid of self, and is now on a high pinnacle of fame in the eyes of the whole civilised world. His lordship's words in deprecation of the spirit of compromise or half-and-half-ism too prevalent in our day, were much to the point and deserve to be remembered.

A most excellent speech was that of Mr. F. A. Bevan, who rejoiced that in this Y.M.C.A. at any rate there is no departure from the old lines in teaching and practice. Without any desire to be unduly censorious, he could not commend the example of an Association which should be nameless, and which lately had a convivial evening, including an array of "toasts." The speaker proceeded to urge home on his hearers the exhortations of Paul to Timothy—to realise their sonship, to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, to be capable workmen, rightly dividing the word of truth, and to count it their joy to be the servants (slaves) of the Lord who redeemed them.

Rev. F. Lillingston's address was cast in a lighter mould, but he did not fail to say many good as well as many humorous things. He counselled the young men to beware how they invested their life's capital, with its precious opportunities. Let them entrust it all to Christ, and He would teach them how to spend it. He liked the period of youth because of the "go," the resource, the manifold influence, and naturalness that are some of its characteristics.

Notwithstanding all the wise and weighty utterances of the speakers whom we have mentioned, we do not scruple to say that the good wine was kept to the last. We have not for a long time heard a speech that more impressed us, as being timely and well considered, and worth treasuring in the memory, than that of Dr. Donald Fraser, who was last on the programme. His text was the word "thorough," and he used, with great effect, a quotation from the writings of Mr. John Morley protesting against the "flaccid latitudinarianism" of the age, though of course it was applied in a different sense from that of the famous essayist. We want in these days, said the reverend Doctor, to have our minds braced up to more definite views and convictions of religious truth. It may be no great harm for our young men to hesitate long about many important questions. Such hesitation is far more creditable than a merely mechanical acceptance of the opinions of others. But after due investigation such hesitation, if harboured too long, may become chronic; it has a most weakening effect upon the soul, and produces that flaccid latitudinarianism that Mr. Morley has denounced. The needs of the age are a thorough repentance, a thorough conversion, a thorough Christian training, and a thorough devotion to the service of Jesus Christ.

In their happiest vein, Mr. Geo. Williams and Mr. T. A. Denny moved the thanks of the meeting to the Chairman, who re-echoed Dr. Fraser's motto-word "thorough." The next anniversary at Burlington Hall ought to show some fruit of all these fine speeches.

HUMILIATION AND PRAYER.

AS announced last week, meetings were held in different parts of the metropolis last Saturday afternoon, to make confession of national sins and ask the divine blessing on our land and rulers.

At the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, the attendance was much larger than has been seen on former similar occasions. It was found necessary to adjourn to the large hall. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who presided, read 2 Kings xxii. 8—20, and referred to some national sins on account of which there ought to be deep humiliation before God. Short addresses were delivered, but the most of the time was spent in waiting upon the Lord in confession, prayer, and thanksgiving. Many neighbouring ministers were present and took part.

The meeting at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, was presided over by Rev. William Reed, vicar of Wandsworth. Other clergymen and ministers took part in the devotional portion of the service, which was in entire harmony with the object of the meeting. Rev. Marcus Rainsford, whose frequent services in Down Lodge Hall have been so greatly blessed, delivered an appropriate address, in which he urged the necessity of personal humiliation before God, and the exercise of deep sincerity in respect to the things which we ask of Him in prayer. The meeting throughout was of a very solemn and impressive character, and it is earnestly hoped will lead to much believing prayer on behalf of our country and those who direct its affairs.

Eccleston Hall was well filled, and a true spirit of humiliation seemed to possess all. The two hours afterwards were spent in prayer and supplication, the Rev. Dr. Bennett, Mr. Donald Matheson, Captain Barry, the Rev. Charles Fox, and others taking part. Some very heart-searching and solemn words were spoken by Dr. Bennett, who drew attention to the many national sins as well as the lamentable falling away from the truth, as brought out at the Reformation, in so many churches at the present time.

Meetings were also held at the Stratford Conference Hall, the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, Exeter Hall, and 186, Aldersgate-street. The time was mainly spent in earnest prayer and confession. At Stratford, Rev. Mr. Ross, of Forest-gate, gave an address on "The Lord is King."

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.—Dear Sir,—You have on former occasions inserted in your columns short notices of the work of the Gibraltar Soldiers' Institute. Lieutenant-Colonel H. S. Clarke, Royal Artillery, the hon. secretary and treasurer, to whose indefatigable labours we of the committee have been mainly indebted for our funds, proceeded on duty to Mauritius last November, and begged me to act for him during his absence. We have ample proof of the institute having been a means of blessing to many a soldier at Gibraltar, a place abounding in temptations. If you could mention that during the absence on duty of the hon. secretary and treasurer, Lieutenant-Colonel H. S. Clarke, R.A., in Mauritius, subscriptions or donations, which are urgently needed, will be thankfully received by Colonel R. W. Sparks, 16, Dynevor-gardens, Richmond, Surrey, I should be truly grateful to you.—Yours faithfully,

Robt. W. Sparks.

"AT PEACE WITH GOD."

AT peace with God: the conflict past,
  The reign of self and Satan o'er;
The stubborn neck is bowed at last,
  Its King to worship and adore;
The rebel will, defiant long,
  That owned no sway its own above,
Is stormed within its fortress strong,
  And conquered by the God of love.

At peace with God: these hands of mine
  Are washed from every guilty stain,
No more to wound their Lord Divine,
  Or pour contumely on his pain:
My feet, on ruin's brink that stood,
  And in the path of scorners trod,
No longer spurn the precious blood,
  And trample thus the Son of God.

At peace with God: my hands, my feet,
  My heart, my will, submissive now!
Lord, lead me as Thou seest meet,
  Mine only at thy feet to bow:
Mine but to follow day by day,
  Or rough or smooth shall be the road;
Thy way will be my cheerful way,
  Lapped in the "perfect peace" of God.

At peace with God, O blessed peace!
  With calm delight that fills my soul,
Whose holy rapture will increase
  And strengthen, as the years shall roll:
E'en as the stream that seeks the tide
  With every mile will broader be,
So shall my peace grow deep and wide
  Through time and in eternity.

Stratford, Ontario. M. A. Maitland.

PROFESSOR MARTIN AT BOURNEMOUTH.

PROFESSOR MARTIN is giving a course of Bible-readings on "The Parables of our Lord," in the Presbyterian School-room. The last was on that of the discontented labourers, in Matt. xx. 1—16. The Professor said the occasion of it was Peter's question in chapter xix. 27, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed Thee: what shall we have therefore?" The Lord graciously told Peter and the other Apostles what their reward should be, and then in this parable He shows them that He has not given them this promise because they have a right to reward, but out of his royal bounty. The promise gave them a right, but they had no right to the promise. It was also intended to vindicate God's right at the judgment day to do just as He pleases in distributing his awards over and above what He has promised. Everyone will have what he has been promised. Many may have much more, and if they do, no one will have ground for complaint, for God has a perfect right to do what He will with his own.

CAUTION.—We have communicated with the police concerning a woman who calls on ladies in response to advertisements, appeals to their sympathies to pay her railway fare or otherwise help her, gives a false address, and is no more heard of. We beg our readers to beware of this impostor.

BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the last monthly meeting of the Western Board in Glasgow, Mr. Murray, of Peking, reported considerable sales of the Scriptures in spite of the war fever, and said that the Bible is making its way into high places. "Ladies of high degree frequently stop their carriage and send a servant for books." From Corea it was reported that the sales are small on account of the poverty of the people, who, however, so throng the depot on market days to read the books that they "have entirely worn out the mats at the front of the store." Two new colporteurs have begun work near Seetapore, India. From Belgium Pastor Anet in acknowledging a remittance adds, "Our evangelists would lose their most efficient colleagues were they deprived of the co-operation of the colporteurs." Some details were given of the distribution of New Testaments among those who have suffered from the recent earthquakes in Spain. A native pastor has undertaken this work at the request of the British and Foreign and National Bible Societies, who share the cost. A grant was made to the Presbyterian Church in Canada for colportage among the French Canadians

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

SURELY no class of this great community stands more in need of kindly sympathy and practical help than our working girls. They are heavily handicapped in the race of life, not only by the very constitution of their being, but by the strange conventionality that refuses to remunerate them on equal terms, proportionate to the service rendered, with the sterner and stronger sex. In those cases—and they are numerous—where there is an absence of family shelter and privilege, and where work is both scarce and scurvily paid, our toiling sisters are in a sorry plight indeed. Little wonder that they do not always withstand the special temptations that surround their difficult path.

These things are sadly trite, but familiarity with them has too often blunted the edge of our sensibility; and we come to acquiesce in that which we fancy we are powerless to prevent. Not so thought Mr. John Shrimpton, a few years ago, when, by the help of sympathising friends, he started the Homes for Working Girls, of which there are now eight in the metropolis, sheltering some 350 of these working queen bees in the world's mightiest hive. It does not seem very much compared with the illimitable need—only as a drop in the bucket; but if all the well-to-do Christians in London were equally alive to their social responsibilities and privileges, hardly any need of the kind would be unsatisfied.

Our immediate duty, however, is not to philosophise or even to exhort, but to record in brief the proceedings of a praise and prayer meeting at Morley House, Fitzroy-street, last Thursday afternoon. The company was not a large, but it was a deeply interested one. The opening song of praise was sung with a heartiness that indicated real thanksgiving to God for the mercies of the bygone year. Curiously, but not at all inappropriately, a canary, whose cage hung in the room, caught the spirit of the occasion and poured forth a flood of liquid thrilling melody that not even the combined human voices could emulate.

Mr. Shrimpton's short statement was crammed full of welcome facts and causes for praise to God in connection with the history of the eight Homes throughout the year. He was greatly delighted, he said, to have received many letters from ladies and gentlemen expressing sympathy with the work. Not a few, unable to be present, were at that hour praying for a continued meed of blessing upon it. In the course of the year eighty-six more beds had been added. Hyde House had been opened, and a considerable addition made to Morley House. The Homes were singularly popular; the spiritual tone of each house was most cheering; an air of brightness pervaded the entire work, and all connected with it. The comely and pleasant appearance of the interiors seemed to re-act on the dispositions and tempers of the residents. (There is here, by the way, a pregnant suggestion for English homes of every type.) As to the need for more Houses—who could question it? They were on the point of extending Woodford House, Islington, by annexation of the adjoining building; £350 had been promised out of the £1100 needed for that purpose. It was found that the houses answer equally well when they are tolerably large, and the expense of management is less in proportion to the smaller houses.

Mr. Shrimpton had some gratifying things to say about the popularity and profit of the monthly Bible-classes, and at the same time gave a hint to the lady patrons of these classes about the advantages of regular attendance. Mr. Shrimpton feels strongly about his pet work, and he does not mince his words either. The one jarring note he had to sound in his little speech may well give pause to the heads of London households. It was to this effect:—Some good lady, he said, wanted a domestic servant. He supposed she could not get one in London, as she sent 200 or 300 miles into the country for one. For some cause or other she did not suit, and at the end of the month she was shown the door, and cast adrift on the weltering sea of London life, 16s. being kept out of her wage for her railway fare from the north, which had been advanced. Happily, she found a welcome and a refuge in one of these Homes. Said Mr. Shrimpton, before sitting down, the heart of everyone must ache at what we see in our London streets. Within the last few days we have heard of several suicides from our Thames bridges. God knows, and we know to some extent, how dire is the need for sympathy and help among our working girls.

The pièce de resistance of the meeting was an admirably suggestive address from Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, which we much regret to have to compress into a sentence or two. From the tender regard shown towards his sick servant by the Centurion whom our Lord commended for his great faith, and from the action of Naomi, in seeking rest for Ruth, her daughter-in-law, Mr. Peploe skilfully drew the lesson that it is the part of the Christian Church in these times not only to build such Homes for the shelter of friendless young women, but to seek that they may know experimentally what it is to rest at the feet of our great Boaz, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Healer and the Saviour of his people, as well as the Provider for all their future life, both temporal and spiritual.

Friends who are not familiar with the working of these noble institutions, should ask Mr. J. Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's-inn-fields, W.C., to furnish them with some of his admirable reports and other literature.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

THE destitution in the city and country has been and is so great, and the demands upon our resources are so numerous, that with all our efforts in the past to provide accommodation for the really homeless and friendless children, we are at present crowded out. We feel necessity is laid upon us to enlarge our borders and build more houses, so that we may not have to turn away any deserving needy ones who appeal to us for help. We intend sending about 300 to Canada in the coming spring and summer, and that will in a measure relieve the pressure; but from the fact that during January sixty-two new cases were added to our numbers, in December forty-two, and November fifty-four, and that to all appearances there will be no diminishing of the applicants, the vacant places will be speedily filled up. The Govan-road Homes, in which we have 180 children, are to be given up at the May Term, and for the children there, as well as for those who will be taken in during the year, we will need to provide more house accommodation at Bridge of Weir Homes. Our aim is to double the accommodation we have at present at the Homes, so that instead of helping one new child every day, which we aimed at years ago and have accomplished, we may rescue two each day, or 700 yearly, in addition to the 1000 we may have in the Homes. For this purpose we will need £40,000, towards which two houses have already been given. The stores, school-room, church, and superintendent's house, which we are in immediate need of, will cost £7000. The fruits springing from such efforts as ours are so great that our wonder is not that so many have given to it, but that so few participate in the privilege it confers upon them in having fellowship with God.

In regard to the children we intend to send to Canada, the first party, consisting of 100 boys, will probably sail about the middle of March, the second about the end of April, and the third about the end of May. It has always been our custom not to send any child without the necessary £10 being in hand for its passage and outfit, and this year we will adhere to the same principle. Towards the £3000 for the 300 we have received about £630, leaving a little over £2000 to be provided before the end of May. We continue to receive most encouraging accounts of the children we have sent to Canada in former years; 95 per cent. of them continue to do well.

OBITUARY.

MRS. MARY PRUYN.

THIS well-known American lady missionary died lately at Albany, N.Y. She laboured earnestly and successfully for a number of years in Japan and China.

DR. G. D. PIKE.

The decease is recorded of this devoted friend of the coloured freemen in America. Many of our readers will remember him, as having visited Great Britain with the first company of Fisk Jubilee Singers.

REV. JAMES DAWSON.

News was received on 28th ult. by telegram of the death of Rev. James Dawson, Free Church of Scotland Mission, Chindwara, Central India. Mr. Dawson was known to many of our earnest Christian workers at home, whom he continued to help by prayer and liberality though far away in India. On his own field, cut off for long intervals from fellowship with others, in lonely journeys amid the Gond villages and the scattered tribes of the jungle, he sought for souls with rare devotion and diligence, and served the Master with unbroken constancy. The spirit of the man may be understood from these words lately received from him, "There is little or no manifest fruit of my labours; but we cannot give up. After Abraham had patiently endured, he obtained the promise (Heb. xi. 15.)". "We cannot give up" is a noble warrior-word to be on a man's lips at the dying hour!

OUR SOLDIERS IN EGYPT.

THE following is extracted from a recent letter to the Turkish Missions Aid Society (7, Adam-street, Strand) by Rev. Dr. Hogg, of Asyout, Upper Egypt:—

I have just returned from a six months' mission tour among the stations between Asyout and Assouan. I had a small class of four theological students with me. These studied and recited during the day, and attended the evangelistic services in the evenings and the congregational meetings on the Lord's Day. Having eight addresses to make of an average every week, you will hardly wonder that I sometimes wished that the students had stayed at home in the boat. I often gave them a hint to that effect, but they would not take it.

I have seen all the soldiers pass on their way to the front. Sometimes a convoy of them would lie by for the night where we were moored, and on these occasions I gave up the usual meetings, and spent the evening with such of the soldiers as were attracted by the notes of my harmonium to the mission boat. The last meeting of the kind, in which six or eight of the soldiers led in prayer after me, was at Esneh (between Luzor and Assouan), with a number of the Guards in Sir Herbert Stewart's battalion—the heroes of Abou Klea. They told me that a few nights before they had held a prayer-meeting in a school at Sohag, and were delighted to find native Christians able to join with them in the service of song. Many of them had given books to some of our school boys at the places where they stopped on their way up the river.

While at Luxor I had the privilege of accompanying Lord Wolseley and the members of his Staff through the ruins of Karnak, and back to Luxor. His Lordship manifested a good deal of interest in our mission work, and in leaving wished us all success in our noble enterprise. I assured him that there were many men, even in Egypt, praying for him and the success of his mission. I had an old man with me in the Ibis (elder Fam of Koos) who told me that morning that in his private devotions he never omitted to pray for Gordon, and those who were going to his rescue, though he was always fearing that the worst was about to happen both to him and them.

"CHINA'S MILLIONS."—We are glad to know that there has been a very large demand for the current number of this excellent periodical, which contains a full account of the recent Exeter Hall farewell. Single copies can be had either from this Office or the Office of the China Inland Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, N., one penny each.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Mackenzie, secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, has lately visited Hertford, Gloucester, and Chester, giving in each place evangelistic or Temperance addresses.

Woodham Walter, Essex.—Mr. Cornelius Smith and his wife have completed a week of special evangelistic services in this place. The chapel was insufficient to hold the people, so great was the interest manifested; great power rested on God's honoured servants, and on their messages to the people.

Coatbridge, N.B.—A most successful series of evangelistic meetings has been held here under the auspices of the Local Evangelistic Association; Mr. Hall, evangelist, preached every night. The presence and power of the Lord were manifest in all the services, and over eighty persons were dealt with as inquirers. Nearly all the ministers in the town took part in the meetings.

St. Michael's, North Kensington.—The mission held February 22 to March 1 at this church was the means of drawing a large number of persons who it is believed do not attend any place of worship. The missioners, Rev. T. J. Guest and Rev. R. J. Simpson, were most energetic in the work, and also in visiting the parish. If a tithe of the good seed sown should permanently flourish, the missioners will have much to be thankful for.

Rev. F. S. Webster, Principal of the Church Army Training Home, Oxford, is hoping to conduct Mission services next week in connection with Grove-park Church, Chiswick, commencing March 16. There will be Bible readings on the spiritual life at noon, and a Mission service at 3.30 every day in the church. In the evening aggressive work of an army character will be conducted in the district of Shand or the Green, a poor and populous part, much in need of Gospel light and life.

Belfast.—Your Belfast correspondent has unwittingly misrepresented a large section of his brethren in his statement regarding the projected mission of the Belfast Presbytery, of which he remarks:—"This is the first time that united action has been proposed by any of the leading denominations here." The fact is, that the clergy of the Church of Ireland in Belfast have repeatedly held a simultaneous mission week in all their churches.

Walter Riddall, A.M.,
Incumbent of Magdalen Church.

Christ Church, Finchley.—The recent mission services in this parish were very well attended. Rev. Preb. Anderson, Bath, Rev. W. C. Heaton, Rev. G. Plaford, and Rev. G. Howard Wright were the missioners, and they were assisted by Rev. H. Stephens, the vicar. Many of those who attended professed to have received benefit. Nearly 100 persons have applied for memorial cards. Rev. H. Stephens conducted prayer-meetings in the school, but the services for children, servants, and the general congregation were held in the church.

Abergavenny.—Our beloved sister in the Lord Jesus Christ, Miss Grace Owen, has been conducting a mission at the Priory. The gifted Welsh evangelist addressed her own people each Sabbath afternoon in their beautiful language, and preached the Gospel every night in English. They had crowded audiences, and several precious souls entered into the liberty of the children of God. Miss Owen left on the first inst. with the blessing of many, and fervent prayers that the Lord's work committed to her hands at Egremont, Cheshire, may have abundant success.

Blackgang, I.W.—Some fifteen days' Gospel services have been held at Mrs. Reade's Mission-hall by Mr. Joseph Hannington. The Lord's power has been manifested in the salvation of souls. Three most interesting addresses have since been given by Mrs. Hudson Taylor upon the China Inland Mission. Following this, Mr. J. B. Wookey held two meetings for men only, giving very powerful addresses upon Social Purity. Mrs. Wookey is expected to hold meetings for women only. Misses Hamilton and Reade are about to hold a mission at West Cowes.

Wood Green, N.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles King commenced a fortnight's mission at the Gospel Hall on the 1st inst. The meetings have been crowded to excess. Mr. King maintains a wonderful power over his audience, the attention being unbroken throughout. He relates various incidents of his life with telling effect. No anecdote is told for mere amusement; but at every turn there is a distinct "point" which he loses no opportunity of driving forcibly home. His expositions of Scripture have been very helpful to the believers present, while the solos rendered by Mrs. King pave the way for deep impressions.

Ashby-de-la-Zouch.—Mr. A. G. Marment, of Newcastle-under-Lyme, has held a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission with much profit. The Christian zeal and earnestness with which he presented the truth brought many converts.

Brechin, Forfarshire.—Evangelistic work has been going on here for three weeks, Mr. Joseph Cleworth being the mission preacher. The Christian people of the town have been rejoiced by the genuineness and solidity of his work. Mr. Cleworth's words arrested the attention of the people from the first, and the meetings increased in numbers. Many inquirers have been dealt with, and have made a Christian profession. Those who know the town well and have resided in it for long, say it has not been so moved since Mr. Moody's first visit to Scotland. A noticeable feature of the mission has been the number of young people who have been influenced. Many people in Brechin to-day are thanking God for Mr. Cleworth's visit. The ministers who took part in the work have been very greatly encouraged, and are looking to see results in many directions of the work that has been done.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

DURING the past week the evangelist held six meetings in Dr. A. Bonar's Church, which holds about fourteen hundred people. One realised fully from the spirit of the meeting that the Friend of little children was Himself present, pleading with them tenderly and lovingly to come to Him. The writer was but a child when brought to Christ at one of Mr. Hammond's meetings in Glasgow in 1861, and would bear witness to Christ's keeping power. At the daily noon prayer-meetings a number of prominent workers have testified to the manifest power of the Holy Spirit's presence in the evening services. Between three or four hundred children have professed to have given their hearts to Christ. Each of these have been carefully examined by appointed workers before being allowed to enter their names.

The committee are anxious that Mr. Hammond should remain for some time in Glasgow. He is gathering around him a band of noble workers, who delight in the work of pointing young people and children to Christ. Mr. McKeith, and those who have been engaged in various parts of Scotland for several years, have, for the present, given up their special work, in order that they may devote their whole time to assisting the evangelist. This week two meetings are to be held in the Queen's Rooms, so that the children in that neighbourhood may be able to attend. The evening meetings are to be held through the present week in Lansdowne U. P. Church.

MR. SPENCER WALTON IN BRIGHTON.

THIS happy mission has closed, as far as my church is concerned, and never was prayer more manifestly or graciously answered than in the blessings many amongst us are reaping. Mr. Walton's Bible-readings, full of thought, and showing careful preparation, have crowded the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. for fifteen afternoons. The church, which was more than half full at the first service, was crammed in every corner at the last, when the appeals and incidents of the mission preacher must have left deep impressions on many minds.

We have much to thank God for in "the Unity of the Spirit" manifested in the help rendered us by all sections of the Christian Church. The various workers have given in the names of over two hundred anxious ones who tarried to be dealt with. Mr. Walton is now conducting a mission at the Connaught Institute, and afterwards goes to West Brighton.

THE SOCIAL PURITY MOVEMENT.—An address was given by Mrs. J. B. Wookey, on the 5th inst., to a large audience of women in Bristol in connection with the Rescue Society of that town. Her words of warning and entreaty were listened to with deep attention and evident emotion. Mrs. Hickson, who presided, made the startling assertion that there are 1200 fallen women and girls in Bristol. The admirable address recently given by the Bishop of Melbourne on "Personal Purity, Home Life, and National Greatness," has been issued in neat pamphlet form by Messrs. Dyer Bros., Paternoster-square, as No. 1 of "The Knight of Purity" series.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE.*

WE have already briefly mentioned this remarkable book. Dr. Parker attracts an audience largely composed of business men, in the middle of the day, in the middle of the week, in the heart of London. But his writing is, to our thinking, still better than his preaching.

The series of volumes, of which the first is now before us, will, if the preacher be spared to finish them, mark an era in Biblical literature. We say the preacher, for the successive chapters are evidently discourses which have in substance been preached in the City Temple.

This is not, as the preface explains, a Bible Commentary in the usual sense of that word, but a pastor's commentary upon portions of Scripture of obvious and immediate importance to the growth of the soul in Divine wisdom.

The book is scholarly, but not scholastic, and is as readable as one of Charles Spurgeon's sermons. It is written in "the vulgar tongue," that is to say, in the best English language, so that one of the people does not require to read a sentence two or three times before he comprehends its meaning. In tone it is reverent and eloquent, sometimes sarcastic, humorous, or severe, but always genial, kindly, and humane.

It will be asked, How does Dr. Parker treat the great truth of Propitiation? Let the following extract answer:—

"The Bible contains the most startling proposition as to the destruction of sin. In some respects this is its supreme peculiarity. The action which the Bible proposes is infinitely more remarkable on the Divine side than on the human. How to take sin out of the world is the problem. Let the mind dwell upon the terms for a moment, that their import may be felt. How is sin to be met, overcome, ultimately and for ever destroyed? By a poor human struggle? By self-ablution? By self-meditation? Is sin to be taken away only by taking away the sinner? What originality would there be in so obvious and coarse a method? The question is how to save the man and destroy the sin, and the answer to an inquiry so vital cannot but be waited for with anxious impatience. In the midst of speculative debate upon the point, the Bible comes forward with this startling answer: God Himself will die, the Just for the unjust. If this be not the supreme blasphemy, it is the very Gospel of God."

The chapter on "The Spiritual Organ" begins with this quotation from Mr. Huxley: "Any tyro can see the facts for himself, if he is provided with those not rare articles, a nettle and a microscope." On this Dr. Parker asks: "Suppose the tyro should be provided with a nettle only? Mr. Huxley would properly reply that the inner structure and life of the nettle were microscopically discerned. . . . Precisely what St. Paul says: 'The things of the Spirit of God are spiritually discerned.'" You must have a microscope to see the inner structure of the nettle; a spiritual eye to see spiritual things. That kind of parabolic argument goes farthest with the people.

The chapters on the Unknowable God, the Personal God, and God the Explanation of All Things, are full of wise sayings, and the Notes for Preachers are a mine of thought and illustration. The subsequent volumes will give us occasion to refer again and again to the People's Bible; we trust that each succeeding one will fulfil the promise of this on Genesis.

THE FORTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Dundee Temperance Society and Gospel Temperance Union says:—"It is a significant fact that during the year 1884, signally a year of great depression and loss, close on £50,000 were added to the deposits in the Dundee Savings Bank. During the year the work of the Society has been actively prosecuted. The agent, Mr. Carter, has been successful in recovering many inebriates out of the snare of the demon drink.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' RESTS.

FEW methods of aggressive Christian work have more thoroughly commended themselves to the zealous, active members of Christian Churches than that adopted in the Strangers' Rests in London, Liverpool, and in many other ports at home and abroad.

The eighth anniversary of the Liverpool Rests—for there are now two—was celebrated in the capacious building in Park-lane, on Friday week, by two meetings; that in the afternoon was presided over by Rev. Dr. Harrison of St. Silas, and that in the evening by Rev. John Watson, Presbyterian. The report, read by the treasurer, Mr. T. A. Leigh (Alexandra-buildings, James-street), cited many deeply interesting incidents, being some of the results of the 554 English meetings which had been held during the past year. Meetings were also held on Sunday afternoons and evenings in a house in Park-lane, belonging to the Liverpool Lodging-house Company. Many of the ships in dock have been regularly visited, one worker in this department having himself distributed upwards of 16,000 Gospel portions, tracts, &c. Services for the various nationalities have been maintained throughout the year, 1063 meetings in all having been held in Park-lane Rest. Nearly 6000 sheets of notepaper with envelopes, for use on the premises, have been served out free of charge, and 192 bags have been filled with interesting reading for use in the forecastles of as many ships.

A second "Rest," consisting of a shop and first floor room, admirably situated in Lime-street, has been opened within the last three or four weeks. It has amply justified the faith and enterprise of its promoters. Two sets of Gospel meetings are held every week day, the earlier commencing at noon, and only ending when the time or strength of the workers is exhausted, congregations in relays being readily obtained to fill it so long as the doors are open. Free classes for teaching working men writing and arithmetic have already been started by two ladies at a convenient hour. The evening meetings commence at 7.30, and are also filled with eager and attentive listeners. After each service inquirers have been conversed with, and the workers are greatly encouraged. We are persuaded that in this effort to bring the Strangers' Rest method into operation in the heart of the City of Liverpool, a new departure has been taken in directly aggressive Gospel work which is full of promise, and may readily be adopted in every place where facilities offer. This increase of effort involves increased expense, which will doubtless be cheerfully met by the supporters of this well-established work. It also involves extra service on the part of the workers who have so long and cheerfully assisted by their sweet singing and other labours.

Brief addresses were delivered by the respective chairmen, by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Mr. Heber Radcliffe, Mr. Babcock, and Mr. Robert Burn, of Aldersgate-street, London. Each meeting was thrown open for suggestion and remarks from some of the active workers who were present. Reference was made, amongst other matters, to the work amongst emigrants, who will shortly be passing through Liverpool in large numbers; to the urgent need of faithful and sustained prayer; to the earnest expectation of conversion; to the need of more workers, especially those able to speak French, German, Spanish, Italian and Finnish; and those willing to "fish" and "button-hole" in the street, &c.

These happy meetings were brought to a close with praise and prayer, and with an opportunity successfully afforded for securing volunteers from the large gatherings for the various departments of service. We heartily congratulate the friends in Liverpool on the blessing and success which has crowned their eight years of patient, self-denying labour.

SOUTH AFRICA.—The allowance which had been entirely withdrawn by the French Government from the Missionary Schools in Lessonto, has this year been granted to the amount of £1000, about one third of the former subvention.

Letters to the Editor.

MR. GLOVER ON THE MORMONS.

DEAR SIR,—Seeing that you refer to my address at Bournemouth in reference to the Mormon question, permit me to say that I never to my knowledge used any language that could be, by the most illiterate, construed into a sanction of the Mormon belief; and only pointed out that it was a blot on our Christianity that these people, so far in many respects from the truth, should be able to teach us such a lesson. I simply used the word Christian (as all who heard me must have known) to show that they were not Mormons, and told them afterwards that the Mormons called all people but their own "Gentiles." True Christianity will never be helped by telling falsehood or hiding the truth, even about Mormons.

Truly yours, T. W. GLOVER.

[We willingly print Mr. Glover's explanation. We think, however, that an obvious lesson from Total Abstinence Mormonism is, that drink is not the only sin; and that if the devil has hold of men by polygamous adultery he gains credit by letting them be total abstainers. We hope that in future Mr. Glover's references to this accursed system will be as pronounced and uncompromising as those of Joseph Cook.—ED.]

A PLEA FOR FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with pleasure Mr. T. S. Henry's strong appeal for France. I feel emboldened to add my voice at this moment, when our hearts are still stirred with sympathy for the band who have set off for China. How many would fain follow them, but cannot? Might not some of these be led to ask themselves whether the reasons which bar their way to China are equally valid against going to the sister-country for Christ? It is such an easy thing to go to France and live there. So much English money is lavished there for every imaginable purpose. And yet I have often been ashamed to find that when it was not a question of health or pleasure, but of the Gospel, the matter of ways and means seemed to be the chief difficulty. Do none covet the honour of labouring there for Christ except the poor? I have sometimes asked myself, "Are there no Christians who have abundance, and who will offer all they have, with themselves, for France, as for China?"

The direct missionary results of work in France may be immeasurable. We complain that France injures our distant mission fields. The only cure for this evil is that France herself should become a missionary nation. Is this impossible? So far from that, I regard it as a sober probability that we may live to see it. When we shake our heads over French infidelity and wickedness, we forget what we were last century. When we talk of the supineness of French churches, we forget what our churches were before the revivals shook us to our centre. The French are far more awake than we were then; far more inquiring, far more ready to be worked upon for good. And the missionary spirit among the fresh young converts has often struck me. Only now, there is a French girl in England who is longing to go to China. She is told it is impossible in present circumstances. But the thought occurs, why should she not work in her own country? Alas! she must stay in England to earn her bread. Last week, a Frenchman going to the Congo, asked for introduction to missionaries. His heart had been touched for a long time, while attending one of Mr. McAll's halls, and before leaving he took—as far as man can judge—the decisive step, and goes out as a witness for Christ to that dark land. Such things are occurring every day.

The truth is, there is no country where the Gospel, once set in motion, will "run" so fast as in France. The people have a marvellous aptitude for communicating anything which they know. Their social qualities, their kindly interest in their neighbours, their command, not only of fluent and vivid language, but of logical and correct thought, are conspicuous down to the very lowest. I have often stood in wonder at the way in which the poorest children will express themselves.

When re-visiting Paris last summer, I made a point of trying to find out a little of the religious state of the people who do not attend mission-halls, as well of those who do. I found, certainly, a startling nakedness of infidelity beyond belief. But I could generally see that this infidelity was founded on complete ignorance of Christianity, and misconception of its nature. A little kindness, a little interest, would soon have brought these people (I felt) at least within the sound of the Gospel. But they are visited neither by Protestant nor Catholic. If one stumbles upon them to speak of Christ, it may be for the first and the last time in their lives. There is literally no man to care for their souls. The Christian workers cannot reach them, for their time is more than occupied with those whom they meet in the meetings. They cannot, however much they would, go from house to house to seek out the careless ones. I often felt that were ten times the number of workers to go as visitors simply, they would barely be known among the mass. Think of the band of workers a single district in London absorbs! Think of the street by street and house to house work! Think, too, of the complaints sometimes made that workers over-visit and trench on each other's bounds. And then think what London would be with a worker or two for miles of streets! Yet the door is quite as widely opened in Paris as in London, only the labourers are not there.

I say these things with the more earnestness, as the present commercial pressure is felt seriously by all the missions, so that, while they ought to be responding to the ever louder cry of need, it is all they can do simply to keep up existing agencies. But I am not at this moment pleading for help for any one mission. Reader, I want yourself for France. M. L. DODDS.

THE THEATRE.

DEAR SIR,—Touching theatre-going for Christians, we have lately had, in Hampstead, Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken's opinion. In one of his earnest and affectionate morning addresses for Christians he told us that "When we know the tendency of a thing, if we are seeking to live in communion with God, we don't need to ask, 'Is it right or is it wrong?' We know, and can judge and act accordingly. When we know that almost every play has adultery for its plot, we know the tendency of such things at once."

This plain and straightforward way of putting the question was very welcome to my heart and mind. On a recent Sunday afternoon, theatre-going and card-playing for Christians were being discussed in my presence. Waiting awhile, then thinking something was expected from me, I replied, "I have not the least desire for either. To be spiritually-minded is life and peace, and by the grace of God I wish to be that."

I know two families: in the one case, the children brought up to home-piety and earnest Sunday-school work; in the other, the children brought up to theatre-going and parochial work. There has been blessing and prosperity in the one case, and in the other there has been a very painful contrast. I cannot bear to see the placards of these things, and in one household where the children go to these places, their expression of countenance even is, to me, so painfully vulgar that this is a source of regret continually. "Whatsoever things are honest, true, lovely, and of good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things," for what the mind frequently dwells upon, influences the life, and is impressed upon the countenance. Yours most truly,

A MINISTER'S DAUGHTER.

KENSINGTON Y.W.C.A.—This branch was opened at 3, Allen-terrace, W., in 1883. Over 150 have passed through the classes, and there are now 100 members. Accommodation is provided for partial board and residence, which is greatly appreciated by any who are unexpectedly thrown out of employment. More books are needed for the library. Hon. Mrs. Charles Hobart Hampden conducts a Bible-class on Sundays. Further help of ladies is requested in visiting sick members, singing in social gatherings, and reading in workhouses. Miss C. Virgo is hon. sec.

CONCERT FOR THE BLIND BY THE BLIND.—The concert given annually by the pupils of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, on behalf of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, was held on Wednesday evening last week, at the schoolroom of St. Mary's, Whitechapel. The programme was of unusual interest. Extremely difficult music was played to perfection by several of the Norwood pupils. It is not difficult to understand how artists so admirably trained should be able to find lucrative engagements as organists, choir masters, and teachers. The concert was the first of a series which the Royal Normal College pupils are to give in Glasgow, Dundee, Edinburgh, Huddersfield, and Sheffield, for the benefit of the blind of those places. The Indigent Blind Visiting Society visits and relieves over 800 of the poorest blind of London. It employs eleven blind missionaries, gives work to about sixty blind women, and educates about 250 of both sexes in its various day classes.

Notices of Books, &c.

Two Snowy Christmas Eves. By Eliza Kerr. Wesleyan Methodist S.S. Union. 2s. This book has been written with good intentions, but they have scarcely been realised in the improbable story here recorded.

A Backward Glance on Childhood's Scenes. By C. F. West. Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d. A sweet testimony to the power and influence of a mother's love. That must be an extraordinary child who, reading it, does not experience a bracing sense of the worth of virtue.

My Lord's Money; or, The Consecration of Talents. Rev. Ernest Boys. Nisbet & Co. 1s. No one, after reading this, can doubt their possession of some talent, and it is the writer's aim to point out what the talents are, and how they should be used. Very wisely he does it, without any straining after impossible results.

Souls and Cities. W. Kent & Co. This is a professedly fictitious work by an anonymous author, and purports to set forth the troubles to which the pastors of voluntary churches are sometimes exposed. Doubtless there is a substratum of truth in the story, which is told with much literary skill; though, for the credit of the average Church members, we are fain to believe that the picture is overdrawn.

Tavern Missions. 4d. Nisbet & Co. The first part of this pamphlet was written by the late Mr. W. R. Ellis, who, for many years, superintended several public-house missionaries. Parts II. and III. recount the labours of the missionaries, and tell of numerous conversions, including those of landlords, who have in some cases had prayer meetings in their houses, and in others have abandoned the trade altogether.

Two little halfpenny books published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. are deserving of the attention of earnest Christians.—Shall I Smoke or Shall I Not? by a University man, is a calm, sober, and weighty examination of this subject addressed to believers; we would that all professing Christians addicted to the habit of smoking gave it a candid perusal.—After Death the Judgment, by Rev. M. Washington, is an extremely touching narrative of the experiences of one who was lost, and found, and saved.

Helps to Health: the Habitation, the Nursery, the Schoolroom, and the Person; with a chapter on pleasure and health resorts. By H. C. Burdett. 1s. 6d. Kegan Paul & Co. A vade mecum for the home, the title of which aptly explains its most useful contents. The reader may not find himself in perfect agreement with all that is prescribed, but, on the whole, we think there will be little difference of opinion as to the soundness of Dr. Burdett's practical counsels on questions of the first importance to physical well being.

The Further Proceedings of Mr. Truffle. By Rev. P. B. Power. Hamilton, Adams & Co. 6d. This is a deeply interesting and eloquent story, written on behalf of the Fund for Veteran and Disabled Missionaries of the London City Mission. Those who know the work, the unselfish lives of its workers, and the results brought about by this blessed Mission, will feel most at home in these pages. But those who are unfamiliar with its influence had better get the book at once. We leave its readers to peruse and answer for themselves Mr. Power's true and suggestive appeal.

British and Foreign Evangelical Review. Edited by Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson. Nisbet & Co. This Review maintains its high character under Dr. Paterson's editorship. "A Walk through Ancient Babylon," by Professor Delitzch, is deeply interesting. Mr. Wright, in article iv., gives strong corroboration of the simpler and older, but somewhat unfashionable view of Jephthah's vow. The article on Luther's Reformed Liturgy will interest many, and article iii. is most seasonable, now that Romanism is becoming aggressive in Protestant countries. "The Fall no Advantage" is not quite convincing, though ingenious.

Annals of the Disruption. By Rev. Thomas Brown. Macniven & Wallace. This is a circumstantial and reliable account of one of the most memorable periods of Scottish religious history, derived from the writings of some of the chief actors in the struggle. In the minds of all who deem the willing sacrifice of personal comforts and possessions, at the sacred call of devotion to principle, a thing to be admired and imitated, the year of our Lord 1843 will be a red-letter time in the annals of Christendom. This portly volume ought to help in embalming the stirring events recorded throughout its pages in the memory, not only of this, but of many succeeding generations.

The Monthly Interpreter. Edited by Rev. Joseph Exell, M.A. This magazine is chiefly critical and expository. The first essay, in the February number, shows clearly that in spite of its self-complacency, scientific unbelief is neither infallible nor invulnerable. "Law, Liberty, and Expediency" is an able and useful exposition of 1 Cor. vi. 12—20.

Wesley Anecdotes. By John Telford, B.A. Religious Tract Society. 1s. 6d. This little volume is neatly and systematically got up, but it is only a scrap of Wesley we get in reading through these well-remembered anecdotes. The compiler's good intentions are well carried out, but it is a pity that such "book-making" is rendered necessary by the absence of a thoughtful reading public.

Galilee in the Time of Christ. By Selah Merrill, D.D. Religious Tract Society. 2s. 6d. Although this little book is written chiefly outside the Gospels, it is a clear, reverent, copious, and evidently truthful description of the city of Galilee in the time of our Lord. New, fresh, and authoritative, with a list of the authors laid under tribute, and a copious index, the work is a gem, and must soon become popular.

Papers on Sunday-school Teaching. No. 1: The Character of the Work. No. 2: Qualifications desirable in Workers. By John Hewitt Tomlin. 2d. each. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union. After Dr. Trumbull's splendid volume on "Teaching and Teachers" there is nothing really new in these pamphlets. But as far as they go—and they are a veritable multum in parvo—teachers will be glad to slip them in their Bibles, for they contain help and encouragement in a few wise words.

The King's Palace. By Rev. J. H. Rogers, M.A., Incumbent of Christ Church, Pau. 1s. Morgan & Scott. This little book consists of Daily Meditations for a month on passages of Holy Scripture, each of which has special reference to some member of the body. For the first week the reader is directed to the heart; and under different aspects, that fountain, whether of good or of evil, is brought before the view. We have first the broken heart, then the new heart, the clean heart; and the portions for the week conclude with helpful words on the untroubled heart. The soul-converse of the second week is directed to the lips, and from seven different standpoints the privileges and the perils of speech are considered. The third week is occupied with seven portions on the eye, under these headings, amongst others: a single eye, an eye observant of God's ways, the unselfish eye, &c. The fourth week is taken up with the ears and the hands, in the contemplation of which various portions of Scripture are brought under notice, and profitable thoughts upon them are given. The book concludes with three portions, containing reflections on the feet, as instruments in serving God: walking in God's ways, walking circumspectly, walking perseveringly.

Story Books. A few of those recently received may be grouped together. The Secret of Ashton Manor House; the Mystery of Grange Drayton. By Eliza Kerr. 2s. each. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union. In these two tales the gifted authoress succeeds, not only in engrossing the interest of the reader from beginning to end, but in pressing home some valuable lessons as to character and conduct. Everyday Life, by E. A. Bromehead (Elliot Stock), hardly comes up to our expectations of such a comprehensive title. It is, nevertheless, a most interesting and entertaining work for young people, remarkable for the amount of information in natural history that is interwoven with the story, and remarkable also from the circumstance that it is strictly "founded on facts." Kate's Mother, by Ellen Hodgson (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), is a homely tale very charmingly told of humble family life, with its trials, and sorrows, and loves; its disappointments and compensations. The heroine is the mother of the family who had learned the great secret of taking her burdens to the great Burden-bearer, but she was also happily situated in other respects. It is a thoroughly natural story, and one that will help to elevate and purify the life of the household. Dearer than Life, by Emma Leslie (Religious Tract Society), is a graphically told tale of the times of Wycliffe, when it cost something to be a true and simple-hearted disciple of Christ. There is a rich flavour about the story, which has many points of attraction, and is altogether of absorbing interest. Of a very different cast is Hampered, by Mrs. A. K. Dunning, (same publisher), which introduces us in a pleasant way to modern family life in America. The lesson, however, is the same—that the way of lasting happiness is the way of self-denial and daily cross-bearing. These tales embody many a valuable truth that may find an entrance into the lowliest hearts.

Notes on Rescue Work. By Arthur Brinckman. G. J. Palmer. 2s. 6d. The author, who is Chaplain to St. Agnes' Hospital, and has for many years taken an active part in rescue work, writes these "hints to those who wish to reclaim the fallen," out of an experience which well qualifies him to speak. This manual is full of well-digested facts and concisely stated counsels, by a High Churchman, but none the less for that reason deserving the study of those to whom it is addressed.

A defence of Professor Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" will be commenced in The Expositor for April.

What Hinders? By Mrs. R. D. Bolton. Wade & Co. 1d. Good, practical, common-sense talk, dealing forcibly with the objections raised to the practice of total abstinence.

Messrs. Alfred Boot & Son have designed a useful Office Calendar for 1885 of enamelled block-tin. In the centre of the tablet is a receptacle for a copy of "Murray's Time-tables," and memo. slips of a handy size.

The new volume by Dr. S. Cox, the late editor of The Expositor, will be published early next month by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, under the appropriate title of "Expositions." It consists of thirty original discourses on subjects of varying interest.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on mission at Framlingham, Suffolk, by James Neech, March 15 to 29.——For a mission in the village of Hilton, near Derby, April 7 and 8, by Mr. H. Thorne.——For five days' Gospel services by Opie Rodway, at Coombedown, near Bath, from March 14.——For much blessing on the annual meeting of the Sermon-lane Mission.——For a mission in Ryde, to be conducted by Captain Dawson and Mr. J. B. Bain, March 18 to 30.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—We had very full and blessed meetings on the 6th inst., definite and earnest prayers, and thanksgiving for answers given at previous meetings. Mr. George Holland gave a thrilling account of East-end work; Mr. Coote advised "Not my own" to be written upon everything; Rev. G. Arbuthnot spoke on what God wants his people to be and to do. Others directed attention to the Holy Spirit as fire. The evening meeting was crowded, and several souls were brought to surrender themselves fully to the Lord.

C. Mason.

OUR SOLDIERS IN EGYPT.—Dear Sir,—Our new Institute at Alexandria has been successfully opened. Our workers write very thankfully of the progress made. Over 300 sailors and soldiers sat down to tea on the opening day. Afterwards about 400 of the chief British and foreign residents assembled at the formal ceremony performed by General Lennox, V.C., C.B., commanding at Alexandria. I earnestly ask help from those able to give it, either for the Alexandria work, or for the wives, widows, and children at home.

Yours very sincerely, Sarah Robinson.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

POST-OFFICE EMPLOYES.—The annual Social Gathering in connection with the Edinburgh Post-office Employés' Weekly Prayer-meeting, took place on Wednesday evening last week, under the presidency of Mr. David Harris, who delivered a stirring address. The principal treat of the evening was, undoubtedly, Dr. Moxey's admirable rendering of "Tit for Tat," a reading vividly describing the unhappy death-bed scene of a prayerless husband. Rev. D. R. Key offered some very practical remarks on the advantages of the weekly gatherings for prayer, meditation, and exhortation. Several other addresses followed. The crowded attendance of post-office employés and friends promises well for the future success of the meetings.

THE MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, W., reports a large number of consultations during the year just past. Some thousands of visits were paid by Dr. Robert Chambers the homes of the sick, and by the nurses too. The word spoken at the midday services has been abundantly blessed. We give one case as a specimen. A woman who had been ill some time, said one day in the consulting-room: "I bless God He made me ill, and directed me to come here. When I first came it was only to get medicine; I cared nothing about my soul. But you spoke so plain, and said that God would punish sin, and I then knew I was a great sinner. Then you told how that Jesus died for our sins, and I saw it all so plain. I have trusted Jesus ever since, and now am so happy." The work of the nurse has been much owned of God, as extracts from her journal amply show.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

MARCH 12.—MARK XV.

v. 2.—"Art Thou the King of the Jews?" Five times in this chapter Christ is spoken of as the King of the Jews, and once as "the King of Israel," and in this verse He declares Himself to be so. Yet was He then, as now, a King disowned, rejected, and despised by his subjects. He was King of the Jews de jure, though not de facto, and Pilate's sarcastic proclamation of the Kingship of Christ, in the superscription he caused to be placed over his cross (ver. 26), was the announcement of a fact yet to be realised. The brief dominion of death over Him on the cross was not the death of his dominion; but only the path by which He rose to secure his crown.

v. 34.—"Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?"—It is remarkable that Jesus, in this cry, used the native Syriac word for "my God," instead of the current Greek word. One touching reason for this is, that the Greek translation in common use does not give the precise force of the Hebrew word for God employed in the verse He quoted. Just then, when He was being "crucified in weakness," it was the very word for God that He wanted—the word "El," which signifies strength, and is the name for God as the Mighty One. His cry was, "My Strength, my Strength." Although in that hour of darkness He does not utter the happy cry, "My Father," He, as the perfect man, clung fast to his rock, held on through all the blows of "the waves and billows;" and, even in this short burst of language in agony, applied to God the word "My" twice over, appropriating the "Living Strength" as his very own. Let me do the same. If I have to wait for the light of his countenance, let me hold on in the darkness with "a desperate faith," and gradually learn to sing:—

"Thou know'st my soul does dearly love
The place of thine abode;
No music drops so sweet a sound
As these two words—'My God.'"
Dr. Stanford.

MARCH 13.—MARK XVI.

v. 3.—"Who shall roll us away the stone?"—Good hearts cannot be so solicitous for anything under heaven, as for removing those impediments which lie between them and their Saviour. O blessed Jesus! Thou who art clearly revealed in heaven, art yet still both tied and sealed up from too many here on earth; neither is it some thin veil that is spread between Thee and them, out a huge stone, even a true stone of offence, lies rolled upon the mouth of their hearts. Yea, if a second weight were superadded to thy grave here, no less than three spiritual bars are interposed betwixt them and Thee above; idleness, ignorance, unbelief. Who shall roll away these stones, but the same power that removed thine? O Lord, remove our ignorance, that we may know Thee; our idleness, that we may seek Thee; our unbelief, that we may find Thee, and enjoy Thee.—Bishop Hall.

v. 7.—"Tell his disciples and Peter."—A special message to Peter, who had denied his Master, and in his repentance might fancy himself outside the circle of disciples. Christ does not break the bruised reed.

v. 7.—"That He goeth before you:" lit., "leadeth you as a Shepherd."—The message of the angels was a renewal of the promise of Jesus at the Last Supper (Mark xiv. 28). Christ never forgets his appointments.—Dr. Lindsay.

v. 19.—"He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God."—O my soul, how should this heighten thy joy and enlarge thy comforts in that Christ is now received up into glory! Every sight of Christ is glorious, and in every sight thou shouldest wait on the Lord Jesus Christ for some glorious manifestations of Himself. Come, live up to the rate of this great mystery, view Christ as entering into glory, and thou wilt find the same sparkles of glory on thy heart. Oh, this sight is a transforming sight. "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18). —Isaac Ambrose.

MARCH 14.—LUKE I.

v. 26.—"To a city of Galilee, named Nazareth."—The first announcement of the Saviour's advent is connected with shame and humiliation, and points to the fact of his loving concern for the salvation of sinful men. Dr. Young says: "Galilee was disreputable even in Judea, wicked as it was; and even in Galilee Nazareth was notorious for the ignorance and profligacy of its inhabitants. It is a recorded fact that Christ's connection with this place, merely as a dweller in it, created a prejudice against Him, and attached a stigma to his name. The question was put as if it contained its own answer: 'Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?'"

v. 34-38.—The Annunciation to the Virgin.—Godet remarks: "What exquisite delicacy this scene displays! What simplicity and majesty in the dialogue! Not one word too many, not one too few. A narrative so perfect could only have emanated from the holy sphere within which the mystery was accomplished."

v. 74.—"That we, being delivered from our enemies."—What does this show, a statement inspired by the Holy Ghost, but that, as deliverance must be the indispensable prelude to service, so a happy, holy, and continuous service in the presence of God our Saviour is the proper consequence of the deliverance? Happy, because "without fear" (for "fear hath torment, but perfect love casteth out fear"); holy, because "in holiness and righteousness;" continuous, because "all the days of our life;" in his presence, because "before Him."—Stevenson A. Blackwood.

MARCH 15.—LUKE II.

v. 25.—"The same man was just and devout."—Simeon combined the three characteristics of Old Testament piety: justice as regarded his relation and bearing to God and man; fear of God, in opposition to the boastful self-righteousness of Pharisaism; and above all, longing expectancy of the near fulfilment of the great promises, and that in their spiritual import as "the Consolation of Israel."—Edersheim.

v. 30.—"Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—Simeon knew Christ as soon as he saw Him, and embraced Him as soon as he knew Him, and enjoyed Him as soon as he embraced Him; so some know the word of God as soon as they hear it, and believe it as soon as they know it, and feel the comfort of it as soon as they believe it. There may be many sights of Christ: not all go up to the Mount as Peter, James, and John (Matt. xvii. 1); not all see his face, with Moses (Exod. xxxiii. 19); not all sleep in his lap, with John (John xiii. 33); not all are taken up into heaven, like Paul; not all embrace Him in their arms, with Simeon. But as pleaseth God, so He showeth Himself unto us: and all that love Him, both see Him and embrace Him. We see Christ when we hear his word; and we embrace his salvation when we believe it; they see Him that hear Him; they embrace Him that follow Him.—Henry Smith.

v. 36-38.—"One Anna, a prophetess."—An overlooked character, but one well worthy of careful consideration. Seven things appear in her history worthy of imitation. (1) She was devoted to God in heart and life; (2) she was moved and led by the Spirit of God; (3) she was waiting for Christ; (4) she spake of Him; (5) she was one whose conduct bore out her testimony; (6) she was of a thankful spirit; (7) she laboured for the good of others, specially those "who looked for redemption."

MARCH 16.—LUKE III.

v. 4.—"The voice of one crying in the wilderness." —The messenger is not named; his person is of so little consequence, that it is lost in his message. The words in the desert may, in Hebrew as in Greek, be taken either with what precedes: "Cries in the desert," or with what follows: "Prepare in the desert." It matters little; the order resounds wherever it is to be executed. Must we be satisfied with a general application of the details of the picture? or is it allowable to give a particular application to them? to refer, for instance, the mountains that must be levelled, to the pride of the Pharisees; the valleys to be filled up, to the moral and religious indifference of such as the Sadducees; the crooked places to be made straight, to the frauds and lying excuses of the publicans, and, lastly, the rough places, to the sinful habits found in all, even the best? However this may be, the general aim of the quotation is to exhibit repentance as the soul of John's baptism.—Godet.

v. 21-23.—The Baptism of Jesus.—"Baptism is burial and resurrection; we are buried by baptism, because in Adam we are dead, and in this act would confess our state, even while by faith in God's love we claim, through the death of self, a higher lineage. Christ, as Son of Adam, through a mystic burial, figuring that other baptism, when all God's waves and billows went over Him, here takes the place of Adam's Son, and thus, through death, brings man into the higher relationship as Son of God. Thus linking Himself with us in our shame, He takes a place from whence henceforth He can meet the vilest of Adam's children, and, because He has another life, lift them up with Him into heavenly places."—Jukes.

v. 23-38.—The Genealogy.—This is given at his baptism and not at his birth, to show us how the Son of Adam claimed a higher lineage by mystic death and resurrection, than by mere natural descent. Godet observes: "The words 'of God,' with which it ends, are intended to inform us that it is not through ignorance that the genealogist stops at Adam, but because he has reached the end of the chain; perhaps, also, to remind us of the truth expressed by Paul at Athens, 'We are the offspring of God.'"

MARCH 17.—LUKE IV.

v. 1-13.—The Temptation of Jesus.—No holiness exempts from temptation in this world of sin.

v. 8, 9.—He overcame the tempter, and so secured victory for all who trust in his name, and are strong in his strength. His chosen weapon in the struggle was the Word of God, that "sword of the Spirit" which all his followers are instructed to take with them into the strife. The devil also quoted Scripture, seeking to make it a means of ensnaring the Holy One of God, but he both misquoted and misapplied its truths: hence learn the need for care, and spiritual teaching, in the study of the Word.

v. 13 informs us that the devil only departed from Jesus "for a season." Long as life lasted He was open to the assaults of the enemy; it was a lifelong conflict, but it was also an eternal victory.

"As surely as He overcame,
And triumphed once for you,
So surely you who love his name,
Shall triumph in Him too."

v. 22.—"The gracious words that proceeded out of his lips."—What was ever more sweet than the truth of Christ? When He spake Himself, they all hung upon his lips (ver. 20), as a man hangs upon the lips of another whom he desires and delights to hear speak, and they marvelled at the gracious words that came out of his lips. Grace was in his lips (Ps. xlv. 2). All was sweet that came from Him, for it came from the excellency of his Spirit. His words were dyed in the affections of his heart. In the learned language, the same word signifieth speech and reason, to intimate that speech is but the current of reason from the heart, the seat of reason. Therefore Christ's speeches were sweet, because his heart was sweet, full of all love, grace, mercy, and goodness. His heart was a treasure; his lips must need, then, be sweet. Beloved, therefore let us hence take a trial of ourselves, what our condition is, whether the words that come from Christ when He speaks in his ministry to us be sweet or not.—Rich. Sibbes.

MARCH 18.—LUKE V.

v. 1-10.—The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.—

v. 5.—Peter had felt the force of Jesus' words; he showed a like faith in the words "bid me," &c. (Matt. xiv. 28).

v. 8.—We best recognise our own sinfulness when we best recognise the glory of God. Ver. 9 teaches us that even God's benefits should teach us to fear Him; see chap. v. 26, vii. 16. This awe is here specially recorded as seizing those three men who were afterwards foremost among the Apostles. Every work of God is intended to teach, and it is well to seek in each its lesson. Simon is singled out in v. 10; it is a peculiarity of Luke to definitely mention the persons addressed by the Saviour. See chap. vi. 20, 27, ix. 23, xi. 45, xvi. 1, et seq.—Bengel.

v. 11.—"They forsook all, and followed Him."—They had given their names to Him before (John i. 43), but now they see by this miracle his power to provide for them. They leave all to live with Him. We love to see how we shall subsist.—Trapp.

v. 16.—"He withdrew Himself into the wilderness and prayed."—Or rather, "He frequently withdrew into the desert." This I believe to be the import of the original words. He made it a frequent custom to withdraw from the multitudes for a time. Why is there so much preaching, and so little good done? Is it not because the preachers mix too much with the world, keep too long in the crowd, and are so seldom in private with God. Reader! art thou a herald for the Lord of Hosts? Make full proof of thy ministry. Let it never be said of thee, "He forsook all to follow Christ, and to preach his Gospel, but there was little or no fruit of his labour: for he ceased to be a man of prayer, and got into the spirit of the world. Alas! alas! how is this luminous star, that was once held in the right hand of Jesus, fallen from the firmament of heaven down to the earth."—Dr. A. Clarke.

Mission and other Appeals.

A French Evangelistic Journal.—Sir,—I observe with satisfaction that the Témoin de la Vérité is wont to cheer the few struggling Christians in the West of France by epitomising the records of Christian work from your columns. It is published at the sole charge of one Christian gentleman, and has been the means of both winning and strengthening souls. The extensive gratuitous circulation has created a deficiency, though that paper is gradually reaching a solvent condition. Any help for this bold and worthy servant of the Lord will be gratefully forwarded to him.—W. L. Lang, 1, Oxford-villas, Balham-road, S.W.

Bishop Gobat's Memorial School, Jerusalem.—An appeal is made on behalf of this institution, which is chiefly dependent on voluntary contributions from friends of the late Bishop Gobat in England, Germany, Switzerland, and elsewhere. These contributions are gradually diminishing as its friends pass away. The deficiency for last year is about £150, and unless the funds are permanently increased the school must be considerably reduced, if not entirely closed. Contributions may be sent to the Rev. J. Zeller Jerusalem, or the Lay Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

A Missionary Memorial.—It is proposed to commemorate the long and useful life of Mrs. Kennedy, who entered into rest at Benares on November 1, 1884, by the appointment of a Bible-woman. The sum of £500 invested will produce a sufficient salary for the Bible-woman. Contributions received by Mr. G. B. Pasley, 35, Vernon-terrace, Brighton.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, March 7, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.

£1,000 are urgently needed to buy the Cottage which has hitherto served as a Hospital, as the owner wishes to sell it at the end of the year, and no other suitable house can be found. God's blessing has been resting on the work of love carried on within its walls; and not only Spaniards, but also English, French, Germans, &c., have found there healing for their bodies, and many also peace for their souls, so that it would be a great loss to the Protestant cause at Barcelona if it had to be closed.

Mr. Henry Gamble, at Torquay, has kindly promised to give £50, if the remaining £950 can be raised before the end of the year, but as yet only £20 have been received towards this special object. The Readers of The Christian started this work of love in Barcelona by their subscriptions; I trust, therefore, they will again come to our help in this time of need. Prov. xix. 17.

The smallest gifts will be gratefully received and acknowledged by me.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

CASES FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF DISEASED LUNGS.
THOMAS POPE, ESH WINNING, near DURHAM.

This remarkable case was brought under my notice by MR. ERNEST FOSTER, of 18, West-terrace, Esh Winning, Waterhouses, Durham, in May last. The patient, a steady, industrious man, with a very large family, sought that help from me which I will cheerfully give in all well-accredited cases of need. He had been recommended also by Dr. M. (the colliery medical adviser) to adopt my treatment.

The patient's illness originated with a severe cold. Acute pains in the left lung followed, with constantly difficult breathing. Green expectoration with occasional mixture of blood. There were hectic flushes, profuse perspirations, great loss of flesh, strength rapidly declining. The patient says:—"Three local doctors all say, 'lungs diseased.' One recommends your treatment."

In three days after following the advice then sent by letter, the patient commenced to improve (the reader must not suppose that in all cases there is an immediate improvement, nor should any patient be discouraged if some time elapse before any visible amendment). The symptoms gradually abated after this. There was an occasional relapse, and sometimes there appeared to be a standstill. But in three months his own doctor reported his lungs nearly well.

Great interest was felt in this case, and the correspondence continued until December. In a letter dated Dec. 16, Mr. Ernest Foster writes as follows:—"I am pleased to bear my testimony to the wonderful efficacy of your treatment for Consumption, as proved by the perfect restoration to health of Mr. Thomas Pope, who after being given up as past human help has been restored by you (under God).

"Any one who had seen him in May last, when he applied to you, could hardly believe him now to be the same person. Then he seemed as though a very short time would put an end to his suffering; now he looks the picture of health, and is able to follow his occupation.

"He has been without medicine for several weeks to test his cure, and has had no returning symptoms.

"Many other remarkable cases have come under my notice, which I shall be glad to refer to should you wish. You are at perfect liberty to make any use of this that you please.—Yours faithfully, ERNEST FOSTER.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

WORKS BY D. L. MOODY.

THE WAY TO GOD. A Series of Addresses on the Way of Salvation.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"This is a book which Christian people should read, and lend and give away. It is straightforward, homely, and interesting, very faithful, and full of truth."—Christian Miscellany.

"The illustrations and anecdotes are apposite and pointed, evangelical in doctrine, devout in spirit, telling in style."—The Freeman.

"The addresses are full of pathos, point, and power, and cannot fail to be the means of quickening and blessing wherever read."—Primitive Methodist.

"Characterised by that homeliness, directness, clearness, and power, which are the well-known qualities of the speaker. The chief aim of the book is to point out the way of salvation."
Evangelical Christendom.

SOVEREIGN GRACE: Its Source, its Nature, and its Effects.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"These short and telling Gospel Addresses are just the kind of message men need. The ordinary difficulties, the hindrances and objections, are all here met; this, too, in such a way as to disarm criticism and awaken sympathy."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Rich in all that simple evangelical teaching of which Mr. Moody is a master. Cannot fail to be very useful."—Christian Age.

"No part of his work will be more congenial than the proclamation of the full, free, and sovereign grace of God, manifested towards men in the gift of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world."—Literary World.

DANIEL THE PROPHET. An Amplification and Extension of Mr. Moody's various Lectures on the Life of Daniel.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth, 1s.

"These most profitable addresses do not need any commendation from us."
Footsteps of Truth.

"The book, like all the work of this evangelist, is brief, telling, and full of Scripture truth. Just the book to put into the hands of a young man who wants to walk in the narrow way."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Consists of seven addresses, among the most trenchant and popular that Mr. Moody has ever delivered."—Christian Leader.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

WHAT SHALL I DRINK?

The LANCET says:—"We counsel the public to drink their Lime-Juice whenever and wherever they list. As a rule, Lime-Juice is, particularly during the summer, a far more wholesome drink than any form of alcohol. Ask for Cadbury's

REFRESHING

Cocoa

"It is often asked, 'Why does my doctor recommend Cadbury's Cocoa?' The reason is, that being absolutely genuine and concentrated by the removal of the superfluous fat, it contains FOUR TIMES THE AMOUNT OF NITROGENOUS OR FLESH-FORMING CONSTITUENTS than the average in other Cocoas which are mixed with sugar and starch."

"Nonpareil"

The "Nonpareil" is the richest, softest, and most becoming Velveteen ever produced, and is pre-eminently suited for Ladies' Indoor and Outdoor Costumes, Boys' Suits, and Children's Dress.

The "Nonpareil" Velveteen suits old and young, boys and girls, brides and chaperons. The woman does not exist whom this lovely fabric does not become. It well merits the name "Nonpareil," for it has no equal in grace and beauty.

The finer qualities are equal in appearance, and wear better than the very best Lyons Silk Velvet, and cost only a quarter of the price. Can be purchased of all leading Retailers at from 2s. to 6s. per yard.

FAST PILE
FAST DYE
Velveteen.

LADIES are warned against the false pretences of those Drapers who, not having the "NONPAREIL" VELVETEEN in stock, seek by misrepresentation to foist upon their customers a common make of Velveteen. For the protection of the public, the genuine "Nonpareil" has the Trade Mark stamped on the back of every yard, thus ladies can protect themselves by always turning to the back of the fabric to find this evidence of genuine quality.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES,

In order to Abiding Communion with God. Also Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study; and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Readings. By Dr. ANDERSON, M.R.C.S. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Full of valuable thoughts, tersely expressed; evinces a thorough acquaintance with the original tongues; and contains many practical suggestions for Bible Reading and Study." Word and Work.

MARRIAGE AND HOME.

A Volume of Kindly Counsels to the Newly-Married. In cloth binding, gilt edges, in white and light delicate tints, 2s. 6d.; leather binding, in white, scarlet, purple, or blue, 4s. 6d. Each copy is sent out in a neat cardboard box.

A very appropriate Present for the Wedding Day; and equally suitable as a Gift on the arrival of the Bride and Bridegroom at Home.

"A pretty little bridal present, containing very sound and sensible advice."—Watchman.

BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY OF TEXTS FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

A Series of Scripture Texts and Meditations for every Day in the Year. Cheap Edition.—Cloth back, 2s.; toned paper, cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Editions.—Leather back, leatherette sides, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Whole bound in leather, gilt edges, 5s.

"BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY" has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books except the "Pilgrim's Progress" have been so largely circulated or so widely read.

THE 5S. EDITION OF CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

The special feature of this edition is the New Translation of the Proper Names of the Old and New Testaments, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated," &c. Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.; Library Edition, half bound in leather, 10s. 6d.; Illustrated Edition, with Twelve exquisite Steel-plate Engravings and Six coloured Maps, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate."
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

BY REV. PAYSON HAMMOND

Educational.

SEASIDE, Southport. — Superior School for Young Ladies. Conducted by a member of the Church of England (Evangelical), assisted by English and foreign governesses, and eminent visiting professors. Pupils prepared for Trinity College examinations. — Miss Poole, Eagley Bank, Southport. Referees, Rev. Canon Clarke, Southport, and Rev. John Burbidge, Everton-road, Liverpool.

HOLLAND HOUSE, Clarence-parade, Southsea.—School for the Daughters of Gentlemen. Special educational advantages, with home comforts and care. Indian charges received. References kindly permitted to the parents of present and former pupils. Prospectus on application to the Principal.

LONDON.—First-class Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate Professors — their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles. — Delta, Boddington's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. Fleming can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful, Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations which are optional. Resident foreign and English governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 guineas.

MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE FOR YOUNG LADIES, Larkbeare, Exeter, Devon (For Resident Pupils only). In association with, and under the same supervision, are Erdsleigh House, London, and Clarendon House, Topsham. Misses Bamber and Churton, with the Misses Pope, assisted by an efficient staff of certificated teachers and visiting professors, offer every educational advantage to parents seeking a high-class education, with Christian training, for their daughters. Numerous references to parents, clergymen, and ministers in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and abroad.

HASTINGS.—Wellington College for Ladies.—The object of the Council is to provide in this seaside healthy town an education of the best possible kind, based on Christian principles. An excellent gymnasium is attached, also Kindergarten. — For prospectus, apply to the Secretary, the Rev. F. Leaver, Chalvington Rectory, Sussex, or 4, Wellington-square, Hastings.

SWITZERLAND.—Rev. Ed. and Madame Descombaz receive a few young Ladies who have every educational advantage combined with a most comfortable home. Beautiful situation on the Lake of Geneva. TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. Thorn, Paddington, London.

MR. EDWIN ARROWSMITH, of The Children's Special Mission Services, strongly recommends any parents desiring the comforts and privileges of a kind Christian home, combined with the best education and training possible, for their daughters, to apply to D. THE KING'S PALACE.

A SERIES OF

Readings for each Day of the Month.

By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A., Incumbent of Christ Church, Pau.

This little book is intended to be personal, particular, and practical.

It starts from the fact that we are saved for service; and its suggestions are founded on the certainty that He who has saved us will help us to serve; and that the means of our obtaining this help is simply a living faith.

It offers to busy people one thought each day in connection with the service of our bodies, and gives two or three words of prayer as suggesting a particular petition.

Cloth Limp	1s. 0d.

WORKS BY D. L. MOODY.

THE WAY TO GOD. A Series of Addresses on the Way of Salvation.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"This is a book which Christian people should read, and lend and give away. It is straightforward, homely, and interesting, very faithful, and full of truth."—Christian Miscellany.

"The illustrations and anecdotes are apposite and pointed, evangelical in doctrine, devout in spirit, telling in style."—The Freeman.

"The addresses are full of pathos, point, and power, and cannot fail to be the means of quickening and blessing wherever read."—Primitive Methodist.

"Characterised by that homeliness, directness, clearness, and power, which are the well-known qualities of the speaker. The chief aim of the book is to point out the way of salvation."
Evangelical Christendom.

SOVEREIGN GRACE: Its Source, its Nature, and its Effects.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"These short and telling Gospel Addresses are just the kind of message men need. The ordinary difficulties, the hindrances and objections, are all here met; this, too, in such a way as to disarm criticism and awaken sympathy."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Rich in all that simple evangelical teaching of which Mr. Moody is a master. Cannot fail to be very useful."—Christian Age.

"No part of his work will be more congenial than the proclamation of the full, free, and sovereign grace of God, manifested towards men in the gift of Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world."—Literary World.

DANIEL THE PROPHET. An Amplification and Extension of Mr. Moody's various Lectures on the Life of Daniel.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth, 1s.

"These most profitable addresses do not need any commendation from us."
Footsteps of Truth.

"The book, like all the work of this evangelist, is brief, telling, and full of Scripture truth. Just the book to put into the hands of a young man who wants to walk in the narrow way."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"Consists of seven addresses, among the most trenchant and popular that Mr. Moody has ever delivered."—Christian Leader.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Specially suitable for Easter Distribution.

AN EASTER STORY.

NELLY SCOTT: The Orphan Child.

By the Author of "RUTH'S CHRISTMAS," "JANE ARNOLD," &c.

"A touching little story, full of simplicity and reality."—Mother's Friend.

"Written with graceful simplicity and freshness; we can cordially recommend it for the purpose of distribution to young folks. Neatly printed and attractively illustrated."
Hackney and Kingsland Gazette.

"As the book is published at a low price, our readers, we are sure, will get this Easter story and read it themselves. It is a tale well put together, and of much interest."
Church Opinion.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.

By PHILIP HENRY GOSSE.*

FROM the lamb offered in the garden (Gen. iii. 21) to the Lamb on the cross, the ordinance of animal-sacrifices, throughout the legal dispensation, had ever proclaimed aloud the awful truth, "Without shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. ix. 22). But the unsearchable wisdom, the exceeding becomingness, wherewith the All-sufficient God stilled the enemy and avenger, lay in this: that, while the law-breaker must die he might die by proxy, if a Proxy, adequate and willing, could be found. And that such an one had been found! even the Only Begotton Son, who had said, "Lo, I come, to do Thy will, O God!"

So, in the body prepared for Him, the "Meek and Lowly in heart," yet "God the Mighty Man" (Isa. ix. 6); the Everlasting Word made flesh;—comes to the brink of Jordan, to be baptized of John. But "John forbad Him." Whether, for the moment, forgetting his typical character, and thinking only of the personal character of the Lamb without blemish and without spot; or quailing at the thought of dealing in judgment with One who is Judge of all;—John shrank back, saying, "It were fit that I should be plunged under this flood by Thee; and comest Thou to me?" And this was true. John was himself, by nature, a lost sinner, under the common sentence of death eternal; and the Man before him was the Law-giver, the Arbiter of death and life.

But Jesus, who never for an instant forgot his place, recalls his honoured servant by a word. "Suffer it to be so now!" On this special occasion: for a special purpose: with a special reason:—let this incongruity pass, let the Righteous One suffer the law-breaker's doom, as under its righteous curse.† And then He adds the constraining reason: "For thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

These words, brief as they were, had weight to bring back John, in an instant, to the calm dignity of his official position. For "then he suffered Him." Let us weigh them, with diligent heed, that we may discern where their force lay. And all the more, because, in general, this seems to be very dimly discerned.

"Thus":—In this way. By what is portrayed in this shadow. By my penal death.

"Us." Here are two parties, each of whom has a great rôle to perform. John's part is the part of God's Holy Law. The Law must inflict its penalty, or God's attributes are forfeited. Jesus's part is "to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 26); to be made sin (2 Cor. v. 21); to be made a curse (Gal. iii. 13); to once suffer for sins, the Just for the unjust (1 Pet. iii. 18). So it becometh US,—thee and Me; each to bear his part.

"Righteousness." "All righteousness." "To fulfil all righteousness." The Law's claim was righteous: for "the Law is holy, and just, and good" (Rom. vii. 12). And Messiah's payment of the claim was righteous; inasmuch as Law had no personal demand of Him; and what He was about to do would satisfy and annul all its claims on those for whom He stood. And, since the uttermost claims of God's Law would thus be answered, this conjoint action, of John and Jesus, would fulfil [fill to the full] all righteousness.

"It becometh." Here is recalled that thought of the "Great Becomingness" of God, which, in Psa. viii. 1, and Heb. ii. 10, has already been noticed. We are here taught that what the Son was about to do, in going down into death and the grave, was something well worthy of Him: while the exaction of the death-penalty was not less eminently becoming to God, and to God's Law. . . . .

But a fact is recorded now, which is of unspeakable importance; since it changes the whole aspect of the rite, adding a new element to it, and betokening quite a new relation of man to God. "Jesus, when He was baptized, went up, straightway, out of the water." He who had plunged Him under, lifted Him out:—a new and significant feature! For this is Resurrection. The very hand that inflicts the penalty, even that of God's Law, "looses the pains of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it" (Acts ii. 24). And, with a most meaning silence, this had not been predicated of any of the multitudes yet baptized. For of Christ alone can it be said, that He abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light (2 Tim. i. 10); being "the first to rise from the dead" (Acts xxvi. 22). . . . .

The special value of these immediate results of our Surety's work lies in this: that they were given to Him not as the Eternal Word; nor even as to the holy Son of Man Jesus; but as to the Christ; i.e., as the mystic composite Man of many members.* The Church is chosen in Him: complete in Him: made the Righteousness of God in Him: one body in Christ: a new creation in Christ: quickened together with the Christ. As the glorious Leader (Heb. ii. 10) "took part of the same flesh and blood" as the sons whom He undertook to bring to God's glory; so, He being raised, we are taught (Rom. vi. 1—11) to reckon ourselves partakers of his risen life with its new conditions. It is of vital importance that we bear this in mind, if we would discern the spiritual value of these consequents of our Lord's baptism.

(1) An opened Heaven. "Lo! the heavens were opened unto Him." Of Himself, in person, and yet as Head of his body, we have abundant testimony that "He is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God." . . . .

But, Christ having entered by his own blood, and that into heaven itself, "we have boldness and access by the faith of Him" (Eph. iii. 12). This boldness of liberty, sweetly contrasting with the awful terrors that surrounded Aaron's access, is much insisted on by the Spirit. . . . Let us see that we abuse not, by unholy irreverence, a privilege so inestimable as this, of drawing, and remaining, nigh to God. In Psalms xv. and xxiv., the moral qualifications are announced, requisite for standing in his holy place: and we perceive that they are found in but One, the King of Glory; in whose perfection we poor sinners stand. And what the unutterable joy of the privilege is, we learn from his own anticipation, uttered (Psa. xvi. 11) as He looked up from the gates of Hades: "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; at Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore!"

(2) An abiding Holy Ghost. "He [i.e. John; see John i. 32, 33] saw the Spirit descending (in a bodily shape, like a dove, Luke iii. 22) and remaining on Him." The emphatic point appears to be the remaining, or abiding. Here, again, our thought must be turned to the mystical Christ, and especially in his members. For Himself, we know, from John's own testimony (John iii. 34), that the Spirit was his without measure; and I am not aware of any special augmentation of the Spirit, if, indeed, augmentation of what is without measure, is conceivable,—to Himself personally, in consequence of his Atonement and Resurrection.

But to his Church there was. In his Discourse the night He was betrayed, He expressly promised (John xiv.—xvi. passim) the Spirit, the Comforter, as the fruit of his ascension; and particularly emphasised his abiding with them, "unto the dispensation." . . . . But was there anything peculiar in this,—viz. in his abiding; that prophets and apostles, that John and Jesus, should make so much of it? If we had regard to the habitual mode of thought, and mode of utterance, of Christians generally in the present day, we should say, No; there is nothing in it; nothing that is not constantly ignored. Is it not almost universal; is it not considered the proper and decorous thing, for those who express the desires of believers at public prayer-meetings and the like, to beseech God, with importunity, to "pour out his Holy Spirit upon us"? But what is this, but to deny, or at least to ignore, the great fact of the Blessed Spirit's indwelling in every believer (John xiv. 17), and abiding through the age (ver. 16)?

Having been once fully poured out, first on Israel (Acts ii.), and then on Gentiles (x. 44, 45)—his head-quarters, so to speak, are no longer in heaven, but on earth: as those of the Lord Jesus are no longer on earth, but in heaven: and He cannot be "poured out" any more, while the Church remains on earth.* When the Church is complete, and caught away to her Lord, it appears that the Spirit accompanies her. After that, He is again to be "poured out," on the restored and forgiven House of Israel, and the saved Nations. (See Joel ii. 28; Ezek. xxxvi. 27; xxxix. 29; &c.) We may well ask for a mightier energising of the Spirit within us; for more of his effectual power with our efforts; for more obedience to his monitions; but not for an outpouring of Him at present.

* Extracted from THE MYSTERIES OF GOD: A Series of Expositions of Holy Scripture. Hodder & Stoughton.

† "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the Law; to redeem them that were under the Law" (Gal. iv. 4). Is not this, under the sentence of the Law, in the former, as well as the latter clause?

* This distinction (between Jesus and the Christ) is well preserved in Rom. viii. 11; where it is very significant. The Christ includes all the members, as well as the Head. (See also 1 Cor. xii. 12.)

But how do the Spirit's presence and work, as given to the risen Church, differ from what had been known before? Much reverent caution is needed here, for there is no direct inspired utterance on the point. Yet that there was a great difference is plain from what has been cited; and that it mainly consisted in his abiding. Probably, in his operations on saints and prophets of old, the Spirit came and went; holy men spake as they were borne [as if out of themselves] by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 21). He visited them; used them; but did not dwell, abide in them. And so David prays (Psa. li. 11), "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me";—which I do not think an instructed Christian could pray, in whatever depth of penitence.

(3) Sonship to God. "Lo! a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased!" At first we are ready to say, This belongs peculiarly and exclusively to our adored Lord, the personal Jesus. But a moment's reflection will convince us that this, too, He shares with us. The very indwelling of the Spirit (Gal. iv. 6) is because we are sons of God; for the Spirit is the Spirit of sonship (Rom. viii. 14—17), whereby we cry, Abba, Father! This relationship, as we have before seen, formed the Eternal Purpose of the Father; to bring his "many sons" to glory was the work of the Son; to remove the obstacle which sin presented to this, He took part of the children's flesh and blood, suffered, and died. And now, having, in figure, come up out of the floods of death, He receives, for Himself and his co-raised Members, this public declaration of accepted Sonship. And He responds,—"Behold I, and the Children whom God hath given Me!"

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.—Mr. Rowland E. Ashton has just held his third annual mission to the unemployed and friendless, the large hall in Lancaster-street, Borough-road, being the place of meeting. The mission was attended by between three and four thousand adults, representing numerous trades, but all with few exceptions in great need, very many being quite destitute. Refreshments were served, after which a Gospel meeting was held. The preaching was blessed to many, the after-meetings being largely attended each night. The object of this special effort among the working classes is to counteract the evils of socialism, and direct them by godly counsel in the path of Christianity, in order to become good citizens.

THE BURMAH BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY present their twenty-third report to the public. During the year a portion of the Old Testament, comprising Job to Song of Solomon, has been published in the Karen language, including the text, marginal references, and annotations. It is gratifying to know that every year adds to the demand for the Word of God in all the dialects spoken in Burmah. Several school books have also been printed and published both for the Burmese and the Karese. The committee have engaged three colporteurs, who visit families, read to them the Scriptures, teach the Gospel, sell copies of the Bible, and give away tracts. The extracts from the reports of these native workers are full of interest, as showing that the seed sown is taking root. Some cases of blessing are recorded, and the secretary, Rev. William Kid, is full of ardent expectation for copious showers of blessing yet to come.

COMMERCE: A REPLY.

SIR,—The writer of the article on Commerce in a recent impression asks, "Will some of your readers answer the question with which I began: What Divine sanction is there for trade?"

If no one else does so, will you allow me to reply, The highest! Our Lord Himself sanctions it. See Matt. xxv. 15; Luke xix. 15. Students of that best of all New Testament commentaries, the Greek original, will observe that in the first of these passages the very same word is used which is also found in Rev. xviii. 17. Cheating, not commerce, is banned by Scripture. "Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard [length, e.g., of reels of cotton], in weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the LORD your God" (Lev. xix. 35—37). See also Deut. xxv. 13—16. "A false balance is abomination to the Lord: but a just weight is his delight" (Prov. xi. 1).

If trade and commerce were contrary to the mind of God, his providential arrangements would have rendered every country, nay, every district, self-sufficing. In that case the impediments to the spread of the Gospel would have been multiplied tenfold. There would have been no corn-ships of Alexandria to carry the Apostle of the Gentiles, no P. & O. steamers to convey the modern missionary. In the time of Solomon "every man sat under his own vine and fig-tree," partly in consequence of the abundance of foreign produce brought to Jerusalem by his great merchant navy (see 1 Kings x. 14—29). The wants of one country are clearly meant to be supplied by the superfluities of another—"that there may be equality" brought about between them, not by a dull uniformity of the gifts of providence, but by means which, rightly used, are advantageous alike to body, soul, and spirit. For whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we are to do all to the glory of God. "If a Christian be but a shoeblack," said Cecil, "he should be the best in the parish;" and if he be a merchant or a tradesman, we may add, the most honourable and honest.

There is an unexpressed feeling—perhaps I should say there was—that trade is ungentlemanly. It probably arose from the impression which your correspondent seems to entertain that its "inevitable practices" are contrary to morality. "A gentleman's honour will not allow him to take unfair advantage. Tradesmen take unfair advantage. Therefore tradesmen are not gentlemen." But is commercial immorality inevitable? Even from a worldly point of view, is not honesty the best policy? Is it not the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich? To return to the passages from which I set out: Why did our holy Lord make use of "gain by trading" to set forth service rendered to Himself, if it were impossible that Christian men's "merchandise and hire should be holiness to the Lord"? May some of them practically solve this problem. Your constant reader,

WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The last report shows that eighty-two widows have been assisted by "grants" during the year. By this help sewing-machines, mangles, stock for small shop, &c., have been secured to them, and in some cases a room furnished. Applications for aid are rapidly increasing, and, unless help is forthcoming, the Society's operations must be restricted. Earnest Christian ladies and gentlemen are needed to visit cases in the South and West suburbs. Applicants are desired to call at the office, 1, Lawrence Pountney-lane, Cannon-street, E.C., on Fridays, from six to eight p.m.

LABOUR AND REST.

REST is sweet, and ease is pleasant,
When the shades of evening fall,
And no care, no grief is present,
No regret, to mar it all.

Rest is sweet, but labour sweeter,
When its impulse comes from heaven;
No enjoyment can be greater
Where the strength and grace are given.

Weary, hungry, Jesus, sitting
By the side of Jacob's well,
Found refreshment there more fitting
Than old Sychar had to sell.

Needful place to lay his head in,
Seldom had our Lord in view;
But where'er his path was leading,
There He found some work to do.

And, when all his friends were sleeping,
In the mountain He in prayer
Often was a vigil keeping;
And He met his Father there.

Let me take the pattern given,
Live upon the Father's love;
Labour on my way to heaven,
Looking for my rest above.

MR. D. L. MOODY AT HOME.

A PEEP INTO HIS BOYS' SCHOOL.

BY A LADY VISITOR.

WE started first for the boys' school, hoping that we might catch Mr. Moody talking to the boys. Our driver told us that during his brief visits home he often rode over and gave the boys a Bible lesson. "Hello, we're in luck!" said he. "That's the school-house down there," pointing to a modest little structure in a slight hollow, "and that's the Moody carriage hitched there as sure's you're born. You'll find him inside, talking to the boys, you can bet your last cent." Declining the invitation to invest our whole fortune then and there, we hastily climbed out of the buggy, and slipped into the back of the schoolroom. There was but one room in the building. A couple of Indian boys rose to give us seats. The house was full, a few ladies sprinkled around among the boys; and at the desk, sure enough, was Mr. Moody. His hair was greyer, and his figure fuller than when I saw him last in St. Louis, but he was talking to the boys with the well-known winning smile, and they were smiling back, and fairly rippling over, once in a while, with enthusiasm and sympathy. Fully one-half the boys had open Bibles before them on their desks. Mr. Moody had evidently been talking on the verses in the Bible that begin "If any man"—and a tall young Irishman was at the black-board writing them down:—

If any man enter in [by Me], he shall be saved.
If any man serve Me, let him follow me.
If any man serve me, him will my Father honour.
If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me.
If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink.
If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father.
If any man will do his will, he shall know the doctrine.

Mr. Moody rose quickly in his place, and with a few words of prayer the school was dismissed. Most of the boys left at once, in a way boys have when "school's out," but a few of the older ones stood talking with Mr. Moody and the ladies.—Christian Leader.

CABMEN'S SHELTER FUND.—Thirty-four shelters have now been placed in various parts of the Metropolis, and are used by 2000 cabmen daily. A new one has lately been placed in Bayswater-road. £150 is needed toward a shelter for Piccadilly. The committee have made important arrangements which will reduce the cost of the management. They desire to place a shelter at every cabstand in London, of which there are 120, so that the men may not be driven into a public-house for warmth or refreshment. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. H. Macnamara, 15, Soho-square.

* There is no question of the illimitable Godhead of the Holy Ghost, any more than of the Son. But of his personal, official presence, as the Comforter, during the personal absence of the Son.

DR. SAPHIR ON PERFECTION.

"THE OLD MAN."

THE converted man, having received the gift of righteousness and of the renewal of the heart, is now filled with the desire to serve God, and he takes, as it were, sanctification into his own hands. "Must I not show my gratitude to Him who laid down his life for me?" He reads the Bible, and he thinks that through diligent reading of it he will be strengthened, he will be furnished unto every good work. He has seasons of prayer, and he hopes that by adhering loyally to these seasons he will go on from strength to strength. He delights in Jesus, but he wishes also to delight in himself. At first, of course, he came to God as the publican of old; he was nothing but a sinner. But now he would like to come as a beautiful, obedient, Christ-glorifying saint. Grace is not seen as the exclusive element in which he is to live.

Subtle is the delusion, but God soon teaches him by experience. For with all his good intentions, with his regular readings of chapters in the Bible, and with his seasons of prayer, he makes the discovery that he is sinful, that there is something in him that murmurs against the dispensations of God; something that does not delight itself in the law of God which is spiritual; that there are frequent failures and even sins. In this experience his pride is wounded, his vanity is hurt, and he asks if he has been really converted. He scolds himself. He tries, as it were, to summon up his energy. Sometimes he is unhappy, sometimes he is irritable, sometimes he is tempted to slothfulness. And all because he does not yet see that great and mysterious truth of the coexistence of the "flesh and the Spirit." The Word of God then comes and exercises its power. He discovers that much of his first zeal and enthusiasm and joy was not spiritual but of the flesh. The Word of God probes him and analyzes him, and he sees that there is within him an old man as well as a new man, the flesh as well as the spirit. He finds out that there are sins of ignorance which are also hateful in the sight of God; sins of omission which are as real sins as the sins of commission. He is conscious, too, of the sins of his holy things.

Then there come to him a great discovery and a great difficulty. The discovery is the existence of the old man; the difficulty is how, with this old man in him, he is to gain the victory. It does not please God when we are converted to take us at once from grace to glory. He leaves us here in a world of sin, sorrow, and temptation. He leaves us also in a very strange condition, to which there is no parallel in heaven, on earth, or in hell—namely, a man who is perfect in Christ Jesus, and who yet carries about with him a body of sin and death. So it has pleased God that it should be.

Look at that old man which every Christian has up to the moment of his death: What is it? Hatred against God; its character is not changed; the flesh hates everything that is spiritual. All God's commandments, and all God's arrangements, it would have otherwise. Not merely does this remain the character of the old man—this opposedness to God—but the whole old man exists with all his members, without a single feature taken away from him. All your sins that you had before you were converted are in you this very moment. There has not one of them been eradicated. You carry them about with you. What says Peter to those who were believers? "Laying aside all guile, malice, hypocrisies, envies, and evil speaking." I cannot lay aside the coat that another man wears. If all those characteristics of the old man mentioned in the Epistle to the Ephesians were not in the converted man, he would not be told to lay them aside, to mortify them. The whole of the old man is there. Oh, what a discovery is this to a man who thought he was very near having attained and being perfected!

Now, what is to be done with this old man? Of course the phrase "old and new man" is a figure of speech; it is a personification, but a personification of realities. The old man is not exterminated, either in the first start, or in any imaginary second start. He remains to the very end. And as he is not exterminated, so he is not rendered, as it were, unconscious; the nerve is not killed, so to speak. Some have imagined that, by some surrender of themselves to Jesus Christ, it is possible for them to deprive the old man of all vitality, so that he will not assert himself. But he is continually asserting himself. There is another very important point to be noticed. There is a great danger lest slothful believers should make this an excuse, and say "the flesh is weak." Yes, Christ reminds us that if the spirit is willing, the flesh is weak; therefore He exhorts us to watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation. The old man is not forgiven. God does not, as it were, give him permission to go on. God gives him permission to exist, but he is under condemnation. There is all-sufficient power in Jesus Christ for the believer, that he may resist and overcome every sin. But let us always remember that the old man is neither exterminated nor rendered insensible, and he is not forgiven.

What, then, is the condition of the old man—yours and mine? He is nailed to the Cross. When Jesus was crucified, our old man was crucified, that the body of sin—the whole system of sin—might be destroyed. God judged and condemned the old man when Jesus Christ died upon the Cross. Every one of his members, every feature in his countenance, every manifestation of sin, God has judged and pronounced sentence upon in the death of Christ. Without any effort of yours your sins have been crucified with Christ; so that this old man whom you still carry about with you, and the power of whom you are feeling continually, is, after all, powerless. He has been judged; you do not belong to him, and you must reckon yourself to have died with Christ unto sin, and to be alive unto righteousness. Although the flesh is still in you, you are no longer in the flesh, for the Spirit of Christ is now dwelling in you.

What do I expect then? I expect the experience of my sinfulness to grow more painful to me every day. But in all this there is the knowledge that the old man I carry about with me, hateful in the sight of God, judged and condemned by Him, will always, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, become the object of my fight and my victory.

When this deliverance is given to us, by our being brought to see what Christ has done for us on the Cross, we have to remember for our guidance and our warning: three things. Not in quiescence are we delivered from the power of sin and from the victories of sin. Not by saying, "The old man has been crucified on the Cross, and I have nothing to do but rest," or, as some would express it, "to float." No, you have not to float, you have to swim against the current—not in your own strength, but in the strength of Christ. This is what the Apostle says: "Not as though I have already attained, or were already perfected, but I follow after." I strive, I pursue. There is diligence, there is energy, there is watchfulness, and activity. Faith is not merely passive receiving; it is active grasping. For God is always first working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

Another point to remember is this. Not by one act of surrender of our will; not by one leap, as it were, from the lower platform to the higher, but by the constant influence of the grace of God, the Word of God sanctifies. Even after the highest experiences of God's grace within us, the old man is not extirpated, as that most instructive experience of the Apostle Paul shows us. He had heard the voices of the glory, and beheld the blessedness and the brightness of the heavenly sanctuary. Yet for such a man, with such privileges, there was the danger of falling into that very sin which hurled Lucifer into the lowest hell. There is no greater, no more fruitful sin in the world than the sin of spiritual pride and self-exaltation. We need always, and to the end, to be kept in our first attitude of utter dependence on grace.

A third warning is this. Do not expect a journey of unbroken triumph; do not expect to go on from victory to victory; do not expect that the songs of rejoicing will altogether take the place of the psalms of humiliation and of contrition; do not expect that you will never go back again to the Psalms in which David cries out, "O Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me for ever?" James in his Epistle says, "In many things we all stumble." That is to say, only Jesus perfectly fulfilled the description of what is said in the Proverbs, "The path of the just is as the light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

As long as we are here upon earth we can never be like Jesus in the full sense of the word. Never. Jesus had no sinfulness; there was nothing in Him that did not say "Yes" and "Amen" to every word and commandment of God. He knew no sin. Though temptation came to Him, there was nothing inflammable within his heart. Hermetically sealed was the vial in which the poison was presented to Him. Jesus had no sins of ignorance, no sins of his holy things, no sins of omission, no fountain of sinfulness within Him. How different is it with the believer. True, while we are here upon earth, in this body of sin and death, the same mind is to be in us which was in Him; but pure and holy as Jesus we can only be at the great consummation.

(To be concluded.)

A REVIVAL AMONG FISHERMEN.

THE fishermen from Lochgilphead, Loch Fyne, Ardrishaig, Carradale, and Campbeltown, have received a remarkable spiritual blessing during two weeks in Girvan, Ayr. The Campbeltown fishermen sent for their missionary to come over and help them, and he arrived on Thursday, February 19, commencing meetings for the fishermen on the 21st. No movement was noticed until Monday, the 23rd February, when the Spirit of God descended upon the fishermen. Many strong men were moved to tears, and remained to be spoken with at the after-meeting.

This awakening continued night after night for two weeks, during which time the weather was so stormy that fishing was stopped. The little church was filled every night with the fishermen, until at the end of two weeks there were found to have been about 200 dealt with who anxiously sought help from Christian workers in the after-meetings, nearly all professing to believe on the Son of God. On Saturday many testified of the grace of God in saving them, and seemed desirous of spreading the glad tidings amongst their friends and neighbours when they returned to their own homes. It was observed at Ballantree that the Sabbath was not broken by the Campbeltown fishermen as on former occasions, and some of the converts left their boats rather than go out fishing on the Sabbath day. It was also observed that instead of card-playing in their lodgings many passed the time in singing hymns and studying the Word of God.

It is remarkable that this wave of blessing has not touched the fishermen of Girvan. The Christian workers state that so far as they have observed, none of the natives of Girvan seem to have been even awakened at what has been going on in their midst.

CRYSTAL PALACE BIBLE STAND.—The Report just issued contains a brief epitome of the various means adopted by the Committee for furthering the circulation of the Word of God at home and abroad. In addition to the work done at the Crystal Palace, accounts are given of Bible-carriage operations in France and Spain, and of the general progress of the work of dissemination in Egypt, Austria, Germany, Russia, and other places. From all these countries come announcements of blessing attending the labours of the agents and voluntary helpers. Mr. W. Hawke, the well-known secretary, will be glad of applications for collecting-boxes from Christian friends who will help. The "extract" from Spain says: "There never was a better opportunity than the present for carrying on this work."

For the Young.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MARCH 19.—MATTHEW XXIV. 1–14.

v. 14.—"This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached." . . .—There are none who ought to try so much to make known the Gospel of Christ as children. Do you know what children come to in heathen lands? You have heard of the South Sea Islands. Look at the map of the world. Those little black dots to the left of South America, they are the South Sea Islands. Well, these islands a few years ago were full of idolaters. The poor people there bowed down to stocks and stones, and knew nothing of the Lord Jesus Christ. Kind missionaries went to them, and told them of Christ, and salvation by Him. God blessed their work, and many of the poor heathens were converted, and many of these heathen islands are now become Christian lands. After they were converted, many of the people said, "We wish we had heard these things before. If you had only told us these things long ago, we should never have done the wicked things we did." And at one of these islands a woman got up after a missionary meeting, and said, "Oh, sir, if I had only heard these things before! I had nineteen little children, and have murdered every one of them! Because I knew nothing of the Bible, I didn't care for my dear little children. Oh, that I had known long ago about Jesus Christ, and about this blessed Bible, and about the way to heaven!" I always say that women, children, and the poor ought to do more for the Gospel than any others in the world. It brings them so many blessings.—Bishop Ryle.

MARCH 20.—MATTHEW XXIV. 15–28.

v. 15.—"Whoso readeth, let him understand."—Jesus says this to show the need for special attention and care in reference to his words. We need Divine guidance and careful thought in the study of all parts of Scripture, but in some parts more than others. Our Lord was here referring to one of the more difficult portions of the prophetic word. We must never forget to ask for the help of God's Holy Spirit when we read the Bible. He is certain to grant it if we ask. When Philip saw the eunuch reading in his chariot, the first thing he asked was, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" He said he did not. Then Philip explained it all to him, and his heart rejoiced in Jesus. It was the Holy Spirit who led Philip to join himself to the eunuch's chariot, and who used him to give light to the eunuch. It is said of Him, "He shall guide you into all truth."

MARCH 21.—MATTHEW XXIV. 29–41.

v. 30.—"They shall see the Son of Man coming."—This sight will be the most glorious and solemn one the world has ever beheld, and will very differently affect different classes of those who see it. The Church of Christ, all true believers in Him, who have followed Him, and loved his appearing, will rejoice and be glad at it, for it is said of them, "that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." The Jews will see Him, and "they shall mourn because of Him;" it will be the time when they will nationally be convinced of their sin, and penitently turn to Him in faith (see Zech. xii 10—14, xiii. 1, 2). And then there are the wicked, his enemies, those who have not obeyed the Gospel; it will be an awful sight for them (see 2 Thess. i. 7—9). Let us all look believingly unto Jesus now, beholding Him as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," then we can watch for his coming with joy and eager desire.

MARCH 22.—MATTHEW XXIV. 42–51.

v. 44.—"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour . . ."

"How shall poor sinners be prepared to meet a holy Lord,
To know the sins which once they loved, forsaken and abhorred,
To see Him face to face with joy, nor tremble at his word?

"Is it by kindly deeds of good towards our fellow-men?
To spread the knowledge of the Lord in pulpit or by pen?
Can erring sinners thus be brought to holiness again?

"Nay!—nothing but the blood of Christ—the Church's crimson dower—
Of Him the pure and perfect One, in free and pleuteous shower,
Can cleanse our souls from guilt of sin, and free us from its power.
L. Squire.

MARCH 23.—MATTHEW XXV. 13.

v. 6.—"At midnight there was a cry made. . . ."—Once a year the Israelites of old were to eat the passover, staff in hand and shoes on feet; but to us is given the hourly rule, "Let your loins be girded about and your lamps burning" (Luke xii. 35). For even after a hard day's work the call may sound. The minute-men of the Christian Commission in America even slept in full preparedness for action, ready at any moment to spring up and go. And there may suddenly rage a battle within your hearing, there may come wounded within your reach. You have already perhaps done much, but now do more; no putting off the armour while the war holds on. By and by, when the life-long day has sunk to rest, there shall be no more "wars, nor rumours of wars;" no need to "resist the devil," for he shall be chained; no call for hard-won victories over the world, for "the world and the lust thereof shall have passed away." But now, "it is high time to awake out of sleep," now, "do thy diligence in every way."—Anna Warner.

MARCH 24.—MATTHEW XXV. 14–30.

v. 21.—"Thou hast been faithful over a few things."—Faithfulness consists in doing everything, great or small, as unto God, persistently acting as in the sight of God, and with an eye to his glory. Dr. Talmage says: "A parishioner asked a clergyman why the congregation had filled up, and why the church was now so prosperous above what it had ever been before. 'Well,' said the clergyman, 'I will tell you the secret. I met a tragedian some time ago, and I said to him, How is it you get along so well in your profession?' The tragedian replied, 'The secret is, I always do my best; when stormy days come, and the theatre is not more than half or a fourth occupied, I always do my best, and that has been the secret of my getting on.' And the clergyman reciting it, said, 'I have remembered that, and ever since then I have always done my best.' And I say to you, in whatever occupation or profession God has put you, do your best; whether the world appreciates it or not, do your best; always do your best."

MARCH 25.—MATTHEW XXV. 31–46.

v. 40.—"Ye have done it unto Me."—Those who really love Christ are kind to the hungry, to the stranger, and to the prisoner, for his sake. There are some who do acts of kindness, but not for his sake. Are their actions pleasing to the Lord? Can He who searches the heart be pleased with acts of charity done from a desire to obtain human praise. Such acts shall obtain no other reward than human praise. Can He be pleased with deeds done from feelings of kindness, but without one thought concerning himself? Such motives meet with a reward on earth, but none in heaven. Can He be pleased with works done with a view of gaining heaven by our own merits? Assuredly not, for He has declared that we are not saved by works of righteousness which we have done (Titus iii.) What, then, are the motives which please the Lord? Motives of love and gratitude to Him. None but pardoned sinners can love Jesus; and they love Him because He first loved them. He has asked us to show our love to Him by relieving his poor brethren. It is a small request. Can we refuse it? When we see the destitute stranger shall we turn away, or when we hear of a suffering saint, or of a poor prisoner, shall we forget to visit him? If we do, how ashamed shall we be when we see Christ coming in his glory? —Light in the Dwelling.

A CHILD'S LAST SONG.

By John Ruskin.

But the dearest child of the cottage was not there. Last spring they had a little boy between these two, full of intelligent life, and pearl of chief price to them .He went down to the field by the brookside (Beck Leven) one bright morning, when his elder brother was mowing. The child came up behind without speaking, and the back sweep of the scythe caught the leg, and divided a vein. His brother carried him up to the house, and what swift binding could do was done. The doctor, three miles away, coming as soon as might be, arranged all for the best, and the child lay pale and quiet till the evening, speaking sometimes a little to his father and mother. But at six in the evening he began to sing. He sang on, clearer and clearer, all through the night,—so clear at last, you might have heard him, his mother said, "far out on the moor there." Sang on till the full light of morning, and so passed away.

"Did he sing with words?" I asked.

"Oh yes, just the bits of hymns he had learnt at the Sunday-school."

So much of his education finally available to him, you observe.

Not the multiplication table then,—nor commandments then,—these rhymes only remained to him for his last happiness.

"Happiness in delirium only," say you. All true love, all true wisdom, and all true knowledge, seem so to the world; but, without question, the forms of weakness of body preceding death, or those during life which are like them, are the testing states, often the strongest states, of the soul."—"Fors Clavigera," Letter 94.

LIVERPOOL EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—The Committee have had much to encourage them in this mission, and they begin their ninth annual report with praise to God. They have aimed to work in harmony with existing church organisations, and urge all converts to connect themselves with some regular ministry. Missions have been held at several of the places of worship, and the congregations and pastors have shared the blessing, and gathered in the fruit. £70 are needed for a new tent. In the old one much good has been done. The year closes with a small balance in the hands of the treasurer, Mr. A. Brown, 3, Peter's-buildings, Rumford-street, Liverpool.

BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.—A new Mission Hall and Dispensary has lately been opened in connection with this Mission. Many of those who enjoy and are benefited by the health-giving breezes of Brighton, little know of the poverty, misery, and spiritual destitution of the people living in the neighbourhood of Edward-street, surrounded as it is by alleys and courts crowded with public-houses and lodging-houses of the lowest description. Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a three weeks' mission in the Hall. The place has been crowded every night, and there seems every reason to believe that great spiritual blessing has been the result. A Drawing-room Sale of Work takes place early in April, for the Building Fund of the New Hall, towards which about £180 is required. Contributions of fancy and plain work, &c., will be very thankfully received by Mrs. Charsley, 10, Lewes-crescent, and Mrs. T. D. Holmwood, 2, Percival-terrace.

WORKING GIRLS IN KINGSLAND.

THE Kingsland Institute for Working Girls, and Nursing Association, took its rise some nine years ago as a night school for women and girls. Beginning with two or three, the number of attendants gradually increased. At the present time the names of 450 persons are on the books. Larger premises becoming a necessity, a suitable house was taken in Ridley-road, near Dalston Junction. Here for the past nine months the Mission has developed and extended in a remarkable manner.

To provide a home for girls in the evening where the hours could be cheerfully and profitably spent, and the dangers and temptations of the street avoided, was the main object of the founders of the Institution. That this important design has been an undoubted success was abundantly evident to us as we surveyed the club rooms on a recent occasion. We found classes of various kinds in full swing—some for reading, others for writing, arithmetic, singing, or needlework. There was the library, with its goodly array of volumes, selected to meet the tastes of the readers. Periodicals are provided for all who choose to read, and others can find recreation in suitable games. A Bible lesson, with prayer, brings the evening to a close. The girls go to their homes thankful and happy for the kindness shown them and the benefit conferred. Who shall say how better they are fitted for to-morrow's duties following upon the pleasant evenings thus spent?

A class for little girls is held on Wednesday afternoons. Judging from the requests for admission, we doubt not but that many of "these little ones" would gladly share the benefits of the elder ones every evening, did the space, and the funds, and the general scope of the Institute permit. According to Mr. Samuel Morley's suggestion on the opening day, a Coffee-room has been provided, open every evening, so that refreshments can be obtained under the same roof. There is a mothers' meeting, where garments of divers kinds are made, and a Bible-reading is given. To this must be added the Coal Club, to which over £100 was paid in last year by the members. The clothing, blanket, and shoe clubs, which are now being formed, will be an additional boon to the poor who join them.

Not the least interesting department of the Mission is the Nursing Association, which has become an important auxiliary. The nurse, whose happy and bright face would carry cheer into any sick room, goes forth each morning to visit the sick and help them. We saw the inside of two cupboards full of things needed for the sick and suffering. Here were plaisters, lint, &c.; for wounds, and various farinaceous and other foods. Meat dinners are provided for the sick folk where requisite twice a week, and in some instances dinners are provided every day. Neither is money withheld. Exercising a wise discretion, the nurse is authorised to give to her that needeth, and, where poverty is joined with sickness, a small amount by way of meeting immediate want proves an inestimable blessing. A grand opening is here found to minister the word. "I never miss an opportunity of speakto them of Christ," said the nurse; "in some instances the patients have been awakened and I hope saved."

This medical department increases in interest and importance. A considerably enlarged field is opening out, and instead of one there are needed six nurses. The difficulty, however, is to get them. Several, we believe, would be engaged at once, if deemed suitable. One qualification, we should think, must be a strong nerve, to witness the distressing spectacles that meet the eye of the visitor. "Father out of work, mother ill, five little children, and no food in the house." "Father and mother both ill in bed, and no doctor or medicine." "Man cut his throat while suffering delirium tremens through drink." Such are some of the sights witnessed day by day in the daily rounds of the nurse. Some are got into convalescent homes; others are helped into hospitals. In some cases the children are taken care of for the time being. In one instance of special need a woman is being paid to stay in the home of the sick parent and take the entire charge.

No wonder, then, that the appeal for support issuing from the institution is urgent. The appeal is for helpers as well as help. A new branch of work has been added in the form of a mission to factories. There are many of these in the neighbourhood, at which hundreds and thousands of factory girls are employed. Two warehouses are now regularly visited during the dinner hour, when the girls are lovingly spoken to and counselled. For this branch more workers are greatly needed to visit in pairs. Ladies are required also to help in the evening classes, to converse with the girls, and seek their welfare in every way. A piano is a great desideratum: who will have the privilege of supplying the want? Some of the girls have dropped off coming because there is no music. It is suggested, also, that if a sufficient number of ladies were to volunteer their services to take one girl each under their especial care, to visit and look after, untold blessing would be secured.

There is a class on Sunday afternoon for the factory girls, to whom a free tea is often given. It is in contemplation to open a club for men on Saturday evenings. How much beside we do not know, nor whereunto the good work may grow. A poor girl was recently taken in and housed for the night; next day she was taken to a rescue society, and saved from further evil. It is evident that a good and gracious influence is being brought to bear upon the girls, which cannot fail to produce its fruit as time goes on. The Committee earnestly beg that all who can will aid them in their efforts to rescue and help these poor girls, and to keep them from drifting further into evil.

The annual meeting took place last Thursday evening at the Conference Hall, Mildmay. Mr. S. Morley, M.P., who presided, remarked on the urgent need for sympathy with the lower classes. Rev. E. A. Stuart gave an account of the Institute, its work and objects, and the class of girls it is intended to benefit. He also referred to the Bible-classes which are held in the factories during the dinner-time. Mr. Albert Head, Dr. Laseron, Rev. W. Spensley, and Dr. Barnardo warmly commended the work. The last related his practical experiences of the good done by these nurses. Mr. Morley offered the lady-superintendent (Miss E. Robarts) twenty-five pounds towards the expenses of another nurse, and also handed in a cheque for twenty-one pounds from Mr. T. Bayley for the Institute funds.

THE BANFFSHIRE GOSPEL VAN MISSION has been so abundantly blessed that an additional colporteur has been appointed to visit the homes of the poor and the farm servants. The agricultural community in Banffshire are to a certain extent being reached by this evangelistic agency. In the recently issued report the colporteurs narrate remarkable cases of conversion and restoration, which indicate the reality of the work. Rev. G. S. Muir, Whitehill Manse, Grange, Banffshire, will be pleased to communicate further particulars.

A GREETING FROM THE PRAIRIE.—Dear Sir,—I must add my testimony to that of many others in stating what pleasure and profit I have found in reading your valuable paper, which is sent to me regularly by a friend in the old country. It would be hard to tell you how eagerly it is looked forward to, and with what interest its articles are read and often re-read. Here, on the wide prairie, where Christian privileges are so few, and where there is often no one to whom to open one's heart and speak together of that which, indeed, makes the heart burn, it is like a ray of sunshine, after the busy work of the week is over, and one can sit down in the little cabin to read how the Lord is honouring and using many of his servants, and to have the privilege of praying for them and becoming fellow-workers with them in their great work. I would earnestly ask the prayers of your readers for many in this great north-west who are far removed from Christian influence and society, and who need to be kept close to Him who knoweth all hearts and is "able to keep us from falling."

Yours for the Master,
Post-office, Elkhorn, C. L. Gurney.

STUDENTS' MEETINGS IN SCOTLAND.

By Dr. MOXEY.

I AM compelled to change my heading from Students' Meetings in Edinburgh to Students' Meetings in Scotland, for our gracious God and Father has been pleased to bless, in a remarkable way, the Deputations of Professors and Students from our Metropolitan University to the other three Scottish Universities in Glasgow, Aberdeen, and St. Andrews. Prof. Greenfield, M.D., headed the deputation to Aberdeen, and at the meeting on Sabbath, March 1, testimony was given to the crowded assemblage of Professors and Students by the Edinburgh men as to the blessed work of God which I have already reported in your columns. The power of God was manifested in the meeting, and the after-meeting was similar in character to, and seemed equally fruitful in results with, those held in Edinburgh. Several of the Aberdeen Professors expressed the warmest sympathy, and promised their active co-operation in the work, and the deputation was invited to return on the following Sabbath.

This cordial invitation was gladly accepted, and on Sabbath, March 8, not only was there a full, earnest meeting of Students in the Aberdeen University, but there were similar meetings in Glasgow and St. Andrews; in the one case Prof. Grainger Stewart heading the deputation, and Prof. Charteris, D.D., in the other.

Regarding these meetings, a medical student, one of the leaders in the Revival, writes to me as follows: "We had a wonderful meeting in Glasgow last night. The hall was full, about 700 being present; 300 stayed to the after-meeting. A large number of Christian Students came out-and-out for Christ. Several were converted, and the Holy Spirit has moved the Glasgow University just like our own. The deputation was invited back for next Sunday by Prof. McKendrick, M.D., the Chairman. St. Andrews was also greatly blessed, and now in every University in Scotland this mighty revival has taken firm root, and we can only praise the Lord."

The Edinburgh Sabbath-evening meetings are still crowded, and the inquiry-meetings rather grow than fall off in number. Prof. H. Drummond's addresses are greatly owned by God, and from the time he arrives in Edinburgh each week, till he returns to Glasgow, his time is almost entirely occupied with anxious inquirers. One of the most interesting episodes in these gatherings occurred on the 1st inst., when the newly-installed Principal of the University made his first appearance before a large representative meeting of the students. I subjoin the report which appeared in The Scotsman on the following morning:—

> "Last night, at an evangelistic meeting for students, in the Oddfellows' Hall, Forrest-road—Professor Simpson presiding—the Principal of Edinburgh University, Sir William Muir, gave a short address. He thought it right, he said, to tell them how heartily he sympathised with this great movement for the welfare of the students of Edinburgh. It would be in contrariety with all his sympathies and sentiments if he did not manifest the greatest interest in this movement, because if religion was anything at all it ought to be everything with them. It should be the first and the chiefest object of their lives to secure the one thing needful—this the only good part that could never be taken away from them. This religion of Jesus Christ imparted a manliness to those who adopted it—bringing them into true relation with their Maker, themselves, their future life, and those about them. There was nothing which imparted a greater purpose, nerve, or power to their character than the adoption of the Christian faith, and the following of it out with purpose of heart. He would warn them that while they must not be slothful in business they must be fervent in spirit. Jesus said, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' Those who had already adopted the Christian religion he exhorted to let their moderation be known unto all men. The Christian should be the highest type of man and gentleman, because he did not please himself. He should let nothing be an offence to the world around, in respect of his Christian life; there should be nothing in his conduct narrow, bigoted, and offensive to any one about him, but, on the other hand, he should let his light so shine that all should take knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus."

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.—Upwards of one hundred lepers are now supported by this Society; several of these have been led to the Saviour. The services in the chapel at Almora are well attended; seventeen baptisms have taken place during the year, and several more are candidates. The little book giving details of the work is published by Messrs. Shaw & Co., 48, Paternoster-row, price 6d., and will be read with deep interest by any who may procure it.

GENERAL GORDON'S MEMORIAL.

I AM anxious to address a few words to that brave contingent of fellow-workers that has come to me through my papers in The Christian now at this present time, when it seems to many of us that God is speaking directly to our hearts.

It has been decided to raise a great national memorial to General Gordon. There is one memorial, partaking largely, as any memorial to him must do, of the spirit of expiation, which we may offer to our hero soldier, and which will reach him even in that high and holy place to which he has gone,

> "Where loyal hearts and true
> Stand ever in the light,
> All rapture through and through,
> In God's most holy sight."

I was only waiting for him to return to us in his glory to ask him—that man, cut out of the solid chrysolite, tender to women and children, as only a perfectly brave man can be tender—to do what he could in helping on our great movement towards a higher and purer national life. I intended to ask him to take part in the White Cross movement, of which he himself was the very embodiment.

Sooner than we expected he has returned to us in his glory, a glory not of this earth, so great that it blinds our weak eyes with tears, made like unto the Lord he so perfectly loved, in failure and dying, and known like Him after his resurrection by his death wounds—dumb mouths that plead with the heart of England as no earthly glory of conquest could ever have done. I don't know what others did; I only know that I knelt down on my own hearth-rug and prayed that I might be made worthy of being the countrywoman of Gordon, that I might have something of his splendid devotion to duty, something of his brave willingness to be true to his trust, and to fight at overwhelming odds, even when forsaken by man.

Let us who are engaged in the defence of the very citadel of our life—the sanctity of the family, the purity of the home—in a battle which often looks a despairing one, if we did not remember whose we are, and whom we serve under—let us at least resolve that so far as we are concerned our soldier hero shall not have died in vain. Let us resolve that we will not be such spiritual mice, nibbling and peeping, lifting up a feeble little squeak now and then for the right, but whisking off at the first sound of alarm; but that in future we will have more of his large faith in God, the faith that "I can't" is a lie in the lips that repeat, "I believe in the Holy Ghost," the faith which gave him his almost supernatural power in the line of God's will. Let us, in remembrance of his noble example, brace ourselves up more to doing disagreeable duties, to taking up unpopular causes, to having more of the limpet that clings to the rock, and less of the mussels that cling to one another. Above all, let us ask our God for more of his splendid faithfulness in failure at the word of command, fighting to the last at overwhelming odds, one man against a countless host, bating no jot of high heart, or lofty courage, or faithful devotion, though he knew he was abandoned, and that help would come too late; patrolling all night in his sleepless vigilance while we were fast asleep in our "soft beds," lavishing all the splendour of his military genius on an impossible task in the service of his country, one man holding up the whole weight of the honour of England, faithful to the last to the post of duty, and fulfilling the poet's words:—

> "Yet charge once more, then, and be dumb;
> Let the victors, when they come,
> When the forts of folly fall,
> Find thy body by the wall."

We who are fighting for all that makes life precious and worth living, we who have to lead the forlorn hope of the world and to beat off the countless hosts of the enemy, we who have to wrest from his grasp thousands of helpless women and children, we to whom the higher and purer manhood of our own sons has been entrusted, a manhood more like Gordon's—let us so live, so fight, so die, remembering his own words, "we deny our Lord if we save our lives."

And that great and gentle soul will accept this memorial reared by the Spirit of his God in the hearts of his people; content, supremely content, to have failed and died alone, if in failing and dying he has helped to make the heart of his beloved England better and purer, and more able, therefore, "to see God."

REV. JOSEPH COOK'S LECTURES.

THESE Monday lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston, continue to attract large and brilliant audiences, who listen with most enthusiastic attention to Mr. Cook's powerful and eloquent utterances. In his preludes and interludes such topics as, "Atheism and Anarchy," "Constitutional Prohibition," "Temperance Instruction in Schools," "Investigations in Spiritualism," "Confederation of English-speaking Nations," have been dealt with in the lecturer's thorough-going and fearless manner. His strenuous advocacy of Temperance reform, both in its legal and social aspects, must largely tend to strengthen the hands of those who are grappling with the deadly drink traffic and its concomitant evils. In his fourth prelude, when treating of political questions, he spoke these sentences, which may not perhaps be inapplicable to other lands besides America:—

"I must lament the present degeneracy of certain portions of our political life. Large numbers of Americans appear to regard themselves as excusable for overlooking social crime, in order to give a political party success. Party spirit is lacerating and lowering the moral ideas, and repressing the moral enthusiasm of the country, to a degree that is one of the most terrible signs of the hour. Party spirit is choking out, in large sections of the community, reverence for purity and for the home."

Mr. Cook's second "lecture" of the present series was a defence of the constitution of the Early Church, founded on the four undisputed Epistles of Paul—Galatians, Romans, and Corinthians i. and ii. In the third and fourth lectures he reviewed "a century of failure of attacks on Christianity." In his own expressive phraseology he showed how these attacks have "risen, reigned, sickened, died, and been buried." The six great attempts to undermine Christian faith, which, during the present century, have met with this untimely fate, are the naturalistic theory of Paulus, the mythical theory of Strauss, the partisanship theory of Baur, the legendary theory of Renan, the hypercritical theory of the author of "Supernatural Religion," and the Neo-Platonist theory which ignores the historic element of Christianity, while approving of its morality. Mr. Cook's analysis of these successive and conflicting theories displayed great research and acquaintance with the neology of the age. We regret that the calls on our space do not permit us to do more than quote some closing paragraphs from the fourth lecture. Young Christians may find them useful, not only in confirming their own faith, but in stopping the mouths of ignorant objectors:—

Our century is closing. It is highly important to notice what has been proved by the failure of the long succession of attacks on historic Christianity.

I do not know a learned sceptic in the world who has any doubt about the historic reality of Christ's appearance, or as to the fact that it was the most exalted morality which He taught and exemplified. As a result of a century of failures of attacks on Christianity we must lift ourselves out of the position of the deist at the opening of our century. Men of the twentieth century will remember that certain things have been proved by the progress of scholarship in the nineteenth century.

1. The four chief Epistles of Paul remain undisputed.

2. The story of one event, at least, that of the Resurrection, cannot have originated in myths; for there was no time for myths to grow up between the date of the Crucifixion and the date of the founding of the earliest Churches.

3. From Paul's four undisputed Epistles we know not only the fact that Paul believed that the resurrection occurred, and that he had seen our Lord after the resurrection, but that all the apostles believed this.

4. We know that, in the face of enemies who would have disproved the Christian assertions if they could, the Churches were founded on the most definite assertion of these facts. In all of the Churches throughout the whole breadth of the Roman Empire, beginning at Jerusalem itself, and on the very scene of the Crucifixion, and within sixty days of that event, the fact of the resurrection was proclaimed, and also that of the repeated appearances of the Risen One to his disciples. The importance of the forty days after the resurrection is brought into clearer view by recent discussions. Not only the evidence, but the repetition and the reiteration of it, is to be emphasised now as it was by the apostles.

5. The growth of the New Testament literature has been discussed so critically that few or none who value their reputation for scholarship dare now place the origin of all the four Gospels later than the last quarter of the first century.

6. There is a debate about the fourth Gospel, but more and more the common opinion concerning it is confirmed by the progress of discussion. The Gospel of John stands far more firmly now than it did when first attacked by the school of Baur.

7. It is commonly granted, even by rationalistic writers since Keim and Ewald, that the evidence is overwhelming that the resurrection, or its equivalent, occurred, and that repeated appearances of our Lord occurred after it.

8. The resurrection admitted, other Scriptural miracles must be received. The line of the anti-supernaturalistic attack, broken here, is thrown everywhere into confusion.

9. There is growing up a new philosophy both of history and of nature, which asserts not only the possibility, but the actuality of the supernatural.

10. After all attacks, the character of Christ stands forth as the supreme miracle.

11. As such it is a supernatural revelation of God in man and to man.

Too much is now positively known as to the origin of Christianity for any man to shut his eyes to the facts established by historic research on that theme, and to assume that they need not govern our thought. In our time, Damascus blades have been crossed, and the keenest scholarship of the world engaged in settling the question, How did Christianity originate? A definite result has been reached. For substance, the Christian ideas have triumphed. Face to face with the twentieth century stands the trophy erected over the latest battlefields between Christianity and unbelief, and on it is an inscription which nineteen centuries have justified, and which will cast its radiance far into the new age about to dawn. Via Lucis, via Crucis: the way of Light is the way of the Cross.

TWO ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS, Mr. White, lately attached to the Guards at Windsor, and Mr. Dickson, transferred from Edinburgh, lately sailed for Egypt, in order to labour in the Gospel among the British soldiers at Suakim.

NATIONAL THRIFT.—Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided on Friday evening at a crowded thrift meeting held at Leigh, near Tunbridge, when a lecture, entitled "Such Happy Homes," was given by Mr. J. Downe Cox, of the National Thrift Society. The Chairman mentioned as a striking instance of the benefits arising from economical habits, the promptness with which, at the close of the Franco-German war, the heavy indemnity demanded by Germany was paid out of the savings of the French people. There was no royal road to self-help, but the National Thrift Society, of whose good work he held the highest opinion, was endeavouring to point out to people common-sense means of improving their own condition. The lecture, which lasted for an hour and a half, was illustrated by a series of forty-five pictures, executed by the lecturer himself, concluding with one of the Bible, which alone can instruct the members of any household in the way to produce a happy home.

LAUGHING AT A GREAT SORROW.

UNDER the singular title of "Hannen's Variety Show," The World as severely reprobates the heartlessness of Society, as did the Bishop of Truro its vices and its indolence, in his sermon on Sunday week at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. We are glad to find such a rebuke as the following in pages which will be read by those referred to in it:—

"Just now, what is, from the point of view of Society, a screaming farce is on . . . and it has the additional recommendation of being universally intelligible to the audience. Was there ever such a plot, ever such a contrast of interesting incidents, ever such a list of dramatis personæ, ever so many fashionable and well-known names introduced into the dialogue? The curtain rises upon the figure of a girl—young, lovely, well-born, and wealthy. After she has been duly admired, a shock of horror is communicated to the breast of the spectators by the hint that a taint of hereditary madness clings to her. In that itself persons of ordinary humanity might suppose that there was nothing unusually diverting, nothing, indeed, which was not profoundly pathetic. But mirth swiftly chases away, as in one of Shakespeare's comedies, the shadow of sorrow; and the testimony, resorted to alike to prove and disprove the alleged insanity, is droll and laughable beyond measure.

"All the smart people of London are in 'the swim.' Imagine a cast comprising a reigning beauty, half a dozen well-known courtiers, two or three professional diners-out and men about town, to say nothing of the sister of the lady whose condition is the subject of inquiry, overflowing with 'chaff' and joke, quip, crank, and anecdote, and pleasantly rallied by the Solicitor-General on the difficulty or impossibility of 'shutting her up.' Every one involved in the business seems determined to make the best of it. Laughter and tears are akin, and perhaps it is because the sole other alternative would be a melancholy quite intolerable, that the counsel ask their questions with a simper or a grin, that the questioned give their answers amid a ripple of merriment, and that the bystanders signify their approval by periodical explosions of uncontrollable mirth. There is scarcely a discordant note struck; everybody is in the best humour; all the absurdities of flirtation and love-making are airily exposed to view. One witness after another is bantered on his or her ignorance or knowledge of affairs of the heart, and of the conduct of ladies and gentlemen when their affections or passions are supposed to be engaged.

"It is no exaggeration to say that a study of the record of this cause celèbre will be as essential to any future writer on the subject of courtship or matrimony as to all who would rightly understand the refinement and delicacy of feeling uniformly shown by English Society in the present year of grace. The Attorney-General has surpassed himself. Never was he so insinuatingly gallant; never did he show himself more completely in accord with Society, than in his treatment of the now famous carriage incident.

"But all this time where is the lady whose mental state has been in process of investigation; whose character and nature, whose deepest feelings, hopes and fears, sorrows and joys, have been so mercilessly laid bare and dissected in a public court of justice? While she has been the cause of so much excellent fooling in others, while her calamities have been handled with as irreverent a scalpel as the most reckless of medical students during his anatomical researches ever plied, she is in what is euphemistically styled a retreat. And her husband, what of him? If his friends and relatives have had, like Hamlet's gravedigger, no feeling in their business, is he not entitled to some respect? Here are two existences, if not hopelessly marred, yet darkened by the shadow of an abiding sorrow. Yet the smart people who are in the case only treat it, to judge from their demeanour, as a capital joke.

"If insanity was ever pitiable and heartrending, if madness could ever impress itself on the minds of the most frivolous as an affliction sent from heaven, a visitation of God, it is surely when it has descended upon a young and lovely woman, only the other day a bride. What have been the feelings of the husband, while he has beheld perhaps the most indecent spectacle ever witnessed in a British court of justice? How has the "loud laughter" fallen upon his ears? May he not be pardoned if he failed quite to appreciate some of the jokes, or to catch the exact point of some of the most facetious inquiries of the counsel or answers of the witnesses?

"Nor is it only of the two people, the destinies of whose existence have been decided, amid this series of side-shaking shrieks, that we are bound to take account. The proceedings over which Sir James Hannen has presided, as he himself has reminded us, are accessible to the public. They are also reported at length in the newspapers. From the daily press they are transferred into the columns of the weekly journals, which form the Sunday reading of thousands of the working classes in this country. What, we should like to know, would be the opinion of such unsophisticated critics upon the matter? They, it must be remembered, have no practical knowledge of Society's ways, and can make no allowance for its charming nuances and idiosyncrasies. What is shocking in itself will not seem less shocking to them because an aristocratic glamour is cast over it, or because those who have assisted in the exhibition are well placed in society. Society, indeed, is far too pleased with itself to pay much heed to what an ignorant bourgeoisie or a vile proletariat may say or think about its doings.

"And yet one cannot but believe that when Society itself, the excitement of the occasion being over, calmly reviews the scandal it has created, the utter absence of refined or human sentiment it has shown, its contemptuous defiance of the proprieties, it may experience a transient sense of sorrow or shame. If it does not, then it must be in a very corrupt and depraved condition indeed. One sees sometimes with pain, with disgust, but without surprise, a band of juvenile rustics following with grins and shouts the village idiot; one was scarcely prepared to witness the very elect of the smart and fashionable world engaged in an exhibition closely analogous to this, and a great deal more unseemly."

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

DURING the busy months of winter, amid distressed families, half-naked children, and many a father out of work, the Lord hath been gracious to us as a band of workers; we have wanted no good thing. Health and strength have been given for the daily duty. With the additional young lady helpers who are fitting themselves for service in China, should their way open up, we have been enabled to have a young mothers' sewing class, teaching them thriftiness in clothes-making and cookery. Many poor and dying ones have been succoured, and children sheltered in Christ's loving name.

Our empty nests are filling up, and we look to hive off a band of trained boys to Canada on April 9, under the care of our nephew, who has crossed the Atlantic a score of times in charge of boys, many of whom he has patiently trained to habits of obedience and industry.

We have been cheered and encouraged by visits from Canadians, also from the reports of our visitors in Canada to the homes where the children have been placed. Mr. and Mrs. Merry have been true and helpful to those who, owing to accidents or sickness, have required to be returned to the Canadian Home during the winter. We only who labour among such orphaned and destitute ones can fully value the loving care they have these many years bestowed, keeping our hearts rested while rescuing another family. Your prayers have upheld us in this great and privileged service for our Blessed Master. "So our eyes wait upon the Lord our God," and we "go forward."—Yours in his service,

Annie Macpherson.

THE SOCIAL PURITY CRUSADE.

THE Gospel Purity Association, of which Mr. Wookey is General Secretary, was found to be incomplete without a special branch for women. To supply this need the Committee have appointed Mrs. J. W. Bradley, of Ealing, as organising secretary of the women's branch of the Association. Any Christian friends who can obtain the use of schools, mission halls, or places of worship, where she could give addresses, or who can arrange for drawing-room meetings, are asked to communicate with her at 11, Grange Park-gardens, Ealing, London, W. The following is a copy of the pledge taken by those who join the women's branch:—

I promise, by the help of God—

(1) To maintain modesty in language, behaviour, and dress.

(2) To avoid and discourage all reading, art, and amusements calculated to give an impure taint to my thoughts, or to the lives of others.

(3) To uphold the law of purity as equally binding upon men and women.

(4) To be careful of the reputation of others, and to abstain from listening to, or taking part in, conversation dealing with painful details, except with the aim of preventing the further occurrence of evil.

(5) To be watchful to guard the purity of those younger than myself, and to train in modest habits any children who may come under my care.

(6) To make it my aim to be as far as possible worthy of the high estimate which Christian chivalry places upon the character of my sex.

On Thursday, March 5, a crowded audience of men only, gathered in the large lecture hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Birmingham, to listen to a lecture on Social Purity, from Mr. James B. Wookey. Prebendary Mason took the chair, and expressed his thankfulness to see such a large number of young men present. Mr. Wookey's earnest words, while pleading with the senior hands in warehouses, shops, &c., to protect the youths that came to them from pure homes, evidently went to the heart, judging from the applause that greeted his appeal. At the close over 120 signed the Purity pledge.

Mr. Wookey paid a second visit to Nottingham on Sunday evening, March 8, when he spoke to about 350 men in St. Michael's Hall, Alfreton-road. Rev. C. Lea Wilson, Vicar, presided over the meeting, which was of a deeply spiritual character. The breathless attention with which Mr. Wookey's address was listened to, proved that he was not speaking at any rate to careless hearers. At the close several came forward desiring to consecrate their lives to God. After that, Mr. Wookey was kept in the vestry until eleven o'clock, speaking with young men who sought counsel and help. A White Cross Army has been already established in the parish, and rescue meetings are to be held. Much good has resulted even from the very first meeting.

On Thursday, March 12, Mr. Wookey delivered an earnest address to upwards of a thousand persons gathered at Miss Weston's Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth. He spoke for an hour and a quarter with great power. At the close of his address, several present asked for prayer on their behalf.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

ON Thursday, the 5th instant, a meeting for prayer and Conference was held here as to the best means for promoting the work. Rev. Wm. Tyler presided. Sincere thanksgiving for God's help and goodness mingled with fervent supplication for direction and blessing in the future.

In giving account of the work, Mr. H. Hill, Hon. Sec., said the estimated cost of the new building for land and erection was £10,500, towards which nearly £6000 has been contributed. Besides the £5000 still needed for the building, the cost of furniture and fittings has to be met. The first portion of the building is expected to be finished in July, and formally opened in the autumn. A bazaar will be held at Cannon-street Hotel, on behalf of the Institution, on June 2, 3, and 4.

All information will gladly be supplied by the Hon. Sec., Mr. Henry Hill, 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

YOUNG WOMEN IN GLASGOW.—Dear Sir,—In your issue of 5th inst. you make prominent mention of a servants' registry which has just been opened at 350, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow. Will you kindly intimate that for the past five years such a registry has been in operation in connection with the Glasgow Y.W.C.A.? Meetings and classes for religious and educational improvement are carried on in connection with the Association. During the past six months the names of 1300 servants have been enrolled, and of these 1000 have got suitable places.

Catherine B. Wolverton,
Vice-President Glasgow Y.W.C.A.

Notes and Comments.

IN a book by Dr. George Turner, with a preface by E. B. Tylor, F.R.S., entitled, SAMOA A HUNDRED YEARS AGO, there are some curious and interesting evidences of traditions from the Book of Genesis, which survived among the Polynesians. They believed, before being visited by missionaries, that the first mother was made from earth, and called Ivi, a rib; that an ancient god sent his daughter to the earth in the form of a bird, but at first she found no resting place, only water, but after coming again found land. Of Jonah and the whale there were three distinct traditions.

The Spectator has lately, in a criticism on an essay of Dr. R. W. Dale, had two articles on the true ideal of Christian character. The writer contends that it is not the man who lives ardently in the wholesome joys of life, but the man who looks on these wholesome joys with a certain dread lest he should be too absorbed in them, and lest he should give to that which is transient what ought to be reserved for what is eternal, who conforms to the teaching of Christ, and of the Apostles. May we not ask whether our present commercial distress is not a merciful rebuke because Englishmen were forgetting the internal life, and were too prosperous to listen to the voice of God in the heart?

The same paper, in a review of Dean Plumptre's book on "The Spirits in Prison" (Isbister & Co.), has some remarks which might usefully be remembered. Instead of a fancied harmony which pleases a human logic, the most effective teaching may appear to be one of logical contradictions. On the one hand there may be a revelation of the love of God in Christ which excludes fear, and on the other a warning of the consequences of wilful unbelief which excludes hope. Christ reveals truth to fix men's thoughts on moral responsibilities, with their tremendous issues; and this the wise teacher will do.

A letter from Spain in The Nonconformist and Independent gives a distressing picture of the state of that country: inundations, earthquakes, bad harvests, devastations of locusts and the phylloxera, have wasted and impoverished. Yet bull-rings are springing up everywhere; the Church of Rome builds new convents, stirs up hatred to Protestantism, and does nothing tc check the brutal cruelties of the national pastime. Meanwhile less is done by means of education to check ignorance and unutterable corruption. Christian brethren in Spain have a terrible task before them. Let us entreat the Lord to stand by them.

The current Monthly Reporter of the Bible Society has a communication on the Religious Awakening among the Jews of Southern Russia. The spirit of anxious inquiry is extending among them. A letter has come to the Bible Society asking for documents in proof of Jesus being sent of God, and speaking of their dread lest they should be found denying Him. Let us note how Isaiah lxv. 8—10 is being fulfilled. May not our thoughts have been directed too much to the turning to the Messiah of the whole people of the Jews, to the forgetfulness of the fact that there is an Israel within Israel, and that it is God's "elect," "a seed out of Jacob," "my people which have sought Me," which shall inherit the mountain of God?

The visit to Aberdeen of Messrs. Stanley Smith and Charles Studd has borne fruit. Mr. A. C. Ross, son of a retired officer of the Indian Army, in that city, gave himself to the Lord's work to be used as He might direct at their first visit. As the result of manifest providential leading, he decided on the African Mission fields, for which he will sail at the end of the present week. He had qualified himself for and was about to begin life as a solicitor and advocate in the Granite City with many fair prospects. We would ask the prayers of our readers for him and those he leaves behind. May many more of our young men and young women follow so blessed an example.

A Christian Conference for the consideration of such practical and present day subjects as "Saving the Children," "Poverty in Great Cities," "Friendless and Fallen," will be held at Powis Hall, Westbourne Park, on April 14—16, convened by Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson and Pastor F. H. White. A number of Christian workers having an experimental acquaintance with these topics are expected to speak. Further particulars will be duly announced.

The deeply-interesting "Sketches of Home Mission Work," by a Presbyterian Elder, which lately appeared in our columns, with some additions, have been issued in book form, with an introductory note by our esteemed friend, Rev. John Macpherson, Dundee. The publishers are Messrs. Winter, Duncan & Co., Castle-street, Dundee, N.B.

We greatly regret that the London School Board has just, by a majority of 31 to 4, rejected Miss Helen Taylor's motion for the discontinuance of home lessons, and supported an amendment, to the effect that home lessons should only be done away with in cases where the parents object or the children are in delicate health. We do not always agree with the views of Truth, but we heartily endorse his view in regarding home lessons as a barbarity. It is a question of childish happiness. The over-pressure makes thousands miserable during those few early years of life in which alone there can ever be much happiness (humanly speaking) for the poor. The writer just quoted makes a very good suggestion—that the school-day be divided into two parts, three hours morning, and three hours afternoon; let a different set of children go to each, and let them be free after their three hours, to eat, drink, sleep, play, or earn their living. The mother with two girls of school age, and a baby, could then send one to morning school, the other to afternoon school, and have the day to herself for washing or charing. Certainly three hours a day, from five to thirteen, are enough to teach any child the three R's thoroughly, that is to say, all that he is properly entitled to be taught at the public expense.

The Bishops are sometimes severly criticised. We are glad to record the following: Bishop Wordsworth has not only refused his retiring pension, but has behaved with princely liberality towards the See of Southwell, in the endowment fund of which there is a deficiency of £15,000, for which the Bishop and certain guarantors are liable. Dr. Wordsworth had originally contributed £3000 to this fund, and since his resignation of the See of Lincoln, he has placed a sufficient sum in the hands of two trustees to provide for the whole deficiency. There ought not, and probably will not be any need, however, to tax the Bishop and his family with so large a sum.

Mr. Frederick N. Charrington is a brave man, having the courage of his convictions. His retirement from the brewery with which his name is connected is an old story now. He has been for a long time fighting "The Battle of the Music Halls." A penny pamphlet under this title has been published at his Book Saloon, 31, Mile-end-road, which contains some of the saddest possible revelations, chiefly concerning one of these dens of infamy, of which Mr. Charrington has pressed the battle to the gate, and to which, as to scores of others, it is a crying disgrace that a licence should be granted.

We have reported at some length in previous numbers the remarkable work of grace among the students of Edinburgh University. The following words of Professor Simpson in concluding an address on "Hezekiah's Revival," at the Students' Prayer-meeting, are worthy of quotation, as showing what each may be expected to do in this time of harvest:—

> "Our study of Hezekiah's revival will not have been lost if, while this cloud of blessing overhangs us, each sower will cast abroad the seed with more liberal hand; if, whilst this reaping time endures, some who have been idle hitherto will come to share our harvest joy; and if, while this gale of grace is blowing, some younger voyager on the sea of life will set his sails to catch the breeze that will bear him surely to the shores of bliss."

The Bishop of Truro lately preached at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The sermon (says the World), on the value of a season of retirement like Lent, was listened to with sustained attention. Every eye seemed to be fixed on his earnest countenance, as, in plain and vigorous language, he denounced the vices and lamented the indolence of the wealthy classes. An absurd traditional etiquette would be transgressed by a sermon preached in the Chapel Royal, St. James's, appearing in print. This is a reasonable restriction on sermons preached before Her Majesty in private, but pulpit addresses of exceptional interest should not be thus withheld from the public.

We cannot but deeply regret the selection of Canon King as Bishop-designate of Lincoln. He appears to be an upholder of the doctrine of the Real Presence, the [Roman] Catholic doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice, auricular confession and absolution, and masses for the dead. Every such appointment must tend either to Romanise or to disestablish the Church—perhaps both. There ought to be a protest everywhere against this deplorable departure from the principles of the Protestant Reformation.

"It is 'the prancing Pro-Consuls,'" says the Echo, "who continually involve us in war. Fifteen years ago, when this Afghan question was the subject of negociation between Prince Gortchakoff and Lord Clarendon, the Russian statesman assured the English Minister that peace between the two countries would never be in danger if it were not for the military men on the frontier. 'The military commanders,' said the Prince, 'had all exceeded their instructions in the hope of gaining distinction'—that is, for decorations and the like. So it is with our own men." Thus the welfare of nations is sacrificed to personal interests. Nor are soldiers, whose business is war, the only promoters of quarrels. The Press has something to answer for. It is to be hoped that in the present delicate and difficult juncture, all newspapers will refrain from needless inflammatory and exasperating remarks.

A correspondent of the Times at Vienna as seen a letter stating that Osman Digna s in continual intercourse with the coast of he Red Sea, and that in January he received 000 cases of Remington rifles by sea. The ame paper quotes Lord Salisbury, who describes as intolerable "the protection given o foreign industries by the railway companies harging rates enormously disproportionate n favour of the foreign importer, as against he native producer. American cattle brought o Liverpool and slaughtered there are carried t the rate of 25s. a ton, while the charge for he conveyance of English meat from Liverpool to London is 50s. a ton." Sometimes ve hear of a man so despicable that by a igure of speech he would sell his own mother. t does seem as if there were something in raffic so hardening as to reconcile men to elling their mother-country and their nother's sons.

Our Wesleyan friends have made a good eginning in their project to raise a special und of £25,000, for evangelistic work in the eedy parts of the metropolis. At the inugural meetings in City-road Chapel last veek, £8000 were subscribed, and the whole f the indicated sum will doubtless be forthoming. Whether or not this movement vill prove to be "the renascence of London Iethodism," as a contemporary hints, we re not specially anxious; if it produces a evival of the spirit of devotion and aggresive Gospel work out of which Methodism prang, it will indeed be a thing to be rejoiced ver by Christians of every name. We hope ur Methodist friends will pursue this work a way worthy of their past history as a hristian community.

Northern Ohio has been struck with "this ocial cyclone, the skating-rink craze," and e demoralising effects of the fascinating xcitement are very grievous. It is to be oped that as in England, it will soon die ut.

We are glad to read in the Times a vigorus protest against the gambling at Monte arlo :—

> "Mr. Harris, the British Vice-Consul, in a amphlet entitled 'La Décadence de Nice,' menons as one of the causes of the crisis the onte Carlo gaming-tables and the bad comany attracted by them. Another witness to the oxious influence of this pestiferous neighbour is M. e Magnin, a Paris barrister, who has connections Nice, and is well acquainted with the Riviera. a pamphlet styled 'Monte Carlo et France,' M. e Magnin shows, by the history of Monaco, the llacy of its pretensions to independence, and he oncludes by saying, 'It is time for France to take e broom, and to free a country which it protects om an evil that is eating into it, from a stain that ishonours it.'"

There is indeed cause sufficiently terrible demand from all Europe the cry for the utting-up of this bottomless pit.

> "A clerk in a large counting-house in Germany as spending his honeymoon in Italy, and received ,000f. in payment of a bill due to his employers. n his way back he stopped at Monte Carlo, and, aring its temptations, entrusted the money to his ife's custody. He was called away for a time, d found, on his return, that his wife was missing. e made inquiries to no purpose. At last he learned at a young woman, after losing 40,000f. at the aming-tables, had thrown herself into the sea. he bride, it appeared, had entered the Casino om curiosity, had staked some small sums, and en, egged on by women believed to have been ationed there for the purpose, had lost everything. he Casino authorities had ordered the affair to be ept secret, and, but for one of the officials being uched by the husband's anguish, the young man ight never have known what had become of his ife. As it is, the interested advocates of Monte arlo will probably deny the whole story."

Such is the last pathetic but ghastly incient of this den of human wolves.

Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., has sent to the newspapers an appeal on the present crisis, from which we extract a few paragraphs:

> "It is impossible not to feel appalled at the prospect opening before us in view of the new aggressive policy proposed in the Soudan. The enterprises into which we are about to be launched are so vast and vague, involving so enormous an expenditure of money, and such a terrible waste of human life, and, above all, likely to involve us in such immense and illimitable responsibilities in the future, whatever may be the issue of our expedition, that we may well be staggered at entering upon such a career. . . . Happily, there is likely to be a long interval before active military operations can re-commence. Why not avail ourselves of that interval? Not in any spirit of angry antagonism to Mr. Gladstone and his Government, but, on the contrary, in a spirit of the friendliest anxiety to save the Minister whom we honour and revere, from a policy which may prove fatal. Why not pour into Mr. Gladstone's hands letters and memorials from all parts of the kingdom, most respectfully representing to him that the people of this country, more especially that portion of the people who have ever been his truest friends and supporters, do not approve of a further policy of aggression and adventure in the Soudan? May we not believe that such an expression of public opinion would be welcomed by Mr. Gladstone himself?"

The suggestion to urge our Government to desist from this wild enterprise has our unqualified approval and heartiest Amen. We went to war in Egypt largely in the interests of bondholders; we left our noble Gordon without an attempt to save him until too late; and now to continue this wasteful war, when all that could be gained may probably be accomplished by peaceful means, does seem like infatuation.

A lady, once a Roman Catholic, protests against the processions through the streets, during the late West-end Mission, of surpliced choirs with lamps and banners. This is the thin end of the wedge. If this be allowed, why may not Roman Catholics have their surpliced processions with all their paraphernalia also?

Pastor Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, North Spain, is now, happily, convalescent. He and his wife expect to be in London in the first week in April, and are desirous of addressing English friends on behalf of their mission work. Any who can aid them in this effort are desired to write to Pastor Rodriguez, care of Colonel Baynes, 87, Elgin-crescent, Notting-hill, W.

A Sale of Work is intended to be held in the Church-room, St. Paul's, Onslow-square, (by kind permission of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe), on Thursday and Friday, March 19 and 20, on behalf of the Dublin Ragged Schools and Homes. Over 2000 children were, during the year 1884, instructed in the Word of God in these Schools, through the agency of the Society for Irish Church Missions. Contributions of work, china, terra cotta, money, &c., may be sent to the Countess Cairns, 5, Cromwell-houses, S.W.; Mrs. Edward Maynard Denny, 11, Bryanston-square, W.; Mrs. Townsend, 13, Vanbrugh Park-road, Blackheath, S.E.; to 11, Buckingham-street, Strand; or to any other of the ladies who have kindly consented to become stall-holders. The Sale will be opened on Thursday at 12 noon, by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and on Friday by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke. It will be closed each night at 7. We are glad to see that moderate prices are to be charged, and no lotteries or raffles permitted. On all hands the hopes of Christians and reformers are set upon the young, and certainly there is no brighter hope for Ireland than to instil Gospel truth into the hearts of her young children.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is a vigorous religious revolutionist. In his article on "The Renascence of London Methodism," he says:—

> "The neglected parts of London can never be evangelised upon what are called 'the old lines.' 'The old lines' have emptied Spitalfields, St. George's, the Seamen's Chapel, and other splendid centres of Christian work. The old lines, the old pews, the old pew rents, the old quarterly collections, the old times, and, if necessary, the old trustees, the old officials, and the old congregation, must retire from the scene to some congenial resting-place. The time has come when the salvation of 10,000 immortal souls can be no longer subordinated to the imaginary interests of a handful of excellent Christians."

Most true. All vested interests, imaginary or real, must be subordinated to the doing of God's work.

An article in another column shows that in many places in America the Gospel, in these times of depression, is bringing the joy of the Lord to thousands. It is so also at home. On every hand there is a desire to hear, and a readiness to receive the Word of God, and wherever the Gospel is faithfully and intelligibly preached souls are being saved.

A CONFERENCE IN BRIGHTON.

SINCE February 14, Mr. Spencer Walton has been holding missions in connection with North-street Church, and at the Connaught Institute. These have been linked with his further work at Hove, by a Conference held for two days in the Pavilion, last week, with evening meetings at the Connaught Institute, Lewes-road. At these meetings the subjects taken up were "Christ for us," "Christ in us," "The work of the Holy Ghost," "Life, work, and rest," "The work amongst our railway-men," and "Work in connection with Mildmay." The various speakers of the two days were Rev. Lindsay Young, Rev. Townsend Storrs, Rev. F. Paynter, Rev. Sydenham Dixon, Rev. J. B. Figgis, Messrs. Bloumont, Spencer Walton, and H. Eliot Walton, Mrs. Yates, Miss Mason, and Miss Dundas.

The fulness of the Saviour and the mighty power of the life of the child of God, who claims the full provision made for him by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost, were very clearly set forth, and by many gladly accepted. Some very precious testimony was given as to the faithfulness of God in his promises to those who simply obey Him. The truth was faithfully spoken of the need of heart-searching, and of the cleansing of the vessels that should be filled with the Holy Ghost. As one said, "Thank God we are living in a day when we are gauging the possibilities of faith; we need a large spiritual receptivity. Let us realise our position as sons of God. Look at Luke i. 35. Surely a life beginning with such a stupendous miracle could not be a common life. What a life that was summed up in the words 'He went about doing good.' Oh that we may realise that we are born of the Spirit, and are depending on the power of the Highest, the Spirit of might (Isaiah ii. 2). Then shall we be living epistles, and have power to witness for God."

SOUTH LONDON.—Many instances of converting and restoring grace have occurred at Penarth-street Mission Hall within the past few weeks; souls have been born again, and wanderers have been restored, for which all praise is due to God. Intense poverty exists in the neighbourhod; some families of young children having been known to go without food for a whole day. And on Fridays, when soup is given away at the hall, many a sad tale of misery is told by the applicants, several of whom are apparently half starved. Will readers join us in praising God for what He has done in our midst, and ask that "showers of blessing" may descend upon this dark spot in South London?

DR. SOMERVILLE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

YOU will rejoice to know that God has answered prayer for Constantinople, in the commencement of a mission such as has never before been known in this city of Constantine and Chrysostom. Dr. Somerville, after following in the track of the great Apostle at Athens, Corinth, Ephesus, Smyrna, and other sites of the ancient Churches of Asia Minor, came to Constantinople, accompanied by his son. For the last ten days two, and sometimes three, daily meetings have been held, either in Pera, the European quarter, or in one of the villages on the Bosphorus. Much interest has been awakened thus far.

Dr. Somerville's style of presenting Gospel truth is admirably suited to the Oriental mind. Some one here has aptly termed him "The Artist preacher," for he excels in the picturesque, and makes "the old, old story" all alive with his graphic and vivid delineations of scenes, persons, and events. This rivets the attention of his hearers, and prepares the way for his earnest and vigorous application of the spiritual truths most adapted to the individual needs of his audience.

Perhaps no gathering to hear Dr. Somerville has surpassed in interest that at Herbert College, situated on the Bosphorus, last Sunday morning. It was inspiring to see the students, 150 or more in number, of various nationalities, from all parts of the Turkish Empire, and other regions, listening with unabated interest to this veteran soldier of the Cross for two hours, while he pictured to them the rise of the Christian Church in the call of the first five disciples (John i. 35—50). It was an admirable sermon for young men, placing before them in strong relief the beauty and the glory of following Christ.

At an evening meeting for Greeks in Pera, the hall hired for the occasion was filled; between four and five hundred were present, Dr. Somerville speaking through an interpreter. The leading daily journals in Constantinople, English and French, now announces these meetings, and God's way is being prepared for yet greater things, we trust. A meeting for ladies, in French, interpreted by one of their number, was held in the Chapel of the Dutch Embassy, Pera.

If the interest now awakened continues, it is probable that the mission will be prolonged for some weeks to come, there are yet so many quarters to be visited, and so many nationalities to be reached. For this the continual intercession of God's people at home is most earnestly implored.

It is doubtful if in any of the large towns Dr. Somerville has visited, in Europe, Asia, Africa, or British America, he has ever encountered such peculiar difficulties as attend evangelistic work in the capital of the Ottoman Empire. It is a great conglomeration of towns and villages, built upon so many hills, and divided by so many inland seas that it has no one centre. The fact that, in spite of all obstacles, so many from the various villages have attended the morning meetings (at 9.30) speaks well for the sustained interest. Another hindrance has been a suitable and central place of meeting, which should at the same time be neutral ground. Constantinople has no such hall as yet for evangelistic purposes, and it is an imperative need, which will, we trust, ere long be met.

Maria A. West.

Constantinople, February 26.

Y.W.C.A., SIDCUP.—A happy season of refreshing from the Lord was enjoyed this last week on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings in the new rooms, 4, Maidstone-terrace. On Thursday evening a conversazione at the Public Hall was held, when a large number of friends were present. Dr. Gritton presided, and the ministers of various denominations were present. Miss Macleod spoke of the objects and work of the Y.W.C.A.'s. Mr. Marsack Day gave a profitable and earnest Gospel address. There was some bright and hearty singing from The Christian Choir. This is surely one of the best ways of keeping together our young sisters, especially those away from home. Any young women coming to Sidcup will be heartily welcomed. E. R.

Y.M.C.A. WORK.

OXFORD.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held on the evening of March 3 in the Town Hall. Canon Girdleston occupied the chair, and delivered an earnest address, followed by Mr. Hind Smith, Rev. F. Webster (President of the Association), Mr. Badcock, Rev. S. Walmsley, and Mr. Beaumont.

CIRENCESTER.

On Monday, 9th inst., Mr. Hind Smith addressed a large gathering of young people here on "The work and agencies of the Y.M.C.A." An interesting feature in the meeting was the presence of Mr. E. Creese, one of the first secretaries of the London Association in 1844. The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. are both doing a good work in this town.

WOKINGHAM.

A meeting was held in the Town Hall, on March 4, for the purpose of establishing a branch of the Y.M.C.A. in this town. Mr. D. Heclas presided. Mr. Hind Smith gave an address on "Twenty Reasons why there should be a Y.M.C.A. in every Town." At the close a considerable number of young men gave in their names as members, a Provisional Committee was formed, and the London rules were adopted. Mr. Phillips was elected hon. secretary.

BATH.

The annual meeting of this branch was held on March 10, in the Assembly Rooms. The Mayor (Mr. H. Cossham) presided, and was supported by Prebendery Anderson and by other well-known clergymen and laymen. Mr. Hind Smith dwelt upon the special field of service occupied by the Y.M.C.A., and impressed on all the members the need of union, Catholicity and loyalty. On the following evening Mr. Hind Smith delivered an address to young men on the importance of decision for Christ, and personal influence.

SOUTH MIDLAND DISTRICT.

The Associations of this district held their quarterly Conference at Oxford on Tuesday, March 3, presided over by Sir J. H. Herschell. Papers were read by Messrs. H. T. Andrews, of Magdalen College, R. Burn, of Aldersgate-street, and W. Hind Smith. The District Report showed that three new Associations had been added during the quarter, and about twenty towns had been united with a view to the formation of Associations, in several cases preliminary steps having been taken. Messrs. Beaumont, Salter, and others took part in the Conference.

WALTHAMSTOW, E.

The friends of the Y.M.C.A. in this far eastern suburb have good reason to be satisfied with their inaugural meeting at the Town Hall on Tuesday evening last week. The history of this branch was briefly stated by Mr. Wallis, of Forest-gate. A few young men met together in a room, at the invitation of a young lady, and that small and unpretentious gathering formed the nucleus of what has now grown into an organisation, having already some fifty or sixty members. The present building, situated in High-street, Leytonstone, has been altered and furnished in homely style, and is now open daily to members of the Association. An iron hall stands in the rear, well adapted for lectures, and the garden in which it stands is laid out for recreative games.

Mr. B. Tabrum, one of the vice-presidents, and also the treasurer, followed with statements expressing hope for the success of the new Branch. In order to start free of debt, £100 was needed; ere the meeting closed we understood that about half this sum was raised.

Mr. George Williams, who presided, urged the young men to cultivate the mind as well as the heart. Let every respectable young man in the locality become either a member or an associate. A gentleman whom he knew went seventeen times to get a young fellow to join, and at last succeeded. In referring to the unsectarian character of the Y.M.C.A., he said the first man that attempted proselytising must be put out of the synagogue, neck and crop.

Mr. Elliott Howard pleaded the maintenance in the Association of a pure Christianity, and the exclusion of politics. Mr. R. Paton said he had never known a Y.M.C.A started better than this one, and the extent to which it is preserved as a Christian Association would ever be the measure of its power and blessing. Mr. A. Johnson, J.P., said he hoped ere long to see arrangements for a gymnasium completed. It was no small aid to physical health.

After some remarks by Mr. McCall, President, Mr. R. Burn, of the Aldersgate Branch, in a most lively and interesting address exhorted the young men never to be ashamed of Christ. If they wished to be strong and influential they must be whole-hearted.

BERLIN.

The development of the Y.M.C.A. movement here has certainly been phenomenal. Beginning two years ago with a membership of twenty, it now numbers over seven hundred. The work has been extended in all departments, and there is already a pressing need for larger accommodation, 300,000 marks being the estimate for accomplishing the building plans.

The relations of social classes in the city make it impossible to hold many general meetings, therefore special assemblies are held at the times most suitable for different classes. Social and literary meetings are also held, but the main purpose is always kept in the foreground. Mechanics, tradesmen, officers, and students have all received attention. At the close of the meetings a few remarks are always made by the President of the Association, explaining the work, and soliciting the sympathy and assistance of all present.

Baron Rothkirch, now at the head of the organisation, is exceptionally well qualified for the position which he fills; energetic, earnest, and thoroughly practical, very much of the success so far attained has been due to his wise leadership. Meetings for the reception of new members are held once a month. At the last of these twenty-two names were added, among which were four tradesmen, three labourers, and five students.

The work, as a whole, is much the same as that pursued by the English Associations. The methods, however, naturally vary in some respects according to the various circumstances and demands. The field is large, the necessity great. Already many young men have been brought in who were totally beyond the reach of the ordinary church influences. The cause receives the hearty support and sympathy of the city clergy, and several of them have spoken in the Association rooms. Pastor von Schluembach, especially, has been during the last year a most valuable helper. He has also recently made a tour in Southern Germany, addressing different Associations and preaching in many places. He returns with new hope and zeal for a short period of work here, previous to his departure for America.

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS' SOCIETY.—At the last periodical meeting of the General Board of Management of this institution, the Society's usual winter awards of annual grants of pecuniary relief to poor widows and orphans of fishermen and mariners were allotted to the large number of 1288 necessitous recipients. These figures embraced 511 widows and 777 orphans respectively, carefully selected from numerous applicants at almost every port and fishing town in the United Kingdom, and, in conjunction with a like number similarly included in the Society's usual summer awards of these grants, represent a total of over 2500 desolate widows and orphans of drowned fishermen and mariners so assisted annually. Under further heads of this Society's relief operations, as the result of the various maritime disasters, with many collisions and minor casualties, lately occurring, the urgent claims upon the Society had for several weeks past entailed an average distribution of nearly £500 per week; the cases so relieved day by day, at one or other of the Society's 1200 honorary agencies, comprehend well nigh every class and circumstance, accident and need.

POLICEMEN AT EXETER HALL.

IT will rejoice the hearts of many to know that the Christian Policemen's Association actually required the large Exeter Hall for its second annual meeting, which was held on Tuesday evening last week. It was attended not only by the men of the metropolis, but delegates from branches in England, Ireland, and Scotland were present to cheer and be cheered by the glad news of the great prosperity of the Association. The greater part of the day had been spent in hearing their reports, and the public meeting was held at five o'clock, with Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., as chairman. He was surrounded by many influential friends who are warm supporters of the movement. Letters were received from Sir E. Henderson, and Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., the Under Secretary for the Home Department, wishing the Association and the meeting great success.

The report submitted by Mr. J. H. Tritton was of the most encouraging nature. The membership has more than doubled during the last twelve months, there being now 1604 on the roll. Of this number 922 belong to the Metropolitan and City forces. The Association is not open to every policeman. Membership may only be attained if the applicant can truthfully say that he believes on the Lord Jesus Christ with the heart, is willing to confess Him with the mouth, and is determined by his grace to follow Him in his life. Bible study is one of the chief aims of the Association, and there are at present over 150 Bible-classes and weekly meetings. There are also classes for the study of sacred music. There are over a thousand members of the force in the Bible and Prayer Union. Their periodical On and Off Duty, has reached a circulation of 11,000 copies per month, and through its influence friends in Canada are aiming at the formation of a C.P.A. there also. The committee have every reason at the close of the second year to thank God, take courage, and proceed in his strength with the work.

The Chairman said that perhaps the first object of the meeting was that members of the police force might know how many were anxious to help them in every possible way, and to sympathise with them in the difficulties of their calling. Opportunities were few in which citizens could thank policemen collectively for their many services, and he was glad to seize the occasion. They did their work well, with firmness and discretion; the condition of London was a proof of it. But there was a higher life, and that it should be nurtured and strengthened he could give no better advice than to join and assist in their own Association.

The Bishop of Bedford followed with one of those practical addresses for which he is famous. He seemed familiar with the details of the duty of the men, and used them in pressing home the truth. Especially he warned them that nothing less than the double patrol of watching and prayer could secure the heart from the temptations of the enemy.

He was ably followed by Rev E. A. Stuart, who gave an outspoken address on "Christian Manliness." Pastor Charles Spurgeon, who succeeded him, earnestly enforced the requirements of the Christian character, illustrated by the life of David.

The next two speakers, who hold office in the Police administration — Mr. Munro and Mr. Pennefather—were able to testify that in no sphere was a Christian man of greater service than in the ranks of the police. Superintendent Skeats told how for twenty-five years he had been connected with the Force. During that time he had found salvation, and there were certain spots in the West-end squares around which clustered his holiest associations, owing to the communion he had enjoyed in the night watches. Mr. J. E. Mathieson and Mr. A. C. P. Coote followed, the latter announcing amid great applause that a fortnight ago a Christian Firemen's Association had been started, and had a membership of twenty-five already.

The meeting continued till ten o'clock, the last two hours being occupied by the men themselves in singing, praising, testimony, and prayer. As the first annual meeting was the birthplace of souls, we have reason to believe that the second anniversary was owned and honoured in a similar manner.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

THE meetings greatly increased in blessing during the past week. They were held each evening in Landsdowne U. P. Church. Night after night crowds of children and young people came pressing into the large church, where ushers were waiting to receive them. They were placed alternately, first a seat full of boys, and then of girls. We have noticed some advantages in this method.

At the noon-meeting one day we observed a lady with a little boy, who seemed deeply interested. At the close she said she had come from the country with her son to attend these meetings, earnestly praying that he might be converted. Like Hannah, she had come solemnly to dedicate her son to the Lord. She said she was converted in Mr. Hammond's meetings when he was here seventeen years ago, and had ever since rejoiced in the love of Jesus. In the afternoon both were in the meeting at the Queen's Rooms, and while one of the ministers was talking and praying with the son he professed to receive Christ. He was again at the evening service, his face radiant with joy.

A little German girl has been attending the meetings, who with difficulty could speak the English language. Her bright face attracted attention. The second night of the meetings she was found bathed in tears. On a succeeding night, among a number of interesting letters read in the meeting, was one from her, stating that she had given her heart to Jesus, that she was going home to Germany soon, and would tell her mamma and little brother about Jesus. In all our experience we have never seen such a deep work among the young people in Glasgow.

The adults who have been present have generally seemed nearly as much impressed as the children. One evening a nurse, with five children, asked to have some one speak in the inquiry-meeting to those she had brought with her. It was soon noticed that the tears were trickling down her own cheeks, and that she was deeply concerned for herself as well as for the children. She was earnestly pointed to Christ, and, it is hoped, went away trusting in Him.

At the noon-meeting on Friday, a gentleman connected with the Moravian Missionary Society gave an interesting account of his correspondence with Dr. Sheldon Jackson, of New York, in reference to the establishment of a new mission on the North-western coast of Alaska. He was interested to find in The Reaper and the Harvest that Mr. Hammond visited Alaska ten years ago, and preached to the Esquimaux there before any other missionaries had penetrated so far North. His special object in going was, not only to preach the Gospel, but to induce missionaries to go there and plant the Standard of the Cross through those valleys and on those icy mountain peaks.

Such a deep interest was awakened by the remarks made that it was decided to devote the noon-meeting on Wednesday entirely to Alaska.

COW CROSS MISSION.—The annual report of the Cow Cross Mission records the satisfactory progress of the work. The operations of such a mission have, of necessity, much sameness year by year. While the ordinary work, e.g., Sunday-school, band of hope, mothers' meetings, children's dinners, open-air preaching, &c., has been maintained, a special feature during the past winter has been the occupancy of Sadler's Wells Theatre for Sunday-evening services. As already stated in our columns, both the attendance and the blessing have justified Mr. Catlin in this. A question is raised in this report as to whether the converts stand, and the answer is a very decided affirmative. Those who wish to peruse this report can obtain it by writing to Mr. William Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

IS THE DEVIL DEAD?

MEN don't believe in the devil now
As their fathers used to do;
They've forced the door of the broadest creed
To let his majesty through.

There isn't a print of his cloven foot,
Or a fiery dart from his bow,
To be found in earth or air to-day,
For the world has voted so.

But who is it mixes the fatal draught
That palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of each passing year
With ten hundred thousand slain?

Who blights the bloom of the land to-day
With the fiery breath of hell?
If the devil isn't, and never was,
Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint?
Who digs the pit for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the fields of time
Wherever God sows his wheat?

The devil is voted not to be,
And of course the thing is true,
But who is doing the kind of work
The devil alone can do?

They say he does not go around
Like a roaring lion now,
But who shall we hold responsible
For the everlasting row

To be heard in home, and Church, and State,
To the earth's remotest bound,
If the devil by a unanimous vote
Is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody come to the front forthwith,
And make his bow, and show
How the frauds and crimes of a single day
Spring up: we want to know.

The devil is voted not to be,
So of course the devil's gone;
But simple people would like to know
Who carries his business on.

OBITUARY.

MISS JULIA CORKE.

THIS Christian lady, residing at Ledbury-road, Bayswater, was called home very suddenly last Monday week. Her last words were, "Father, take me." Her prayer was answered immediately. Our honoured and gifted sister laboured long and well in the Gospel. By her lectures, &c., she did much to bring to the light the dark deeds and doctrines of the Church of Rome. Her last effort in this direction was a letter which appeared, after her death, in The Rock of last week, in which she indignantly protested against the Romanising efforts of a certain Canon, who has been pleading for "a consecration of the Sacrament," because of the difficulties of what he calls "a reverent consecration" in the homes of the poor. Miss Corke was a true Christian philanthropist, and used both pen and voice unceasingly on behalf of the oppressed, especially those of her own sex. Her latest work was in conjunction with Miss Julia Fox, of Kennington Park-road, to endeavour to establish what she designated "Luther Memorial Homes," to shelter gentlewomen past the vigour of youth, and suddenly reduced from affluence to poverty. The sufferings of such she has eloquently depicted in a little work, entitled "What shall we do with them?" No better memorial of herself could be raised than to bring the noble effort which she succeeded in starting to its desired consummation. Miss Corke was interred last Saturday in the Kensal Green Cemetery, after a short service in the Talbot Tabernacle, conducted by her friend and pastor, Mr. Frank White.

LITERATURE FOR SOUTH AFRICA.—While thanking the friends who have responded to his recent appeal for literature for Bands of Hope at Natal, Mr. W. Cowey asks us to state that he would still be glad to receive Gospel Temperance tracts, not only for the Bands of Hope, but for distribution in prisons and hospitals. Parcels may be sent to him (carriage paid) to the care of Messrs. Perrots and Perrots, 24, Tentor-street, Moor-lane, E.C.

ENGLAND AND THE EAST.

MOST interesting letters from Messrs. Stanley Smith and C. T. Studd have come to hand from the steamer on which they and their five fellow-missionaries were sailing past the Egyptian desert. They had learned the death of the brave Gordon, and Mr. Studd writes:—

"It seems an easy matter, and occupies a very short time, to send 12,000 men to shed blood; but why are there not 12,000 also going out to save souls? I wonder if each English soldier will want a special call from the Queen of England before he 'decides to go' to Egypt, or whether they will be content to obey the Marching Orders?"

Our friends had not then heard of the horrible news of the possibility of war with Russia. Last year it was my privilege to spend months mingling with the rich and the poor in Russia, receiving of their kindness and conducting meetings in the State Churches of a Lutheran Russian province, through the hospitality of the State clergy. You can imagine then, how, to me it appears a thing most monstrous that these two countries, England and Russia, like maddened beasts, should rush at one another—England drawing into the strife over 250,000,000 of our Indian fellow-subjects and Russia 100,000,000, whilst the State clergy on each side, professing to believe in the one universal Christian Church, should be simultaneously praying that the other side should be destroyed. The war might be over in three years, but a generation of grave-diggers could not bury the hated remembrance of it.

The letters, both of Mr. C. T. Studd and Mr. S. Smith, tell of most interesting conversions on board. It is evident they have not been idle since their farewell meeting in Exeter Hall.

I have just heard that orders for copies of the March number of "China's Millions," in which the speeches are reported of themselves and their five comrades at their farewell meeting, have been coming in at the rate of about 1000 a day. One friend in London supplied a copy to each of the students at all the Universities in Scotland—about 4600. A strong desire is felt that Oxford and Cambridge should be similarly supplied. This is well, but let us never forget the parting words of young Stanley Smith about the "cobblers," the "wheelwrights," and the "carpenters," and that others going abroad unsupported should make it the main business of their lives to spread the Gospel. Let us remember, too, the urgent need of women for evangelising the heathen.

Whilst, then, our seven young friends are not idle in their steamer, could not we make an effort to accomplish, before their voyage is ended, a far more general distribution of their farewell appeal, not amongst students merely, but amongst all classes of communicants, and especially amongst the working classes, coupled at this crisis with much prayer, not for China merely, but for missionary effort in all lands, and for the world's evangelization.

LEEDS RAILWAY MISSION.—Since space was kindly given for an appeal for the above object, many have co-operated in this work, most of whom find it a fruit-bearing service. The following is an extract chosen from among many letters received: "Your packets have not been sent in vain, as since you have written to me I have given my heart to God. I am trying to live so that at the last I shall hear Him say, Well done." At an after-meeting held lately in Leeds, many testified to having received blessing by means of monthly letters and packets. Leeds being such a large centre, there are many hundreds of railway officials not yet supplied. Further assistance is asked to carry on the work more extensively, or by each kind helper undertaking to send at their own expense, monthly, a 1d. gospel paper, also a few tracts, and a letter when convenient. Communications to be addressed to Mrs. Cambie, Elden-road, Worthing, E., who will forward names, with full particulars.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

At Swansea, Cardiff, Northlaw, Plymouth, Devonport, and other circuits, a mighty work has been going on among the Bible Christians, hundreds having been saved.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie.—The address of this evangelist is now Dulverton, Somerset. He hopes to engage in evangelistic work among the small towns and villages in the south-west of England.

Aldershot.—A correspondent of Joyful News reports that a dancing saloon attached to one of the worst gin-palaces in this place has lately been used with much success for Gospel services. The publican is taking steps to quit the trade.

A recognition meeting for new converts has just been held in connection with the late Evangelistic Mission at Kingston Chapel, Hull. More than three hundred adults have been won for Christ as a result of these services and those held in the neighbouring Brunswick Chapel. A noticeable feature of the mission was the street march on the first Sunday morning.

Rev. Thos. Cook has just held a mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Pendleton, Manchester. About a hundred persons entered the inquiry-rooms. The chapel is situated in the midst of a large population, and the mission promises to be very fruitful. Mr. Cook has recently revisited West Bromwich, to confirm in the faith the converts of a mission held there a short time since.

Herne Bay.—A most successful mission has just taken place here, specially interesting from its co-operative character. The meetings were held twice in the Town-hall, twice in the Congregational and twice in the Baptist Chapel. The preacher was Mr. William Sampson; he was to begin a fortnight's mission in a Wesleyan Chapel at Ipswich on Sunday last.

Herne Bay.—The mission conducted here by Mr. William Sampson, in which all the Nonconformist churches took part, was by far the most successful mission ever held in that select watering-place. We cannot yet tell how many were saved, but it is probable that upwards of thirty will be added to our own Society, and proportionate numbers to the other churches which took part in the mission.—Methodist Times.

St. Clement's, Bristol.—A ten days' mission for children and young people has been held here by Mr. Banaster, of the Children's Special Service Mission. The meetings were very well attended, and a great many always remained to the after-meetings. Several made an open profession of having received Christ, and very many more, we feel sure, were much blessed. The prayer-meetings on Sunday mornings, and a meeting for young Christians on Saturday evening, were especially happy times. W.

Mr. Richard Weaver is being much honoured of the Lord in Dorking, where he commenced an eight days mission here on March 8. From the first crowds gathered to hear him; from six and seven miles all round the county people have flocked to the services. Numbers of souls have professed salvation. The success of the meetings, and the unanimous wish of the people, have induced Mr. Weaver to remain another week. He is not strong in body, but God is with him, and the people are visibly affected under his powerful appeals.

Bournemouth.—Mr. John B. Bain has been carrying on the evangelistic services in the town hall during the absence of Captain Dawson, who went to assist in the West London Mission. The last two Sunday afternoons were times of great power and blessing. On Sunday week Mr. Bain's last meeting, a large proportion of the audience were broken down, and in the after-meeting, to which a large number stayed, many confessed Christ. Captain Dawson and Mr. Bain have commenced a fortnight's mission in Ryde. Mr. Bain has many friends in various places, who will be glad to learn that his health has been so far restored as to enable him to resume his Gospel work.

Bredfield, Suffolk.—An interesting mission has been held here from February 22 till March 2, by the Rev. Alfred J. Begbie, Vicar of Framsden. Night after night the little church was nicely filled, and a fair number stayed for after-meetings in the schoolroom. On the last Sunday a large number partook of the Lord's Supper, and in the evening the church was full to overflowing. On Monday, March 2, a thanksgiving meeting was held in the schoolroom, when a few earnest words were spoken by Rev. C. Wood, Vicar of Bredfield, and Rev. Alfred J. Begbie gave a few parting counsels to the servants of God. Signs are not wanting to show that sinners found peace, while believers were stirred and revived by a fresh proclamation of the grace of God.

Walsall.—A successful fifteen days' mission has been conducted here by Mr. John Elliott. The numbers kept increasing from night to night till the building was crowded. Meetings have been held specially for men and women in addition to open-air meetings and cottage meetings. The power of the Holy Spirit has been felt in a remarkable degree throughout.

Croft, near Leicester.—A series of meetings have been held in this village by Mr. J. Rosenzweig, of the Evangelisation Society. The village numbers about 500 inhabitants, who are chiefly quarrymen and labourers. The services were much enjoyed, the addresses by Mr. Rosenzweig being earnest, intelligent, faithful Gospel addresses. They were well attended throughout, and the attendance was larger towards the end of the series. Nightly there were new indications of the Lord's work prospering through the labours of his servant.

Scarborough.—A correspondent of the Methodist Times says:—"We have held one of the most blessed and fruitful evangelistic missions that I have ever witnessed. When the mission preacher came (Rev. Simpson Johnson, of Liverpool), he was sustained by genuinely enthusiastic workers. The impression produced at first gradually deepened, so that at the end of the first week we were obliged to continue the services. Rev. John Gould, of York, came to follow up the work, and the second Sunday of the series was a day long to be remembered by our teachers and scholars. Children have yielded their hearts to Christ, and persons upwards of sixty and seventy years of age have found their way into the inquiry-room."

Sheffield Workhouse.—For some time a few working men have been privileged to carry the glad tidings of salvation to the 1500 inmates of our Sheffield workhouse. There are upwards of 600 poor sufferers in the hospital and asylum, and to these we are specially permitted to tell "The old, old story of Jesus and his love. We hold a service for the vagrants (about 30 weekly). To them, and also in the sick wards, we are allowed to tell of the unsearchable riches of Christ, and to speak with them individually. Will your readers kindly help us with any old numbers of Quiver, Sunday at Home, or other good magazines, which would be so welcome; also any scrap pictures for the sick children? Joseph Smithard.

40, Lucas-street, Sheffield.

Victoria, N.S.W.—Writing from Melbourne, on January 14, Mr. Charles Carter, of the Evangelical Society of Victoria, says:—"Mr. George Williams, evangelist, has greatly benefited in health by his voyage to Australia. He arrived in Sydney, and commenced work at once under the direction of the Y.M.C.A. We hear that much blessing followed the word preached by him there. He paid us a brief visit in Melbourne by request. Each meeting increased in interest; souls were saved, and the hearts of God's children were stirred up and refreshed. He has gone to hold a mission in New South Wales, and returns to us for April and May. We are looking forward to a time of much blessing. We much regret our friend, Mr. J. H. Harrison, evangelist, who has been labouring for some time past in the Colonies, and greatly blessed in the Gospel, is returning home to England in March."

A SOCIAL GATHERING.—On Friday week, 230 girls residing in the neighbourhood of Kent-street, S.E., were invited to a substantial dinner, provided by Rev. C. Bullock, in St. Stephen's Schools. The gathering was arranged by Mrs. Sowerbutts, who, for a long time, has sought to benefit this class by holding evening classes for reading, writing, and sewing, in connection with the Amicable Ragged School. Many friends from Haddon Hall, St. Stephen's Church, and the Wesleyan Chapel, lent their aid. After the magic-lantern came suitable words of counsel from Rev. W. Dodge, and every-one seemed to enjoy the proceedings.

THE PREACHING OF SMOOTH THINGS is not what is wanted in this sinful age. Reprove, rebuke, exhort, in all faithfulness and love. Let the exceeding sinfulness of sin be sounded forth from our pulpits as in the days of old when the preacher was a power. He was a power as long as he preached the Word of God. He will again be a power when that word is fearlessly proclaimed and the law of God is magnified. Remember, my reverend brethren, that your faithfulness will be approved of God. In your boldness in reproving sin, in your proclamations of the penalty of transgression, in your effort to clear your skirts from the blood of souls, men, sinners even, will take knowledge of you that you have been with Jesus and learned of Him.—Bishop Perry.

FROM THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

FROM a letter written to an acquaintance in London by our friend Mr. D. M. Logan, now resident in New South Wales, we are glad to make the following extracts:—

"Heart Hymns," which you gave me, goes many a journey with me, and cheers me as I go along; it had done good service to others, too. Imagine me on a long journey of thirty miles over rough hills covered with trees, or through thickly-wooded timber country on the plains, getting off my horse, taking the bridle in my hand to give both beast and man a change, and as I walk alone singing, "Singing for Jesus," "I will never, never leave thee," and so on. I have been a good deal more from home sometimes than I like, but I have done it for the Lord and for his people. I have preached for the Church of England, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan alike. Your "Heart Hymns" stir me up, and I stir up others, so you have not lost by parting with what was to you a treasure.

I had never heard the sequel to the story of the man I flung the rope to at the wreck of the Hydaspes till you told me. I was thankful for it, and have often used it as an illustration.*

I often think that wreck was the beginning to me of many more. We were wrecked a second time at sea and delivered. Many a time since on land up here have we been almost wrecked, yet delivered. I sometimes wonder if the time for change will soon come. Hitherto we have had much loss, at first through bad shepherds, then wild dogs, drought and its attendant evils. We learn here how absolutely we are dependent on our heavenly Father for everything. No rain means no grass and no crops, and that is loss on every side; thank God, we have pulled through better than many. Many a man who was wealthy has been ruined. We have always been well supplied with water, and at our very worst times have been suppliers to others who brought their stock to my water reservoirs and carted it away also for their own household requirements. Even in this matter I have found that I have been well watered whilst watering others. God's promises are wonderfully literal, and it has surprised me how many of them refer to our bodily and every-day needs, as well as to our spiritual requirements.

We are great singers here, and know a great number of Mr. Sankey's hymns. As all the children are singers we generally have about three, and often up to a dozen, hymns sung at evening worship. We are doing our best with "the bit of blue." I generally carry ribbon and a small pledge-book, and have got a good many signatures. Sometimes out driving I have made the back of our buggy or a cushion of it do for writing desk. I correspond with Vice-President Ardill, of Sydney, and soon we expect a campaign up in these outlandish parts. I have made a good start for them. The Salvation Army is not up here yet, but is doing a great work in this colony.

Our family are remarkably well. Gordon had a nasty tumble from his horse one night in the dark not long ago. He rode over a low wire fence. The horse got entangled and fell, Gordon under. Frank jumped off his horse and ran to his assistance. He could not haul him out and called to me. I was not far off on foot. I got through fallen timber and lifted the horse whilst Frank pulled Gordon out, all but his boots, which remained under the horse till Frank ran home in the dark (his horse having run off), sent a man with a file with which we released the horse; he was lamed, but could walk home. Thank God, Gordon was none the worse. They milk cows, ride like hunters, and fear nothing. I often thank God for them all. As they grow up they are so active and useful, and now that they are getting some education I hope they will grow up of service to God in their day and generation. Give our love to everybody who cares to hear of us.

*This story is briefly as follows:—The Hydaspes was run down off Deal by an iron steamer, and went under in eleven minutes. There were eighty-five souls on board, but all were saved. The last man but one to jump, as the steamer backed away, was Mr. Logan. He just succeeded in holding his footing on the steamer, the gap between the vessels being about nine or ten feet wide. The last man to leap was a sailor. He fell short, and tumbled back into the sea, where he sank, only to rise again and struggle for life, madly cursing God and blaspheming, as he vainly tried to lay hold of nothing. Mr. Logan there and then seized a rope, and threw it to the drowning man, who clutched it eagerly, and was by its means, with Mr. Logan and a seaman at the other end, drawn on board the steamer.

Some little while after that a Christian friend in London met a very happy-faced sailor at the Strangers' Rest in Ratcliff-highway. He found on inquiry that the cause of the man's joy was that Jesus had found him a few nights before. He said "Three times I have been run down, once in the Channel, then in the Princess Alice, and last of all in the Hydaspes, off Deal last Saturday night. I was the last man to jump from the sinking ship. I missed, and fell back into the sea, where I cursed God for his cruelty, as I thought it, as I struggled for dear life in the water. The gentleman who jumped before I did then threw a rope overboard. I caught hold, and he and another of our men drew me on deck. I found myself here on my return to London, and I am happy to tell you that I am now a saved man. That darky there, sir, he pointed me to the Saviour. Seems to me, sir, the Lord has just been searching for me all these years, and at last he has found me, sir. Praise Him!" The friend to whom he related this was able to tell him that the gentleman who had been the means of saving him from a double death was a friend of his own. Mr. Logan had by this time sailed a second time for Australia, and, as he states, had never known the "sequel" till communicated to him.

TEMPERANCE JOTTINGS.

The London City Mission claims that its agents last year reclaimed 5,093 drunkards.

Many Scotch towns and villages by local plebiscites are giving overwhelming votes in favour of local option.

At a recent meeting of the destitute, it was ascertained that only four out of 300 present were total abstainers.

A wealthy citizen of Hartford, U.S., makes the calculation that he has, during his 67 years of smoking life, puffed away 200,000 dollars.

In a recent debate in the House of Commons an Irish M.P. stated that the Corporation of the City of Dublin is passing largely into the control of the liquor dealers. The present and past Mayors are both publicans.

The Earl of Lichfield is doing a good work in Staffordshire, by the public advocacy of total abitinence, and the formation of Bands of Hope. Four of the younger children of the earl are pledged abstainers.

An earnest and effective plea for personal effort in fighting the drink curse is to be found in a little pamphlet published by the Monthly Tract Society, 3, New Bridge-street, E.C., entitled "She hath done what she could." The paper was originally read by Mrs. J. Christie Mackenzie, at a drawing-room meeting in Birmingham, but it deserves a much wider circulation.

In a recent address at Greenwich, Mr. C. Button, professional shorthand writer in Sir James Hannen's Court, stated, on the authority of that Judge, that 75 per cent. of the divorce cases tried before him have their cause concomitant in the use of intoxicating drinks. It is continually coming out in court that the grocery license is working deadly mischief among women.

New York.—The Gospel Temperance work at Annex Hall, New York city, for some years conducted with signal success by Mr. Sawyer, is now in the charge of Rev. Ed. Wm. Oakes. For the last five years he has been earnestly engaged in Gospel Temperance work. At Annex Hall he nightly addresses an audience in which are many hard cases, but none too hard for God's power to save. In a few months he is to have a furlough, and will return to his native Ireland. A. L. S.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For much blessing given in a mission for children and young people, conducted by Mr. George Banaster, at St. Clement's Schools, Bristol. ——For the recovery, in answer to prayer, of a beloved friend, who a week since was on the brink of the grave.

PRAYER.—For a mission at Dukinfield, to be conducted by George Hefford.——For blessing at the Gosport Y.W.C.A. during Mrs. Legg's mission, March 23 to 30.——For one who has lately been fearfully given over to drink.——For evangelistic meetings in Kinnoir Church, Huntly, conducted by J. A. Smith.

Messrs. HURDITCH AND SPURR IN CORNWALL.

THESE brethren came to St. Ives on Feb. 23, and concluded their mission on March 8. The first week there was not much apparent result, but the second week nearly seventy entered the inquiry-room and sought pardon and peace through the Lord Jesus Christ. All the Churches have been quickened. A pleasing feature of the mission was the unanimity of prayer and practical assistance on the part of the Christian people in the town. The singing of Brother Spurr was very effective, and some of the pieces were greatly blessed to the people's good. "Father, I'm tired," was an especial favourite, and the first entering the inquiry-room after the second singing of that beautiful piece, cried, under the burden of her heart, "Father, I'm tired, tired, tired of my sin." The warm, earnest, direct appeals of both brethren greatly stirred the large congregations, and when the blessing came it was plentiful.

The converts are of all ages—three of sixty years, several towards middle life, many entering manhood and womanhood, and a few children. Last Saturday evening a special meeting was held for seafaring men and their wives and families, which was largely attended, and several testified, some of them new converts, to the grace of God.

We are continuing the services with the help of Miss Hocking, the blind evangelist of Penzance. We shall be very glad, if we can possibly arrange it, to have our two beloved brethren, Hurditch and Spurr, on a longer visit next winter.

MR. C. KING AT WOOD GREEN.

DURING the past week this evangelist (better known as "Freddy Wilson, the converted clown"), and his devoted wife, continued their labours at the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood Green. Numbers of working people assembled each evening to listen to Mr. King's discourses, their attentive faces showing how entirely their interest was absorbed by the words to which they listened. On the evening of Sunday week all who had found salvation during the preceding days were invited to signify the fact in a few words. Several responded, amongst them a working-man, whose wife testified to the change in her husband's life.

One evening was devoted to an address from Mrs. King, and two more to an account of Mr. King's experiences in prison. These told a sad tale of reckless living and its consequences, but the vivid description, the solemn warning, and the tender pleading for the service of the Better Master, bore manifest fruit on each occasion. Most of all were the audiences moved —and that deeply—by the touching narration of his broken-hearted mother's visits to him in his confinement. Upon his release the same loving parent was at the gate to welcome the wanderer to her bosom and take him to her home. That act was one of the divinely-used causes which afterwards brought forth such happy results. Mr. King spoke in the warmest terms of the good effected by Mr. George Hatton's labours on behalf of discharged prisoners, by helping them into the path of rectitude upon their release.

The mission was concluded on Friday last with a farewell tea-meeting, which was well attended, and followed with some very interesting and gratifying testimonies from those who had received blessing. The evangelists will be followed to other fields of labour by the earnest prayers of numbers whose love they have gained during their brief but eminently successful visit. G. E. M.

A TIME OF REFRESHING.

THE spirit of revival is in the Churches. The years of dearth are past, and the years of fullness—may they be many!—have come. The gracious influence of the Holy Spirit is upon God's people in moving power, and from all parts of our land, and from Churches of all evangelical communions, come tidings of a great ingathering. We spoke last week of the prevalence of this revival spirit, and of the apparent willingness of the people everywhere to attend evangelistic services. We have been led by the extraordinary fulness of the reports of such meetings in our religious exchanges to make a count of the conversions, and we find cause for joy and hope in the result. Our gleanings are from about two dozen journals, nine of which are Methodist, representing three branches; six are Presbyterian, of the Churches North and South; and three are Baptist, besides Congregational, Lutheran and other denominational organs.

From these sources we have counted, as the record of a single week, a grand total of more than 28,000 conversions. In some cases, doubtless, different papers report the same conversions, but after due allowance has been made for such duplications as may occur in this way, we still have a remarkably large total. But we must not forget that this list of upwards of 28,000 converts represents only a fraction of the Churches—how large or how small a fraction it would be idle to undertake to say. It is enough to know that many thousands are flocking to the sanctuary to enrol themselves as God's people.

The fullest reports of conversions we find in the Methodist press. Of the whole number we gathered 13,000 from that source, five journals reporting an aggregate of more than 8,000. Seven Presbyterian papers return upwards of 4100, and other denominations come in for their share of the results. While the revival influence appears to be felt in every section of the country, the New England States, together with New York and New Jersey, and the states and territories west of the Mississippi River, excepting Missouri, are but slightly represented in the figures reported. The Methodist paper in Philadelphia reports 3614 conversions, while Zion's Herald, of Boston, returns only 337. In the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, we find 3000; in the New York Advocate, 453. In the North-western Christian Advocate, of Chicago, there are 1100; in the Northern Christian Advocate, of Syracuse, 257. Is there a dearth in New England?

One of the features of this general revival movement is the number and fruitfulness of union services. At Farmington, Mo., where an evangelist was employed, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, and others, co-operated harmoniously, and there were many conversions. In Oskaloosa, Kansas, meetings were opened in the Presbyterian Church, and the Methodists were invited to take part in them. Soon no church was large enough for the congregations, and the court house was obtained. "Scores of Methodist backsliders were reclaimed," says a Presbyterian account of the meetings, and some of the "hardest cases in the city" were reached. In Salem, Virginia, evangelistic services were held in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, and the "people of Salem, without regard to denomination," attended. There have been many conversions, and the number of penitents is increasing. In Huntsville, Alaska, as the result of two weeks of special services, there have been upwards of three hundred conversions, the largest church in the town being crowded four times daily. In Dayton, Ohio, all the Churches seem ~~to~~ be enjoying a revival influence.

There are but few, comparatively, of the Lutheran Churches which countenance revival efforts; but some of those belonging to the General Synod engage in them. A letter from Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, to the Lutheran Observer, states that seventy persons have been received in the Lutheran Church "as the result of a glorious revival."

These encouraging facts indicate that God is among the people and in the Churches, and the Gospel is having free course. At such a time no Church can remain indifferent without danger and loss. There is a ripened harvest. Why tarry the labourers?—New York Independent, Feb. 26.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

The Belgian Minister for the Post, Telegraphic, and Railway Departments is forwarding Sunday rest as far as possible.

Revival Meetings have been held all day for three or four days successively at Mens, France. The audience steadily increased, and the clear, earnest Gospel-preaching was listened to with attentive interest.

In June M. Christinaun made an evangelistic tour to Matabele and Paballong, a long distance from Lessonto, and separated from it by the Drakensberg Mountains. Everywhere he was heartily welcomed.

Cherbourg, France.—Mr. Henry Cook's Bethel ship Annie has been a means of blessing to many in this port. There have been services on board for English sailors as well as French. One Sunday evening as many as fifty were present in the evening.

The Free Church of Scotland loses three of its Indian missionaries this year, by retirement—Rev. Messrs. Rae and Stevenson, at Madras, and Rev. Mr. Blake, of Bombay. We also hear that Dr. Elder, of the Medical Mission at Madras, finds he is unable to return to his post.—Indian Witness.

The Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, under the direction of Col. George R. Clarke, continues its work among the lowest strata of Chicago society, with marked success. Many of the outcast class are reclaimed, and the meetings which are held nightly are full of interest and many strange scenes are witnessed.

The Sonntagssochulfreund, edited by Pastor Prochnow, Berlin, gives this month a full and interesting account of "The Children's Special Service Mission," so successfully carried on by Mr. Spiers and his helpers, and ends by saying, "What will our readers say to this activity? In one year England has given £1500 to supply pictures to the children of all lands! This should shame us into like zeal."

Lisbon.—A small church has existed here since 1880, consisting of about fifty-four believers. Of these only four were born Protestants. The Sunday-school numbers about eighty children. Through the inability of the people, who are very poor, to maintain their faithful and earnest pastor, it is feared M. de Menezes, a converted Brazilian Catholic, may leave them and return to Brazil.—Journal Réligieux.

Japan.—Theatre preaching seems to be common in Japan. The theatre in Tokio seats between 5000 and 6000, and on more than one occasion this has been crowded by a serious and attentive audience. The Gospel has been proclaimed by native preachers, assisted by some American missionaries, when the people have listened four consecutive hours. The adherents of Buddhism and Sintöisme are despairing, and have sometimes sought to disturb the meetings, but the Government has taken energetic measures to maintain order.

Women at Gaza.—At Gaza very hopeful openings exist for Christian effort among the Moslem women of all conditions. The wife of the C.M.S. missionar there is labouring in that lonely outpost of mission work. The classes for women, who are instructed in needlework, and in Scripture truth, have been well attended, though at present sorely discouraged under fanatic opposition. The feelings of the female population are gradually softening so as to give hope of hearts and ears being alike opened to the Gospel message. Friends have for four years endeavoured to subscribe the salary of the Bible woman, but it is feared that this branch of the missionary work may, of necessity, be abandoned for lack of money. I commend the effort to the kind consideration and aid of those who can sympathise with solitary and very trying work under much discouragement.—Faithfully yours, College, Durham. E. M. Tristram.

Washington, U.S.—Mr. George A. Hilton, an earnest evangelist, has left a lucrative position in the Treasury Department, and entered permanently upon Evangelistic and Temperance work.

Richmond (Va.), U.S.A.—Mr. Geo. C. Needham has been joined by his wife, whose meetings for ladies are limited to the size of the buildings, and who has been besides addressing mixed audiences in the Friends' Meeting House. Mr. Thomas Needham has also been engaged in the work, both the brothers having crowded houses in different parts of the city every evening.

Religious Toleration in Russia.—Telegraphing from St. Petersburg on Sunday, the correspondent of the Daily News says:—"Last June M. Paschkoff's religious society was dissolved, and the pamphlets it had issued were confiscated. M. Paschkoff and Count Korff were expelled. To-day the Evangelical newspaper states that all the measures directed against the society have now been rescinded."

Distress in Belgium.—The Chretien Belge refers to the privations and sufferings consequent upon the industrial crisis in Belgium. Many workmen are without work, and many others work only six or seven days in a fortnight; wages, too, are considerably reduced. The churches suffer in consequence, as regards funds, but in a large part of Belgium the people are ready to receive the Gospel when it is presented to them.

Lord Radstock at Benares.—The two zealous servants of Christ, Lord Radstock and his son, the Hon. G. Waldegrave, have in their evangelistic tour through India favoured Benares with a brief but laborious visit, which has left a deep impression on the minds of both Europeans and natives. Says a correspondent: "No such wide interest in Christianity has probably ever been manifested at Benares as that excited by these two ambassadors of Christ."

THE MARYLEBONE PARISH MISSION.

AS briefly stated in our last issue, this special effort, extending over two weeks, closed with a thanksgiving service on Monday week. The great church was crammed from end to end with a congregation that hung with eager attention on the words of Mr. Aitken, as he expounded 2 Cor. vi. 1.: "We . . . . beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." Before the sermon he briefly exhorted the young converts to see that their Christian life was nurtured by regular study of the Scriptures, prayer, attendance on the outward means of grace, and a careful choice of companions.

At the close of the thanksgiving service all present who had received definite blessing in connection with the mission were invited to proceed to the communion rails and receive memorial cards from Mr. Aitken and Canon Barker, the rector of the church. We understand that as many as five hundred of these cards were taken. This may probably not represent the actual number of those converted; but it is certain that a great number of persons were definitely brought to God during the mission. On the three Lord's Days the church, large as it is, could not hold the crowds, and overflow-meetings were held in the school-room. In the Mission Church also a very remarkable work was done through the labours of Rev. F. Pegg. Here the congregations were entirely composed of the poor of the neighbourhood, and many of these professed to receive spiritual benefit. A successful work was done among the children and servants in the parish chapel by Rev. Jas. Stephens. Mr. Aitken's meetings for men only were seasons of special power. Altogether, the mission was a time of much blessing, and one to be long remembered in the parish.

Canon Barker threw himself heart and soul into the work. On the closing evening he expressed his deep sense of indebtedness to Mr. Aitken and all the workers for their arduous and unremitting labours. He is taking steps to perpetuate the good that has been done, by enlisting the converts in some definite work for God. At a meeting specially convened last Thursday evening a hundred joined the St. Marylebone Guild, formed for the purpose of deepening the spiritual life, and undertaking aggressive spiritual work in the parish.

MARCH 19.—LUKE VI.

v. 10.—"He said unto the man, Stretch forth thy and."—Precisely what he was unable to do. But, ke every call addressed to faith, this command ontained a promise of the strength necessary to ccomplish it, provided the will to obey it was there. —Godet.

v. 11.—"They were filled with madness."—The ame commentator remarks that the word translated adness denotes literally the absence of the power o discriminate the true from the false. They were ools through rage, Luke means. In fact, passion estroys a man's sense of the good and true.

v. 12.—"He continued all night in prayer to God." —Seven times in this Gospel are we told of Christ raying: iii. 21; v. 16; vi. 12; ix. 18; ix. 29; i. 1; xxii. 32. The Evangelist would show how the Man Christ Jesus continually exercised this race of true dependence."

v. 22, 23.—"Blessed are ye when men shall cast out our name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake."—Oh, t what a rate the saints of old prized our Lord esus! Luther had rather fall with Christ than tand with Cæsar. Better to be a Christian clown han a pagan emperor. Theodosius had rather be saint and no king, than a king and no saint. onstantine rejoiced more in being the servant of hrist than the emperor of the world. Barnard ad rather be in his chimney-corner with Christ, han in heaven without Him.—Brooks.

v. 45.—"Of the abundance of the heart his mouth peaketh."—Speech is the flower, as deeds are the ruit, of the soul. Our words indicate character, as he blossom the tree. If these are pure, we are ure; if these are impure, we are impure. Hence he Scriptures lay so heavy a stress on the use of he tongue. If any man can rule this unruly pest, o that he offend not in word, the same is a perfect an. "By our words we shall be justified, and by ur words condemned." The judgments of God ome on men to make them pure—pure within, that ey may be pure in all that expresses their inward ature.—S. Cox.

MARCH 20.—LUKE VII.

v. 11-15.—The raising the son of the widow of Vain.—Note the special marks of human sym-athy Luke here records on the part of Christ, She was a widow," it was her "only son," "He ad compassion on her," "He delivered him to his other."

v. 22.—"The poor have the Gospel preached to hem."—In that corrupt and oppressive age, in that nfeeling, avaricious, grinding country, under that espotic government, humanity, taking care of the oor was the most astonishing of all. Not the aising of the dead, not the restoring of hearing nor ght, was so wonderful as that there should be a eart that really occupied itself with thinking of the oor.—Beecher.

v. 36-50.—The woman in the house of Simon.—his scene contains all that is sublime in tragedy, errible in guilt, or intense in pathos. The woman epresents humanity, or the soul of human nature; imon, the world or worldly wisdom; Christ, ivinity, or the Divine purposes of good to usward. imon is an incarnation of what St. Paul calls the eggarly elements; Christ of spirituality; the oman of sin. It is not the woman alone—but in er there cluster upon the stage all want and woe, ll calamity and disappointment, all shame and uilt. In Christ there come forward to meet her ove, hope, truth, light, salvation. In Simon are cted out doting conservatism, mean expediency, urblind calculation, carnal insensibility. Simon mbodies that vast array of influences that stand etween humanity and its redemption. He is a ery excellent, a very estimable man; but he is not hocked at intemperance, he would not have slavery isturbed, he sees a necessity for war. Does Christ now who and what sort of a woman it is that ouches Him? Will He defile Himself by such a ontact? Can He expect to accomplish anything y familiarity with such matters? Yes, blessed be esus, He could forgive her, He can forgive all. he woman departs in peace; Simon is satisfied; esus triumphs; we almost hear the applauses with hich the ages and generations of earth greet the losing scene. From the serene celestial immensity hat opens above the spot we can distinguish a voice aying, "This is my beloved Son; hear ye Him!"—reacher's Lantern.

MARCH 21.—LUKE VIII.

v. 1-3.—"Ministered unto Him of their substance." —The grateful love of those whom He filled with his spiritual riches provided for his temporal necessities, as well as for those of his disciples. Some pious women spontaneously rendered Him the services of mother and sisters. . . . What a Messiah for the eye of flesh! this Being living on the charity of men! But what a Messiah for the spiritual eye, this Son of God living on the love of those to whom his own love is giving life. What an interchange of good offices between heaven and earth goes on around his person.—Godet.

v. 16-18.—"No man when he hath lighted a candle."—To have light is to be responsible for giving light. Faithfulness to our stewardship is the only sure mark of our really having, instead of only "seeming to have."

v. 25.—"Where is your faith?"—Trapp says, it is not the having faith, but the living by it, the actuating it, that helps us in our exigencies.

v. 48.—"Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole."—He doth not say, Woman, thy trembling hath made thee whole; or, Woman, thy sweating and struggling in a crowd to come to Me, hath made thee whole; or, Woman, thy falling down and abasing thyself, though she did all this; but, "Woman, thy faith hath made thee whole." Ah, Christians, it is not your trembling, or your falling down, or your sweating in this and that service, that will stop the bloody issue of your sins, but believing in Christ. . . . Nothing eats out sin like the actings of grace; nothing weakens and wastes the strength of sin like the exercise of grace. Oh! did men believe more in Christ, sin would die more; did they believe the threatenings more, did they believe the promises more, sin would die more; did they believe reigning with Christ more, sin would die more: "He that hath this hope upon Him purifies himself, even as Christ is pure" (1 John iii. 3).—Brooks.

MARCH 22.—LUKE IX.

v. 1-3.—"The sending of the twelve."—The twelve differed as much in temperament and in intellectual endowment as any twelve men could who had embraced a common cause. Every figure in the picture is not equally prominent; it does not, however, follow that the less prominent is the less valuable. We are not all to be alike; we should be careful that that which is of each of us should be like the Christ only, and for the rest stand by our poor selves.—J. Oymore Davies.

v. 23.—"If any man will come after Me . . ."—The Lord will have the Cross true, not only for a man, but in him too.—Kelly.

v. 28.—"He took Peter and James and John, and went up into a mountain to pray."—We might think, from the account of Matthew and Mark, that in taking his disciples to the mountain Jesus intended to be transfigured before them. Luke gives us to understand that He simply wished to pray with them. He had recourse to prayer in order to strengthen those apostles especially whose moral state would determine the disposition of their colleagues. The connection between the prayer of Jesus and his transfiguration is expressed in Luke by the preposition which denotes more than a mere simultaneousness (whilst He prayed), and makes his prayer the cause of this mysterious event.—Godet.

MARCH 23.—LUKE X.

v. 1.—"Every city and place whither He Himself would come."—Stier remarks, "Only whither He Himself would come, would the Lord send messengers; apart from every other consideration, this only would have been befitting. For could the Messiah and the Saviour satisfy any man with his mere representatives? Could the true Shepherd hand over a lost sheep to mere servants? Thus it is only his coming after (and in spirit going with them) that gives to these missionaries the authority and ground of their commission."

v. 19.—"Behold, I give unto you power."—Power in Christian work springs not from brilliant talents, nor careful culture, nor eminent scholarship, nor social position, nor the influence of the great, but from Christ alone. However useful such things may be as instruments, they have not an atom of spiritual power. The men of might in the Christian Church are the men who have much of the Spirit of Christ. Furnished with power from Him, they may look down on those whose patronage is often counted such a benefit to their cause. For in truth, men of worldly rank and means are far more in need of a Church full of Christ's spirit than such a Church can be in need of them.—Prof. Blaikie.

v. 40.—"Bid her therefore that she help me."—Martha's motto certainly was: "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord" (Josh. xxiv. 15). She could however think of no other service than that of her own kind. Mary's sitting at Jesus' feet and hearing his word seemed to her idleness and not service. Hence she was vexed with Mary, and wanted her to do as she did. . . . The utmost variety of gifts is dispensed in the kingdom of grace as well as in that of nature by God, who requires from each his own kind of service. Let each be but careful that his kind should be ordered according to the standard of Scripture, and be pervaded and sanctified by the Spirit of God.—Lehmann.

MARCH 24.—LUKE XI.

v. 1.—"As He was praying . . . Lord teach us to pray."—Note four things in this verse: (1) The fact recorded. "He was praying." (2) The desire expressed. His disciples were deeply moved by his prayers, and longed to pray as He did. (3) The need implied. We need to be taught to pray. (4) The response called forth. See how the Lord teaches his disciples, furnishing a model; and urging importunity, simplicity, directness, and faith, winding up (v. 13) with an assurance of God's readiness to give the Holy Spirit, who is the "Spirit of prayer," to all who ask Him.

v. 24-26.—The unclean spirit going out of a man. —It is the last state of any man whom the unclean spirit has somehow left for a season, but without salvation, or the positive new work of Divine grace. He may be a changed character, as men say; he may become moral, or even religious, but is he born again? If not, so much the more sorrowful, so much the worse is his last state than the first.—Kelly.

v. 37.—"He went in and sat down to meat."—Notice that in this Gospel the Lord repeats at table a great portion of that teaching, which, as we know from St. Matthew, was elsewhere given in public and set sermons. His audience is changed, but not his doctrine; nay, the very words are adhered to, as if by this means He would the more firmly fix them on his disciples' hearts. At a Pharisee's table Pharisees are reproved. The fact that He is an invited guest shall not keep Him from faithfully warning those with whom He sits of the woes consequent on the form of godliness without the power.—Jukes.

MARCH 25.—LUKE XII.

v. 7.—"Fear not, therefore."—Want of faith in the providence and goodness of God is the source of all human inquietudes and fears. He has undertaken to save and defend those to the uttermost who trust in Him.—Dr. Adam Clarke.

v. 33, 34.—"Sell that ye have." "A treasure in the heavens."

"Children of light, arise and shine!
Your birth, your hopes, are all divine,
Your home is in the skies.
Oh! then, for heavenly glory born,
Look down on all with holy scorn
That earthly spirits prize."
Sir E. Denny.

v. 47, 48.—"That servant which knew his Lord's will."—Luke here sheds the light of Christ on the respective responsibility of the Gentile grafted into the olive tree, and of the Pagan world. As there is in Christendom the servant cognisant of his Master's will, but indifferent or rebellious; so, on the other hand, outside Christendom, there is the servant wholly ignorant of his will, and, of course, lawless and evil. They are both of them beaten; but he that knew his Master's will, and did it not, shall be beaten with more stripes. To be baptized, and to call on the Lord's name in outward profession, instead of lightening the burden in the day of judgment for the hypocrites, will, on the contrary, bring on them so much more severity.—Kelly.

v. 49-50.—"I am come to send fire on the earth . . ." —Jesus feels that his presence is for the earth the brand which is to set everything on fire. Two humanities will henceforth be in conflict within the bosom of every nation, under every roof; this thought profoundly moves the heart of the Prince of Peace. Hence the broken style of the following words. Jesus submits to bring in war where He wished to establish peace. But it must be; it is his mission. Meanwhile this fire which is already kindled is far yet from bursting into a flame; in order to that there is a condition to be fulfilled, the thought of which weighs heavily on the heart of Jesus. There needs the Cross; without that the conflagration lighted on the earth by the presence of Jesus would very soon be extinguished, hence v. 50. The figure is as follows: Jesus sees Himself about to be plunged into a bath of flame, from which He shall come forth the torch which shall set the whole world on flame. He is under pressure to enter into this suffering, because He is in haste to get out of it. As Gess says, we have here "a prelude of Gethsemane."—Godet.

Notices of Books, &c.

William Penn. By Jane Budge. Partridge. A charming sketch from the point of view of a favourite writer among modern Friends, presenting a vivid outline of the chief events in Penn's life. A gem from history, specially suited for young people, and not without interest to their elders.

Sir Moses Montefiore: the Story of his Life. By Jas. Weston. Partridge & Co. 1s. A well-written and well-stored manual of facts concerning the life of one of the most estimable and remarkable men of our times. Those interested in Jewish questions, as all Christians ought to be, will find much useful information in its pages.

Three Apostles of Quakerism. By B. Rhodes. Price 2s. Nisbet & Co. Most people know more or less of George Fox and William Penn, but are less conversant with the history of Robert Barclay, who also played an important part in his time. These sketches are very good, written in appreciative style. The men are made to speak for themselves as much as possible on matters of doctrine, so that a really accurate digest is presented in small compass.

The Sabbath for Man. By Rev. W. F. Crafts, A.M. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street. A study of the origin, obligation, history, advantages, and present state of Sabbath observance, with special reference to the rights of working-men, based on Scripture, literature, and especially on a symposium of correspondence with persons of all nations, and of all religious persuasions. The volume is a most complete and exhaustive array of facts and arguments, put together in racy and suggestive style.

The National Philanthropist (1d., Elliot Stock) continues to do good service in pleading the cause of all that are oppressed and overweighted in the race of life; in advocating the interests of the weaker members of the human family, the dumb and helpless creatures that minister to the service of man are not forgotten. In the current issue there is an excellent portrait of Lord Shaftesbury, with the first part of an interesting account of his life and labours for the weal of the toiling masses.

Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. A. H. Sayce, M.A. Religious Tract Society. 2s. 6d. No Bible-student should be without this compendious, though compact little manual of information on three often neglected, and yet exceedingly instructive books of Scripture. The use made by the author, of recent monumental discoveries throwing light upon the contemporary history, is specially valuable and helpful, while his reflections on the character and work of the great leaders of Israel during the Restoration period are of much value and interest. Such books do good service in enabling ordinary readers to apprehend the historical and practical bearing of Scripture on the times to which the various books refer, and so to give an air of reality as well as spiritual point to Bible teaching.

Mountain Waterbrooks. By Rev. C. A. Fox. Partridge. A delightful book. The writer is a lover of nature, a lover of man, and a reverent lover of God no less in his providence than in his grace. Those who value Mr. Fox as a preacher will welcome him as a Christian poet. "The First Swallow" and "The First Bee" are full of sweet thoughts. "Lines on the Death of a Favourite Pony" are in a lighter vein. A Child's Epitaph will touch many hearts. In longer pieces, such as "Mountain Waterbrooks" and "Cloud Armies," noble thoughts and bold imaginations abound. In this little book may be found the depth of Wordsworth, the freshness of Shelley, and here and there the gaiety of W. Mackworth Praed. We sincerely hope that more waterbrooks may issue from this pure fountain.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. By Joseph Agar Beet. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s. Mr. Beet has already established for himself a wide reputation as a Biblical expositor, and this volume will enhance his fame. Critically, it is a work of singular ability and rare merit; thoroughness, discrimination, and skilful analysis are everywhere manifest, proving the scholarship and unsparing diligence of the author. Doctrinally, there is much sound and clear teaching on subjects of vital importance to the Christian life, albeit there is a spirit of independence of mere theories and formulas. Luther's standpoint in relation to this Epistle Mr. Beet regards as in the main unassailable, the great Reformer's exposition being spoken of as having "caught and reproduced the inmost thought of St. Paul more richly than any other writer has done, ancient or modern." As a whole we commend the book to our readers as one calculated to help in every way an intelligent study of a most important and precious portion of the Divine Word.

With the lengthening spring days the great and growing army of cyclists will be furbishing up their equipments for the enjoyable recreation of wheeling. Those resident in and about the metropolis ought forthwith to include among their accessories a copy of Letts' Cycling Map of fifty miles around London. It is most portable in shape and clear in drawing. Price 2s. 6d., or strongly mounted on cloth, 5s.

In the Time of Jesus. M. Seidel, D.D. Translated by W. E. M. Kingsley, Mallon & Co. Under this modest title is veiled a most able and valuable book. The object of the writer and the nameless translator is to furnish ministers and students with those historical settings of our Lord's life, without which much of his teaching cannot be rightly understood or vigorously expounded. Specially noteworthy is the concise but terribly suggestive chapter on "The State of Morals among the Heathen;" also the interesting chapters on "Religious Life and Religious Parties among the Jews." A careful reading of "Judaism in the Dispersion" would, we fancy, correct many crude notions as to the present state and future destiny of the chosen people. Students will profit by, and all thoughtful Christians enjoy Dr. Seidel's little book.

The Continuity of Christian Thought: A Study of Modern Theology in the Light of its History. By Alexander V. G. Allen, Professor in the Episcopal Theological School, in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Ward, Lock & Co. It is difficult to criticise this book, since it is more an able history of Christian thought than an expression of the theological opinion of the learned author. It treats theology too much as a science, quite apart from the authority of Scripture, and as though it did not admit an external authority. That "Christian theology was the fruit of the Greek genius, and had its origin in the Greek city of Alexandria," is questionable; neither can the assertion be admitted that the "Augustinian theology contributed to the development of the papacy," which was "not a usurpation," but "a dispensation divinely appointed for the races of Europe." Much is properly made of the fact that the Greek Fathers maintained the idea of Deity as immanent with his creatures, and that Latin theology has thereby in our times undergone a transformation. This truth, however, was taught by Christ, and only so far as Greek theology follows Revelation is it of value. The author affirms that this doctrine arose from the alliance of Greek philosophy with Christian thought, by which it is by no means apparent that he means the Christian interpretation of the New Testament. Maurice is termed "the greatest of modern English theologians," which a very limited number of Englishmen would admit. Schleiermacher is spoken of as the regenerator of theology in the closing years of the last century; but Schleiermacher held that humanity as a whole had been redeemed by Christ, by which he meant a universal salvation. He did not believe that miracles were a mark of a divine revelation, although Christ thus appealed to them; and maintained that the authority of the Bible lies in the appeal it makes to the reason. In one thing we agree with the author: "That which is new in theology cannot be true, and conversely that which is true cannot be new." As a history of theological opinion, the book deserves study; as a guide it is altogether inadequate. We hear of men throwing themselves into the arms of the Roman Catholic Church to settle their peace. Rather may it be said men will, amidst theological discussions, fall back upon God's Word with a deeper confidence and loyalty.

A set of four finely illuminated floral cards, displaying well-known texts, is issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co.; excellent wall ornaments for nursery, hospital, or mission-room. (1s. each.)

Gospel Echoes.—This is a new series of eight assorted illustrated tracts. (1s. per 100. Partridge.) The Gospel message is simply expressed, while the incidents are both interesting and well applied.

The publisher of The Teachers' Storehouse and Treasury is offering for a short time the volume at half-price, viz., 1s., or post-free for 1s. 4d. The work is a complete storehouse of useful material for their use. Application should be made to Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The first part of a new serial issue by Messrs. Cassell & Co. of The Family Physician, a Manual of Domestic Medicine by Physicians and Surgeons of the principal London Hospitals, is to make its appearance on the 26th inst. The work has already gained an established reputation as a sound and reliable guide for family use.

OUR SISTERS IN PATNA.

The Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society;

OR,

Zenana, Bible, and Medical Mission.

Mr. Robert Johnson, 21, Rutland-street, Edinburgh, has had it laid upon his heart to start a Mission to the women of Patna, and to this end has promised the Committee of the above Society £150 per annum. The Committee needs £250 more annually, in order to carry on this work efficiently. Who will give this, or any part of it, that we may send the Gospel to these poor women? Two of our ladies have just arrived in Patna, and report most favourably of their prospects of work there. They have already got an entrance into some Zenanas. As this work has been begun in Scotland, special appeal is made to Scottish friends to come forward and second Mr. Johnson's efforts.

All communications to be addressed to Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, Secretary and Treasurer for Scotland, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND DINNER PARTIES.

Dear Sir,—During the late "London Mission" opportunity has been taken for giving some very faithful and much-needed warnings to young Christians on the subject of worldly amusements. But while ball-rooms and theatres have been very properly pointed out as places to be avoided by all "who will live godly in Christ Jesus," nothing has been said, as far as I know, about dinner parties. Now sir, I know it to be a great stumbling-block to young people, that while they are warned against dancing and acting, their elders are not discouraged from spending money and time most lavishly over the dinner-table. It was remarked to me the other day, many spend fifteen shillings for a turbot for a dinner party, who never give one penny to the "Mission for Deep Sea Fishermen." I remember how a young Christian was once staggered by the eight courses at the house of a truly eminent and holy servant of God.

I am not arguing against Christians meeting for a social meal; I believe real work for Christ can be done at a dinner-table, but I do think there might be some careful thought expended on the subject; revision of hours and other details. I have long felt: Would that Christians could hear what the world says about their dinner-tables!—Yours faithfully, A Constant Reader.

THE THEATRE.

Dear Sir,—I read with surprise in this week's issue of your paper a letter on theatre-going from a minister's daughter. I must say that her arguments seemed to me decidedly weak. In the first place, some of the high-class theatres would not on any account perform pieces in which adultery is the plot. Many others perform pieces in which amusement is provided without suggestion of evil. Again, vulgarity is not an adjunct merely of theatre-going, for vulgarity may be displayed, and is by many calling themselves Christians, and refusing to go to theatres.

What we want more than such arguments as those of the minister's daughter, is to take people to the words of the Bible to teach them that if they can pray for a blessing on what they do and where they go, then it becomes no question of being vulgar, but a principle of right and wrong; and if the heart is right with Scripture the right way will be made plain.

I commend these few remarks to your notice, and hope you will accept this protest for not mixing true and worldly motives in discussions of what is convenient and what the reverse for the Christian Church.—Believe me, yours in our most holy faith,

6, Grosvenor-mansions, Charles Hollis.
Westminster, S.W., March 12.

[We have received a letter from "Another Minister's Daughter" to the same effect as the above.]

IN MEMORIAM—CHARLES GEORGE GORDON.

Sir,—Much has been said and written as to a memorial being raised to the memory of the late General Gordon.

Permit me to urge in a few words that whatever may be decided upon as a "National Memorial," and however much the greatly needed "Ladies' National Aid Association" may help our brave fellows to endure the hardships and privations of a life in the deserts of Africa, there is a strong feeling with many that a very suitable way of commemorating the love and respect held for our late noble comrade, so justly called "the king of men," is to establish a fund for providing Army Scripture readers who shall take the Word of the living God to our soldiers. Charles Gordon was essentially a reader of that word, and his desire ever was to convey the guide to eternal life through the Holy Spirit's teaching to all his comrades.

Three thousand pounds raised will enable the Army Scripture Readers' Society to place at least two readers permanently amongst the British forces, and this Society works under the authority of commanding officers, and with the superintendence of the recognized chaplains. Sums have already been received for "the Gordon Readers," others are invited, and in due time a list shall be furnished. Receipts and information will be gladly given by the Secretary, Mr. Blake, at the office, as well as by yours truly, J. W. F. Sandwith,
Colonel and Hon. Sec.

4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, W.

THE MORMON INFAMY.

Dear Sir,—I feel truly thankful to God that you have lately drawn attention to the speech of Mr. Glover at Bournemouth. It seems that he is in the habit of advocating the Mormons when he goes about lecturing on total abstinence. Lately, when he lectured in the Dome at Brighton, he pictured the Mormon settlement almost as a paradise, instead of inveighing strongly, as a Christian and as an Englishman, against so iniquitous a system. I was so pained by what I heard that, though I was deeply interested in the object of the meeting, and was struck with the ability of the lecturer, I felt obliged to get up and walk out of the building.

I sincerely hope that Mr. Glover will see the importance as a Christian teacher of abstaining totally from Mormon commendation. God grant that a stimulus may not have been given by him to the many Mormon missionaries now at work in this country. A Canadian Teetotaler of Twenty-two Years Standing.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The Report of this mission recently issued is full of the most gratifying and interesting facts. The workers are at their posts day after day, summer and winter, fair weather or foul. Their earnest endeavours are frequently rewarded by seeing those who have been led captive by the devil at his will become happy freedmen of Jesus Christ. The Rest is, indeed, a place of refuge for many a seafarer who is in imminent danger of making soul shipwreck. We hope the hands of the workers will be sustained by the continued prayers and liberal contributions of our readers. Mr. T. Isaacs, 163, St. George-street, E., is Secretary.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.*"The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
"The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONFIRMED CASE of BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.—Miss JANE JONES, of 7, NEW BRENT STREET, HENDON, N.W.

About 18 months since she had had a chronic cough for 9 years. Three years ago her right lung was pronounced diseased. This had progressed slowly to the time of her commencing my treatment. "My doctor (she says) pronounced me to be in a very bad state."

The cough and expectoration at this time were very distressing. There were pains in the right axilla, commencing also in the left side. Breathing short. Great irritation, and inflammatory condition of the fauces. Examined by Dr. Brown: "The upper lobe of each lung affected. The right most—a chronic case of Broncho-Phthisis." (In such cases, unless there be some efficient means to cope with the disease, there must be a fatal termination, although it may be slow.)

The patient commenced with my medicine, visiting Coombe Lodge at various times, and writing when unable to come. Her improvement was gradual and sure; and in a letter dated Feb. 11, 1885, she says: "I have been gradually getting better all the time since I first came to you, and am now quite well. If you can make use of my case as a proof of the efficacy of your medicine you are at perfect liberty to do so.

Yours gratefully, Jane Jones."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of Barclay's; Edwards; Hovenden's; Newbery's; May Roberts; Sanger & Sons; Sutton & Co.; &c., &c

PORTSMOUTH & GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

Under the Superintendence of MR. HENRY COOK, Sailors' Resort, Gosport, to whom Contributions may be sent.

The "Annie" Gospel Mission Ketch has been in France since last September, sailing from Trouville, Harfleur, and for the last month for the first time at Cherbourg, the first naval Port of France. Night after ight the vessel has been crowded to overflowing; many of the dear people have had to be sent away—no room.

The "Mystery" Mission Schooner has now arrived to relieve the "Annie," to be sent home for repairs, out the wind being contrary, the "Annie" could not sail to-day, and is lying by the outer side of the "Mystery." The "Annie" being the larger vessel, advantage was taken for a Children's Meeting at Three to-day; nearly 200, with their parents, filled the vessel, and listened breathlessly to Gospel Addresses from Brother Leronda and Brother Sinel, who have come on purpose from Jersey to help us.

To-night the "Mystery" filled before the time; the "Annie," lying by her side, has also nearly filled with Soldiers, Sailors, Fishermen, and Civilians—two far more attentive meetings than we have at times at ome. Many are inquiring after truth. Brother Sinel is delighted; he says he never saw anything like it. We have to-day visited the markets, and readily disposed of large portions of the Word.

The British and Foreign Bible Society's Colporteur comes on board every night, and has sold many copies of the Word. All we can say is, the work far surpasses our expectation. France in many places is ripe or the Gospel. Christian readers, help us; our expenses are very heavy; Bibles, Testaments, &c., are much eeded. The gold and silver being the Lord's, we wait upon Him for our supplies. I have none but what He sends, "Have faith in God" being my motto.—Your humble brother,

HENRY COOK.

Better address to Soldiers' Institute, Stoke-road, or to Seamen's Mission, Gosport.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS, &c., Whitechapel, E.

Received with many thanks, a Parcel from E. E. C.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. Founded at Pentonville, 1807.—This Institution has been carrying on its saving work for nearly 80 years, and about 6000 fallen young women have participated in its benefits, and many orphaned and homeless have been rescued. The help of all who sympathise with this Christian work is greatly needed. Donations, however small, will be thankfully received through the Society's Bankers, Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; or at the above Institution.

W. E. Page, Secretary.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. Green, Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

Funds urgently needed.

THE MANAGER of the Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate, earnestly appeals to Christians for help. £50 is needed to meet the expenses of special evangelistic work amongst the soldiers, and for current expenses.—All letters should be addressed to Mr. J. F. Bottomley, Sandgate, of whom a report of the work may be had.

SECOND ADVENT PRAYER UNION.—The Second Convention in connection with the above will be held (d.v.) at the Clapham Conference Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday, May 20 and 21. Order of Meetings and names of Speakers, &c., will be published shortly.—For particulars, apply to C. Melville-Pym, Secretary, The Rectory, Cherry Burton, Hull.

THE BENEVOLENT OR
STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GREAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to

Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

IPPLED BOYS' HOME, Kensington, W.—Instituted in 1865 to feed, clothe, educate on Christian principles, and teach a trade to crippled boys between 12 and 18 years of age. 80 boys now in the Home; accommodation for 100, if funds allowed. Several candidates waiting admission. Funds urgently needed.

H. R. Knipe, Hon. Sec.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College Avenue, Hackney.—Subscriptions are much needed to maintain the children, and to pay off the small debt upon the Home. Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss S. Rye, or Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E. Founded by Mrs. Wilkes, 1878. Treasurer, Henry Green, Esq., Blackwall, E. Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, will also receive contributions for this work of mercy. Mrs. Wilkes at home Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, to see friends and give information respecting this effort to seek and save the lost.

LIVERPOOL BETH-SHAN Faith Healing Home, 11, Great George-square. Meetings every Tuesday, 7.30, and Friday, 3 o'clock, Sunday, 7.30.—Address Miss Bailey.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

WHAT AFFECTIONS IS MAGNETIC TREATMENT MOST LIKELY TO BENEFIT?

Magnetism is not merely a remedy for symptoms, but really and truly a remedy for the cause or causes of disease. It is a constantly and constitutionally energising power. Hence its very marked, rapid and permanent results. In such a number and such a variety of totally different diseases, Magnetism has been rapidly and so signally effective, that, without eulogising it as a catholicon or cure-all, it would hardly be just to enumerate any particular diseases as especially amenable to its power. Perhaps, however, the greater number of successful results have been achieved in cases of paralysis, epilepsy, spinal affection, or long-continued mental and nervous prostration; and it must be understood that under each name could be adduced cases the most extraordinary. It should also be remembered that in almost every instance of rheumatism, asthma, bronchitis, indigestion, and nervous debility, a long course of medicine, often under various physicians, has failed to afford relief. The pages of "The Uniform Efficacy of Curative Magnetism" (post free on application) will afford ample evidence of the diverse and wonderful remedial action of the appliances, many reports similar to the following appearing there with the hearty consent of the writers, who freely give their experience in the hope that some sufferer may be encouraged thereby to make use of so powerful an agent for good.

Miss GREAVES, Verulam Lodge, 25, St. Michael's Park, Cotham, Bristol.

"Having received very considerable benefit from Magnetic Treatment, my statement may prove the means of encouragement to others seeking the precious boon of Health, and who have been continually disappointed in their search after it.

"Of all the valuable agencies brought within my reach, none seem so sure, so silent, so soothing, as that of contact with Magnetic action. Over and above Galvanism and Electric Baths, its action on the powers of the body is equalising and stimulating, giving a healthier and happier tone to the whole system, otherwise sadly impaired, and entirely out of harmony.

"This has been my experience. I came to you on crutches, which were more or less a necessity for years, and now I am able to take moderate exercise, and am quite independent of all aids that were so necessary for my comfort. I can say, after eight years' use of the remedy, that it is a most powerfully restoring and invigorating agent.

"Without entering upon any scientific details as to how this was effected, but accepting the truth as one that has been thoroughly investigated, to the Creator let us give the praise, that the secrets lying deep in the treasures of his wonderful creation have been brought to light.

"I think it important that you should know how unnecessary I find the use of wine and stimulants, as formerly I was told that I should never be without them."

Feb. 25, 1885:—"I am entirely convinced that the benefit derived from the use of your Odo-Magnetic appliances is sustained, and I would not be without them on any consideration."

Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy, and may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 1,000 names may also be obtained.—B. New Monthly Magazine for Preachers, Bible-Class Teachers, and Intelligent Bible Readers in general.

THE BIBLE STUDENT,
AND Christian Eclectic.

Demy 8vo., 64 pp.

No. I. READY MARCH 25th.

THE BIBLE STUDENT, as its name implies, is a magazine of Biblical Literature, containing articles by the most eminent writers in the various Churches of Christendom. Journals, weekly and monthly, containing sermons, or plans of sermons, &c., are numerous enough; but the publishers believe there is yet a place for a magazine of Bible Studies, and their intention is to make this a Treasury of the ripest results of modern research and reverent study of the Bible. While it will know nothing of any "isms," the magazine will uphold and seek to make evident the great principle, that the Bible is the Word of God.

Beside reverent and thoughtful Bible Studies, of the highest class, it will contain, as the year goes on, many short expositions of chapters, or portions of them, which may serve, if occasion requires, as suggestions for sermons; also articles on Christian evidences, explanations of difficult texts, and many hundreds of illustrative gatherings, from Church history, Christian biography, scientific research, geographical exploration, &c.

In size the magazine is as large as those of the same class published at one shilling; while, as regards quality, its contents will, we venture to think, bear comparison with any of them. The production of a serial, which will form in itself a Library of Biblical Literature, at a price within the reach of all, is indeed one of the marvels of the modern press.

No. 1 contains: (1) "Ruskin's Religious Suggestiveness," indicating the religious teachings of this great writer, with copious illustrations from his works; (2) The first of two articles by Dr. Rich, of the Bibliotheca Sacra, forming an exhaustive inquiry into the question, "Does the Bible sanction the use of Alcoholic Beverages?" (3) "Samson; a Study in Biblical Biography," by Dr. Herrick, one of the Committee for the Translation of the Scriptures into Turkish; (4) "Expository Lectures on the Last Days of our Lord," by the able and popular Dr. Laurillard, of Amsterdam; (5) "The Unjust Steward," an exposition in a new view, by a Bible Student; (6) "Short Expository Studies," containing many suggestions for sermons, addresses, &c.; (7) "Illustrative Gatherings."

IN THE TIME OF JESUS.

Historical Pictures, by Dr. Seidel, the Historian of Palestine in the Time of Christ.

"Under this modest title is veiled a most able and valuable book. The object of the writer is to furnish ministers and students with those historical settings of our Lord's life, without which much of his teaching cannot be rightly understood or vigorously expounded. Specially noteworthy is the concise but terribly suggestive chapter on "The State of Morals among the Heathen;" also the interesting chapters on "Religious Life and Religious Parties among the Jews." A careful reading of "Judaism in the Dispersion" would, we fancy, correct many crude notions as to the present state and future destiny of the chosen people. Students will profit by, and all thoughtful Christians enjoy, Dr. Seidel's little book."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE REVISED BIBLE.—I.

AMONG the most important events of the present year must be reckoned the announcement that the Old Testament in its revised translation will be shortly published. It was so far back as May, 1870, when the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury took action in relation to the revision of the Authorised Bible, and appointed two companies of scholarly divines to carry out the work. Fifteen years will thus appear to have been devoted to the great undertaking of revising the existing version of the Old Testament. We may express a confident hope that the result will be for the glory of God in the better understanding of his Holy Word.

It will be useful to realise the difference that must have marked the work of the two companies. In that of revising the New Testament, one great point was fixing the Greek text. Since the year 1611, the date of the Authorised Version, researches have been most industriously pursued for manuscript copies of the New Testament. Nearly 1800 of these have now been catalogued. The three great Uncial MSS., the Sinaitic, the Alexandrine, and the Vatican, were not available for the translators in 1611. The determination, therefore, of the text has been a leading consideration in the recent revision of the New Testament. We, of course, express no judgment now of the result. We are but indicating the process and order which were followed.

And here it becomes us to mark an important, although incidental, advantage which has followed from the New Version. No point was more paraded a few years ago, by a certain class of infidel lecturers, than that of the uncertain and conflicting readings of the words of Christ and of apostles, because of these hundreds of MSS. Even timid Christians felt the force of this objection. Happily the argument is now silenced, and is no longer heard. Considering the openings for errors in the sacred text, through the inadvertence, or ignorance, or carelessness of transcribers, few things are more remarkable than the essential oneness of all the MSS. in reference to the saving doctrines of our holy religion. What adoring thanks should be ours for this wonder! Yes: in relation to the supreme and transcendent matters of the way of a lost sinner's salvation, and the believer's walk before God, the multitude of newly-discovered copies of the New Testament, from all parts of the world, have brought neither doubt nor uncertainty.

It is, however, in regard to the Old Testament, the Revised Version of which the country is awaiting, that we now write. Among others, four English translations were before the Revisers in 1611. But so far as they related to the Old Testament they were mostly translations of translations, and not renderings from the original language. This was true of the great version of Wycliffe; Tyndale's Old Testament contained no more than the books of Moses and of Jonah; Coverdale's last revision was from the writings of men "skilled in the ancient languages," and from what was termed "Matthew's Bible," obtained in the same way.

It was a step far in advance, therefore, when the translators of the Authorised Bible were appointed to prepare a translation in the "English Tongue" out of the "Original Sacred Tongues." So far as the translation of the New Testament was concerned their task would not have been very difficult. The knowledge of Greek has doubtless considerably advanced during the last 250 years; nevertheless, the translators of 1611 were unquestioned Greek scholars, and they could appeal, when the meaning of a word was doubtful, to an ample extant literature in classic Greek. Very different was it with them in translating the Old Testament. They had no such copious literature in the Hebrew tongue to refer to. It is since their days that Oriental scholars of the highest repute have more completely mastered the Hebrew. In America, Germany, and Great Britain, distinguished Orientalists have studied writings and records cognate to this language, and with most valuable results as to grammar and the precise meaning of words and numerals.

It may justly be said that with their disadvantages the translators of the seventeenth century have raised a monument of patience, piety, sagacity, and taste, which have made all men their debtors. It is hardly possible to speak of the Authorised Version in words which would worthily describe its matchless beauty, its energy, its rhythm, its dignity, sublimity, and pathos. It is indeed wondrously true, and must never be forgotten, that the Bible has a style which is unique. It is on the whole "more easy to translate than any other book, suffers less injury in the process, and is perhaps more than any other susceptible of injury if it be cast in any mould but its own." It can be translated with dramatic beauty, force, lucidity, and music of cadences, into any language. It is a book for the human race. Its style is oriental, but adapted for western tongues. Although without regular metres, its poetry is held by the first authorities to be of the highest order; while its narratives are told with an inimitable simplicity and vigour, the combination of which is altogether unparalleled.

Admirable, however, as is the authorised version of the Old Testament, it must be confessed that through unavoidable difficulties as to the original language, the translation is far from perfect. The free use of italics would suggest this to any thoughtful reader. There are instances (such as Job xxxvi. 32-3) where the English translators would appear to have been in perplexity as to the meaning of Hebrew words. Nor did the Septuagint always help them. The present writer has read in the Hebrew such books as those of Proverbs and the Minor Prophets, and comparing our version with the translation of the LXX., has been constrained to acknowledge that to both parties of translators the Hebrew was not in all cases clearly apprehended.

As we enter on these last days, in the wisdom and love of God, this is no longer the case. There are now ripe and distinguished Hebrew scholars; and Lexicons like that of Gesenius have shed a flood of light upon the Old Testament vocabulary. This consideration of a better acquaintance with the original language, justifies the action of Convocation in relation to a new version, and causes us to look forward hopefully and eagerly to the appearance of the revision. Other reflections concerning it must be reserved for a second article.

LONDON BENEATH THE SURFACE.

WONDERFUL, mighty city!
  Oh! how thy life rolls on:
The roar and the rush of traffic,
  The laugh, and the curse, and moan.
The thousands who live by labour,
  The thousands who live by sin.
Wonderful life of the city,
  Tumult, and toil, and din.

Is it life, all life, in the city?
  Nay; dark lies the shadow of death.
Look not on the surface, Christian,
  But linger and gaze beneath
The turmoil, the glare and bustle;
  Beneath all the outward show
You will see dead souls in the city,
  Unconscious of want and woe.

Aye; souls that are dead and Christless.
  The eyes of the lost look up
In your face. Will you stay and spare them
  Some drops from your brimming cup
Of a free and full salvation?
  Will you carry the Word of Life
Through street, and alley, and workroom,
  Where the power of sin is rife?

Yea, workers, beloved in Jesus,
  I see you, a blessed host—
Ye are in the highways and byeways,
  Seeking to save the lost.
But the need, the need grows greater,
  And our King is at the door;
Let us rise and beseech Him together
  Fresh grace on his Church to outpour.

In the might of his Holy Spirit
  Let us go to the dead in sin,
Let us plead with the Christless thousands,
  And labour to bring them in
To the life undimmed, unending,
  Wrapped up in one precious Name,
To the fair and golden city,
  And the Christ who overcame.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

AT the workers' meeting on Wednesday evening, last week, there was present a band of trained boys, soon to start for Canada. Letters from Mr. Pearse, in China, and stating the arrival of Mr. Hudson Taylor in Shanghai, were cheering, and called forth the heartiest praise and prayer. Dr. McKilliam gave an address on 1 Cor. i. 30: What the Lord Jesus was, is, and shall be, to the believer.

Mr. Henderson, who had just arrived from Belfast with twenty boys from the Belfast Home, gave a short account of the work there. The Lord had supplied all the need. He told of one boy who had been rescued, who went out to Canada, and has now a farm of his own, for which he paid 400 dollars. Also of another of our boys who began on a farm, then got into an office, and is now going out as a missionary to Africa.

CHRIST AND HIS PEOPLE.

(1) Christ in us on earth.
(2) We in Christ in heaven.
(3) Christ our High Priest in heaven making intercession for us his people on earth.

THERE is no more glad and joyous truth in the Old Testament than that "My beloved is mine," unless it be the other side of that dear relationship, "I am my beloved's." There is no more glorious and wonderful mystery in the New Testament than "Christ in us"—that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; that we are a habitation for God, through the Spirit: unless it be that we are in Christ, by the exceeding greatness of God's power to usward made to sit together with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

For this is the great mystery—the marriage union of God and man—Christ and the Church; that God prepared a human body for his Son, in which the Son came to do the Father's will, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. In reward for which otherwise impossible service, God "raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but in the age to come; and put all things under his feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

Verily, this mystery of the Husband and the wife, of Christ and the Church, is great; but whether that He is ours, or that we are his; that Christ is in us on earth, or that we are in Him at the right hand of God: is the greater of the two mysteries of which the one great mystery is composed, is more than tongue can tell.

We say this, because we are always liable to magnify particular truths, out of proportion with others, which are equally essential parts of the whole truth. Thus, some dwell almost exclusively on the Church being in Christ in the heavenlies; while on the other hand, in the teaching and testimony concerning holiness, which has been so blessed a feature of the recent years, the emphasis has been chiefly laid on "Christ in us."

It may help us to form definite thoughts of this great mystery, if we take knowledge of its opposite. For every detail of the mystery of iniquity is in vivid contrast to the mystery of God.

Thus, the temporary incarnation of Satan in a serpent * is answered by the everlasting incarnation of God the Son in fashion as a man.

The devil had the power of death. Jesus says, "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Man threw off his allegiance to God; therefore, the beginning of the Gospel is the preaching of the Kingdom, the rule, of God.

Man repented from God, and believed the Old Serpent; the Gospel, therefore, claims repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

Man, believing Satan's lie, disobeyed God; the Gospel, therefore, requires obedience to the faith, among all the nations, for his Name, who is faithful and true.

Man's firstborn, Cain, was of that wicked one; but we are of God, and have overcome the wicked one.

We might pursue these contrasts into every detail of the conflict between God and the devil concerning man, did space permit. These here mentioned are only used as illustrations, to lead up to the fact that the twofold mystery we are considering—Christ in us, and we in Christ—is in direct contrast and opposition to the awful mystery of evil, that unclean spirits dwell in men, and that the whole world lieth in the wicked one.

These things are true of every one, and yet they may become more largely, more experimentally, more emphatically true. The good may become better, the bad may become worse. We may be imitators of God as dear children, and grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; while, on the other hand, evil men and seducers wax worse and worse. Jesus said of Judas, "One of you is a devil." Yet Satan (1) first put it into his heart to betray his Lord; then (2) entered into him, and caused him to agree with the chief priests for thirty pieces of silver; then after the sop Satan (3) entered into him more deeply, and he went immediately out into the black and dark night, and fulfilled the Lord's bidding: "That thou doest, do quickly." So, on the other hand, the disciples (1) left all and followed Jesus. After his resurrection they were (2) filled with the Holy Ghost at Pentecost; but after that, (3) again and again they were filled; and the capacity of the vessel increased more and more, to receive the Spirit, which is given without measure because Jesus has been glorified.

So again, all believers are in Christ; but not all have visions and revelations of the Lord. Paul said, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago [there were such men years ago, before the days of machinery and steam; are there any now?], whether in the body, or out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth: how that he was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not possible or lawful for a man to utter." Let us not sigh—"Oh for some joy of that lost time to colour this"—but yield ourselves to be his servants indeed; for (as at the marriage at Cana) servants know what governors do not know; the Revelation was given to the servants through our fellow-servant John; and we have the promise of Jesus that "His servants shall serve Him, and they shall see his face."

We have spoken of two relationships which the Lord Jesus bears to us his people, He in us, and we in Him. But there is another relationship which is spoken of in direct connection with "the rest of faith." In the fourth of Hebrews the Apostle exhorts: "Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left of entering into his rest, any one of you should seem to have come short of it."

I do not doubt that the rest here spoken of is truly described by the hymn—

"Lord, I believe a rest remains
  To all Thy people known—
A rest where pure enjoyment reigns,
  And Thou art loved alone."

A rest which remains from the legal past, under which rest was impossible (except so far as faith saw the promises afar off and embraced them), to the Gospel present, when it is not presented as a far-off attainment, but the coming short of which is to be feared as a dire calamity.

Jesus is the minister of this, as of every other blessing. But it is not as dwelling in us on earth, nor as our being raised up together with Him in heaven, that He is spoken of as helping us to attain this rest of faith. That we are on earth and He is passed through the heavens is the relationship between us and Him, set before us in this connection. We, in our diligent endeavour to enter into that rest, are continually pierced and probed by the living and active Word, which, sharper than a two-edged sword, pierces even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and discerns the thoughts, intents and motives beneath every action, however fair it seems, until the poor believer, hunted and driven out of every rest in self or sense, is beginning to despair. Then comes deliverance; then the Spirit points to the only true way of rest: "Seeing then that we have a great High Priest, that is passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our confession" of faith in Him.

If we speak of the possibility, yea the necessity, of the believer being saved to the uttermost from sin, the way of its attainment is that we draw near to God through Him, our Great High Priest after the order of Melchizedek, who ever liveth to make intercession for us (vii.)

The felt necessity of such a priesthood is one of the deepest instincts of the human soul. Therefore, the devil in all false religions makes the priest-craft prominent; in this, as in everything else, counterfeiting the work of God. Our remedy for this is not unduly to emphasise some other truth, but to preach the untransferable ministry of our Great Melchizedek Priest in Heaven, instead of the imposture of a human priesthood exercised on earth.

While, therefore, we joyfully and thankfully hold fast the glorious twofold mystery, that as "God was in Christ" on earth, and that Jesus was in the bosom of the Father in heaven, so Christ is in us on earth, and we are in Christ in heaven—let us also remember that other truth, that we his members are treading the earthly wilderness, and that He, our Head, is in heaven making intercession for us.

"A threefold cord is not easily broken." We cannot with impunity overlook either thread of this threefold cord—either of these three relationships between the Church and Christ—between the members on earth and the Head in heaven. M.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

AT one of the recent Conference meetings at Brighton, Mr. Eliot Walton gave a very interesting account of his work at Clapham among the railway boys. He urged all to realise the immense responsibility put on railway servants, to whose hands, so to speak, are daily committed the lives of thousands. Many of them get only every third Sunday off duty. The work of the Railway Mission has spread, and now four secretaries are at work. Twenty thousand copies of The Railway Signal are sent out monthly. There are seventy-three branches of the work, 183 agents to correspond with, and these are nearly all Christian railway men.

Mrs. Gates, who works among the railway men in Brighton, followed with a very forcible appeal to Christians to remember these men in prayer, to encourage them with a kind word when journeying. Many meetings are held of the men themselves and their wives. At their own desire a little tract society has been formed, and the men distribute tracts along the line. During last year over £50 was subscribed by them for various objects.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.—This Association held its annual meeting in the Lecture Hall of the Sunday-school Union, Old Bailey, on Monday, 7th inst. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. J. Hartley, and addresses were given by Rev. Robert Berry, of Islington, and Rev. W. D. Macgregor, of Paddington. The Hon. Secretary read a statement which described the object to be the daily home reading of the Scriptures by Sunday-school teachers, scholars, and their parents, the reading for each day having some connection with the International lesson for the following Sunday. For 1885, up to date, there had been issued to 830 branches in the United Kingdom 62,000 cards, and to the Colonies and other countries 11,000, being a total of 73,000, as compared with 55,000 issued during the whole of last year.

CRUEL CHEAPNESS.

OUR friend and brother, Mr. S. F. Kendall, 17, West 35th-street, New York, referring to Mr. Archibald Brown's article in our issue of Feb. 5, asks if he will kindly give an answer to the question which that article presses very heavily on the heart: "How can Christian women individually lessen 'to-day' the awful evils in the lives of their suffering sisters, caused by 'cruel cheapness'?" and adds: "May we not hope that the aggregate of even individual effort, wisely directed, may accomplish some amelioration of the untold anguish which is caused by 'cruel cheapness'?" Perhaps others, as well as Mr. Brown, may contribute an answer to this inquiry.

Having communicated with Mr. Brown on this subject, he has sent the following reply:—

"My Dear Sir,—The question of Mr. Kendall is no easy one to answer. I always feel that the bitterest thing about the bitter cry is the inability to respond to it in any other way than that of sympathy. I feel it is humiliating to have to say: 'I don't know;' but it is better to say so, like Moses, (Num. ix. 8), than sacrifice truthfulness to keeping up an appearance of knowledge. I see the evil, but I do not see how Christian women are to materially lessen it. While human nature remains human nature, it will be selfish, and seek to get the most it can for the least return. In addition to this, thousands, by the lowness of their wages—the result of cheapness—are driven to the cheap market. That which they suffer from they must yet patronise. Paid on the cheap, they must buy on the cheap. It is a vicious circle, from which there seems no escape.

"On the other hand, there are many to whom 'cheapness' is not a necessity of life, and on these I believe it is incumbent to keep clear from complicity with the wrong, if powerless to undo it. When a lady deliberately and needlessly patronises 'a cutting house,' and purchases things concerning which she is herself bound to say, 'I cannot think how it is done for the money,' I hold she is implicated in the evil. There are still in all trades respectable dealers, who are trying to hold out against the mad competition of the day, and do not court customers by the bait of 'excessive cheapness,'—men who pay fair wages and charge fair prices. These traders should be supported by Christian customers.

"I do not for a moment suppose such action would go far to cure the evil. It would, however, save from complicity, bear a faithful witness, and help the deserving. Let Christians, as far as possible, support businesses that are conducted on Christian principles. It is hard for a godly tradesman to see fellow-Christians give all their support to any worldling, simply because he owns a noted cheap house. A Christian conscience in the matter of bestowing custom is sorely needed.

"The whole matter is an intensely difficult one, and I can only wish the remedy was as clear before my eyes as the evil.—Yours sincerely,

"Archibald G. Brown.

"22, Bow-road, E."

Mr. Kendall's question is as important as it is difficult. Every right action, as well as every wrong one, is a seed, and whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. Every selfish act, every purchase in which we seek our own advantage only, tends to perpetuate the vicious system which produces the bitter cry; and every transaction in which the advantage of both seller and buyer, employer and employed, is equitably considered, tends to establish the right and to check the wrong. The life in the good seed is as vital and fruitful as that in the evil weed; and Almighty God is on the side of every righteous sale or purchase. As a rule, an undue proportion of the profits on manufactured articles goes in trading it, and too little is paid to the producers. Ladies may materially help their labouring sisters by employing them directly, rather than in buying ready-made clothing. Establishments which swallow up fifty smaller ones are a national calamity. Avoid them. The law of Moses gives divine counsel applicable to all dealings between man and man. Study and obey it.

A STUDY OF THE MAHDI.

THE Pall Mall Gazette summarises a lecture on the Mahdi, given by M. James Darmestetter, at the Sorbonne, "which will probably enable some of those who have supported his smashing at Khartoum coûte que coûte now that it is too late, to reconsider the conclusion at which they so inconsiderately arrived."

After detailing the early history of the Mahdi (the God-directed), M. Darmestetter says:—

"There is one thing which I believe can be safely assumed; and that is that, whatever may be the results of the English expedition, a European nation, whichever it may be, will never be able to establish permanent order in the Soudan. Why? By natural fatality; by an order from on high. The sun above their heads, the desert sand beneath their feet oppose a double veto to their success."

It is very natural for the French lecturer to compare the situation in the Soudan with the French Revolution.

"He became the prophet in his own country. . . The revolutionary idea among us, and the idea of a Messiah among the Mussulmans, are the same instinct, the same aspiration, among us under a secular, among them under a religious form; among us shrivelled up in abstract forms and theoretical reasonings, among them in the striking form of supernatural visions. '93 has arrived in the Soudan. Revolutionary Islam is even as revolutionary France. In both cases there is the same striving after the ideal in bloody battles fought with covetousness and hatred; in both cases the same ignorance of reality, the same unnatural hope, the same dream of a world renewed by miracle while humanity remains as it was before; the same prodigies of enthusiasm, of ferocity, of devotion; in both cases the kingdom of equity, of peace, of eternal fraternity inaugurated under the auspices of the destroying angel. The Chancellor of the Mahdi need not feel himself expatriated in the midst of the desert clubs. Where the French beggar sings, 'Here is the end of your miseries, consumers of brown bread, water-drinkers,' the oppressed Arab cries to heaven, 'Mata yathar el Mahdi'—(When will the Mahdi appear?). A people penetrated with this sentiment may be exterminated, but it cannot be made submissive to its fate."

The following has equal interest, as showing the Mohammedan view of General Gordon:—

"The latest events, the fall of Khartoum and the death of Gordon, have dispelled doubts as to the Mahdi's mission—the death of Gordon even more than the fall of Khartoum, for it is an event which from the beginning had its marked place in the programme of the Messiah. It seems indeed as if Gordon had played, and still plays, in the imagination of the Mahdi's men, a part which is not that of a human being. To us Gordon is nothing but a hero, the last, perhaps, and the most sympathetic hero of Christian Puritanism; a Milton who has lost his way among the intrigues of the nineteenth century; to the Arabs Gordon is Christianity itself, the greatest incarnation of evil and of terror, which they contemplate with a mixed feeling of terror, respect, and hatred. The English papers have published a missive from the Emir of Berber, announcing the fall of Khartoum and the death of Gordon thus: 'We have killed the traitor Gordon,' so it is translated. It is rather astonishing to have this epithet of traitor applied to Gordon, even though by the pen of an Arab.

"It is to be regretted that English newspapers have not given the translation of the Arab word; it is quite possible that the text was 'Gordon impostor'—that is to say, the Deddjal, the Antichrist. For the death of Deddjal, the murder of the Antichrist, must be the great work of the Mahdi and the commencement of his triumph. There is another part which he might have played if it had pleased him to go over to Islamism, and which the Mahdi appears to have offered to him; it was the part of Jesus Christ. Theoretically at least, there is no Mahdi without a Jesus by his side."

To uproot ideas and superstitions like these fire and sword are as helpless as were the wild beasts and the stake to destroy the truth preached by Christian martyrs. These sons of Ishmael may be won by the religion of the Sermon on the Mount, they will never be sabred or cannonaded into it.

WORK AMONG ITALIAN SOLDIERS.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers may know something of the remarkable Christian work which is known to have been in progress for some years back among the Italian Army in Rome, mainly through the exertions of Signor Capellini, of the Evangelical Military Church there. The last report is now before me, and one is more than ever struck by the genuineness and far-reaching character of Signor Capellini's Mission. Some extracts of a letter recently received from one who has resided for several winters in Rome, and who can speak from personal knowledge, will indicate its value:—

Soon after Christmas there was a great gathering to commemorate the founding of the Military Evangelical Church. About six hundred soldiers attended, belonging to every arm of the service, and sixty-five new members were enrolled. Each of these had a present of a nicely-bound Bible and a card of membership. It was a most interesting service: the men listened with such devout attention, and took part so heartily in the singing. A great many non-commissioned officers attended. In the expedition that has started for Assab, five of the Bersaglieri are members of the church. I have never known a work so to prosper as this does. Other works have their ups and downs, times of prosperity, and times of discouragement, but this Mission to the soldiers never flags. To the Lord be all the praise!

"Every autumn a large number of the men are dismissed, having served their time, and the regiments are changed, so that the church has seemed to be entirely emptied. Yet in a short space of time it is as full as ever, and scores of men are again brought within sound of the Gospel. The secret of this is that Signor Capellini's zeal is inexhaustible. During the hot summer months he follows the soldiers to the different camps of exercise, and makes acquaintance with the men of the regiments that are to come home in the autumn, so that on their arrival they can instantly find their way to him and the Mission services. He also then sees old friends, and confirms them in the faith.

"Many officers are now asking about the work, and borrowing books from Capellini; accepting Bibles from him, and sometimes asking for explanations of certain passages. Occasionally they look in at the services; but it is against military law for officers and men to meet together in any public place; even in a restaurant it would not be allowed. The officers, therefore, could not make a practice of attending Capellini's services; but they are inquiring about them, and taking an interest in them. I will not say that any have as yet openly professed themselves evangelicals; but that, in these days, an officer should read his Bible is a great step."

It will interest your readers if I add that while Sgr. Capellini is an object of special dislike to the clerical party, his services, as a real benefactor to the soldiers, have been recognised in the highest quarter; for the King of Italy recently bestowed on this Protestant evangelist the distinction of Cavaliere della Corona d' Italia (Knigl of the Crown of Italy). If any of your reade should desire to aid him in his evangelistic work, especially in providing a suitable place of worship, I need not say how gladly I would forward their kind help.

NOTES ON THE
SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MARCH 26.—MATTHEW XXVI. 1–13.

v. 11.—"Ye have the poor always with you."—A very beautiful incident which had just occurred led the Saviour to say this. Mary, the sister of Lazarus, had brought a very precious box of ointment or perfume, and poured it over the head of Jesus, as a proof of her ardent love for Him and her sure faith in Him as the Saviour of men. Judas condemned her act as a waste, and said the box should have been sold, and the money given to the poor. John tells us in chap. xii. 6, that "he said this, not because he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief," and he wanted to have had the money given to him. What a terrible sin is covetousness, and how earnestly we ought to guard against it. Nothing cures it like fervent love to Jesus. If we prize Him as Mary did, we shall be sure to give Him the best we have, and learn for his sake to care for others.

MARCH 27.—MATTHEW XXVI. 14–30

(1) We may be disciples of Christ in name without being so in heart. Judas was "one of the twelve," but he had no love for Jesus, and became his betrayer. We cannot be saved by mere outward connection with Christ.

(2) How needful it is to examine ourselves, and to know our real state. When Jesus said one of them should betray Him, they "began every one of them to say, Lord, is it I?" Let us be like David, and pray as he did in Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24. Read also 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

(3) Two feasts are spoken of here—the Passover and the Lord's Supper. Both speak to us of Jesus. Paul says, "Even Christ our passover was sacrificed for us" (1 Cor. v. 7). He was typified by the paschal lamb. He is "the Lamb of God." In the Lord's Supper, which Jesus instituted, you find Him speaking of the bread and the wine as emblems of his body and his blood. We are by faith to take Jesus to be the food of our hearts, and the Saviour of our souls. Read John vi. 53—56.

MARCH 28.—MATTHEW XXVI. 31–46.

v. 41.—"Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."—This scene in the garden of Gethsemane is a very solemn one to look upon; it reminds us of the prophet's words, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me" (Lam. i. 12). And again: "He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted" (Isa. liii. 4). How earnestly we should listen to his voice as He speaks out of the midst of his agony, and says, "Watch and pray." Temptation is all round us; let us follow his example and obey his precept.

"At home, abroad, in sickness or in health,
'Mid scenes of poverty or smiling wealth,
In silent room, where sickness robs by stealth—
Everywhere, watch and pray.
Thou needest help where'er thy steps may tend,
Thy foes for ever watch thy heart to rend;
Therefore that God may help thee to the end,
Everywhere watch and pray."

MARCH 29.—MATTHEW XXVI. 47–58.

v. 56.—"All this was done, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled."—Twice are the Scriptures referred to in this portion: in ver. 54, Jesus having just said that He could call twelve legions of angels to guard Him from his foes, added, "But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" The Scriptures are the Word of God (see 2 Tim. ii. 16); and in John x. 35 we find Jesus saying, "The Scripture cannot be broken." Learn to reverence the Scriptures more and more. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My word shall not pass away."

MARCH 30.—MATTHEW XXVI. 59–75.

v. 57.—"And he went out, and wept bitterly." Peter's sin consisted in a denial of Christ, and it was brought about by his trusting in himself instead of in the Lord. We should never be confident in ourselves: "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool" (Prov. xxviii. 26). Moreover, we read in verse 58 that "Peter followed him afar off," and then that "he sat with the servants." We are only safe when we keep near to Jesus, and it is always dangerous to mix up with his avowed enemies. Peter's sin was followed by deep and sincere repentance. The look of Jesus, and the words of Jesus, melted his heart, so that he was forgiven and restored. Have we wandered away from Jesus? If so, let us hasten to say in Wesley's words, and that with all our hearts:—

"Jesus, let thy pitying eye
Call back a wandering sheep!
False to Thee, like Peter, I
Would fain, like Peter, weep:
Let me be by grace restored,
On me be all long-suffering shown;
Turn, and look upon me, Lord,
And break my heart of stone."

MARCH 31.—MATTHEW XXVII. 1–14.

v. 3.—"Then Judas which had betrayed him . . . repented himself."—There are different kinds of repentance. Yesterday we were told of the repentance of Peter, but that was very different to the repentance of Judas. Peter was full of sorrow for sin; Judas was only filled with remorse. He tried to undo his deed by taking back to the priests the money he had received as the price of Jesus, but it was too late, and he was filled with despair. Awful fate! "He went and hanged himself." By becoming the betrayer he became "the son of perdition," and as we read in Acts i. 25, "he went to his own place." If his repentance had been true, springing out of a really contrite heart, even Judas might have been forgiven. Let us learn to hate all evil, and especially pray to be kept faithful and true to Christ.

APRIL 1.—MATTHEW XXVII. 15–26.

v. 22.—"What shall I then do with Jesus?"—This was Pilate's question when the Jews preferred Barabbas to Christ. A story is told of Rowland Hill, the great preacher. Lady Ann Erskine was passing by in her carriage, and she asked her coachman who it was that was drawing such a large assembly. He replied that it was Rowland Hill. "I have heard a good deal about him," she said, "drive up near the crowd." Mr. Hill saw her, and stopping in the midst of his discourse he said: "My friends, I have something for sale; it is the soul of Lady Ann Erskine. Is there anyone here that will bid for her soul? Ah, do I hear a bid? Who bids? Satan bids. Satan, what will you give for her soul? 'I will give riches, honour, and pleasure.' But stop. Do I hear another bid? Yes, Jesus Christ bids. Jesus, what will you give for her soul? 'I will give eternal life.' Lady Ann Erskine, you have heard the two bids—which will you take?" It is related that Lady Ann fell down on her knees and cried out, "I will have Jesus." May every young reader make the same choice.

BIBLE ACROSTIC.

These have been prized from ancient days;
God loves the kind that prove his grace.

(1) For precious metal widely famed.
(2) A heathen god in Scripture named.

(3) A mount which guards a secret grave.
(4) A type of Him who lives to save.

(5) A little creature often seen,
But to the Jews pronounced unclean.

(6) Two of these useful things we have,
And thus the words of life receive.

(7) Then did the lowly Saviour rest:
He saved a soul, and found a feast.

(8) With this our Lord was girt when He
Would teach his saints humility.

(9) And, last, an emblem of the men
Who restless are, and tossed with sin.

"PURGED OUR SINS."

Heb. i. 1—14.

"Oh, Marion, what have you done! See!" and her cousin pointed to three large inkstains which had spotted the bosom of Marion's snow-white dress. Marion's common and oft-reproved habit when writing was to hold the pen in her mouth, regardless whether it was filled with ink or not, hence many an ink-spot fell on dress or table-cloth, and many a scolding followed.

Marion's bright face clouded.

"I am always doing it," she said; "my careless head will never remember Miss Morton's directions. I shall get into a row!"

Just then pale-faced Elinor Moore looked up from her French translation.

"I can help you, Marion. I have something in my desk which will take out stains." "What is it?" questioned Marion and Louise together.

"I am not sure of the name. It is a chemical preparation; my brother Tom gave it me. I have tried it several times, and find that however bad the stain is, it completely extracts it."

The girls gladly tried the wonderful preparation, and were surprised and gratified to find it really and completely extracted the ink stains, and the fair white dress showed no sign of Marion's misadventure when Miss Thorpe came in to give the English lesson. . . . . In the three words that head this paper we learn the sweet precious truth that the Lord Jesus "Himself purged our sins."

Is it not news that makes our hearts very glad? Even should our sins be like so many black, black stains on the fair white robe of innocence, which clothes each new-born soul as it flits down from God to live out its little life on earth, the shed blood of Jesus applied to our sin-stained souls can "purge" the stains, and even the eye of the great God gazing on the soul "washed in the blood of the Lamb" shall see no "spot or wrinkle, or any such thing," and we shall pass into his presence "blameless and harmless," faultless and stainless.

Just ask yourself one little question, quietly—"Am I washed in the blood of the Lamb?" I wonder if you are. What shall I say to you if you can answer the question by a glad "Yes, thank God"? I will say this, if you see a friend, a school-fellow, a cousin, of whom you cannot truly say, "He (or she) is blood-washed and forgiven," then tell that one what the blood of Jesus can do. Recommend that precious Fountain whose crimson flood can extract every stain. Seize every opportunity to make known the fact that Christ has saved you and will save others.

FISHER FOLK IN STORNOWAY.

THE mission amongst the women during the season of 1884 was a fair success. The number of women employed was far in excess of former seasons. The Free Church of Scotland sent two lady missionaries, Miss Lymington and Miss Caldwell, who laboured amongst them faithfully and prayerfully, visiting them in their lodgings, and holding meetings with them in their rooms.

In connection with the kippering trade there is a large number of men, a quite distinct class from the fishermen, and very intelligent. Services were held Sabbath evenings for their special benefit. The coffee-room department we consider a success, not so much as to profit as to its beneficial effects in other respects. Hitherto the refreshments given to the work-people partook chiefly of whisky and beer; at present coffee is almost entirely substituted. A good deal of literature is needed every season, such as the British Workman, Gospel books, Temperance tracts, and other instructive reading.

Any help that Christian friends can give, either in money or literature, will be thankfully received by Rev. D. J. Martin, or yours faithfully, Donald Smith.

MR. W. FORBES has, within the last few days, given addresses at Bethnal-green, Dalston, Shadwell, Westminster, and Marylebone. At his meetings at Reeve Mission Hall (Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke's) many signed the pledge and put on the blue ribbon. He is this week holding meetings in Holloway.

DR. SAPHIR ON PERFECTION.

Phil. iii. 12—21.

(Concluded from our last.)

BUT now there is a third point that must be considered. The Apostle does speak of perfection. I have shown to you the perfection of the believer at conversion—the perfect righteousness of Christ, in which we always stand when once it has been given to us; and our perfect renewal—"If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature;" "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." I have also shown the life-long imperfection and sinfulness that cling to us. But the Scriptures mention also a perfection of the believer; or, as it should be translated, a maturedness, a state of manhood.

There are babes in Christ and there are men in Christ. There are some who in Christ have reached a certain fulness of knowledge and completeness of experience and character; that is what Holy Scripture calls perfect. "As many as are perfect." "That the man of God may be perfect." What are the features of those that are perfect in Christ Jesus in this sense? This maturity is described in the Word of God, and I trust many of us are pressing on toward perfection, or maturedness in Christ.

The first point is knowledge. Not merely intellectual knowledge, not the knowledge which is peculiar to learned men, or men who have an abstract and powerful mind; but the vital, experimental, appropriating knowledge which is given of God. "Ye have an unction from the Holy One and know all things." To know is to have eternal life. "That I may know Him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings." This, then, is one characteristic of maturedness in Christ—that we understand the teaching of the Epistle to the Hebrews—our sanctification and acceptance in Christ Jesus; and that we also understand the teaching of the Epistle to the Romans—that Christ and Christ alone, by whom and in whom our old man was crucified and in whom we are risen again, is our Strength and our Life. This knowledge, as it is comprehensive and spiritual, never asks whether such and such a doctrine is essential to our salvation, but whether it is essential or important to God. There are many people who say it does not matter much whether we know about the Second Advent, because we can be saved without knowing it. A very excusable speech in a little babe, but very inexcusable in a man who has been a Christian more than a year. If it is important and dear to God, it is also to us. All Scripture is given in order to be profitable to us, "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work."

Another characteristic of mature knowledge is that the heart is established by grace to know Christ and the fulness that is in Him. Therefore we are not tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. There is a feverishness, an excitability, a love of novelty which characterises this age in secular respects, and it is also among believers. The old truths do not seem to satisfy them. They know that we are justified by faith and have peace with God, but still they want something more. They are unsatisfied and ready to be led astray. If we are men in Christ Jesus, we shall be steadfast and immovable, knowing the truth on which we stand.

The third characteristic of those who are men in Christ is that as Christ Jesus becomes unto them more indispensable, so they draw more out of the fulness that is in Him. They always go into the Temple (which is Christ) as the publican. They draw out of Christ wisdom and strength, because they have learned more and more the power of the adversary and the sublety of the sin that still dwells within them. They want more and more to glory in the Lord, and in Him only. As they go on in the Christian life humility deepens and increases, until at last they see themselves to be the chief of sinners. There is a greater rejoicing in Christ, not so much because of any inward conscious experience, but because they know that God is delighted with Him, that God is satisfied with Him as their Representative and Surety, that He is all. They lean more on Christ, they receive more from Christ.

Another characteristic of the matured Christian is, that he is more absorbed with the knowledge and contemplation of God. "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning." And lastly, as we saw in the previous part of the chapter, they know the power of Christ's resurrection, which enables them to know the fellowship of his sufferings; they have a deeper experience of what is meant by "being made conformable unto his death."

How do we get into this state of maturity? It is God's doing. As the rain cometh down from heaven, and the dew returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and causeth it to bring forth, so is it with the Word of God in the heart and life of the believer.

God uses his Word. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy Word is truth." Desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby. Make use of that Scripture that is profitable for all things, for the instruction you need, for the reproof you need. The new man needs no reproof, but the old man is still in you, and he needs reproof. So through the Scriptures, by the self-revelation of Jesus, and by the commentary of providence, God makes us to grow. Affliction is one of the choicest instruments of our growth to maturity and manhood. Chastisement is necessary, because God is educating us for the future. In heaven chastisement is not needed; in hell it would be to no profit; but here on earth, where lives that mysterious being, a Christian—that is, a man whose perfection is Christ Jesus, but who still carries about with him the old man, chastisement is needed. (Compare Mark iv. 26—29; Isaiah lv. 10—13, with the passage commanding us to grow, to be diligent, &c.)

There is the fourth and extremely important point of our consummation. Our citizenship is in heaven. Christ is there our Representative before God, and the source of our strength; and not merely Christ our life, but our own life is there. "For your life is hid with Christ in God." Our treasury is there; our armoury is there. We are like a man in a far distant country—in a country whose inhabitants are enemies of his nation. His citizenship is at home, his resources come from home, his affections are towards home, and his hope and aim is home. Our citizenship is in heaven, and thence Christ our Deliverer shall come. Then He shall give unto us perfect deliverance, for He shall change this body of our humiliation, this body of sin in which we groan. He shall change it and make it like his glorious body. For the blessed Son of God lived his earthly life in a human body, and in glory He lives in a human body still. We who are Christ's are also to live in human bodies; but glorious, transfigured bodies, in which sin is not entrenched. The body, soul, and spirit united shall be pure as Christ is pure. There will be no temptation; sin and evil will stand entirely outside of us. Everything within us will respond to the will of God. Every energy and faculty shall be entirely filled with the energy of God, and with the love of Christ, and with the Spirit of the Most High.

We wait for this. Therefore are we not earthly-minded and enemies of the Cross of Christ. We are strangers and pilgrims, abstaining from all fleshly lusts, not conforming ourselves unto this present age, laying up for ourselves treasure in heaven. There is our perfection, and to this let us constantly look. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we shall be entirely delivered from the old man. We shall see Jesus as He is, and then only shall we be like Him. Meanwhile, let us look not to ourselves but only to Jesus. Before you confess your sins look first to Jesus, in whom they are all forgiven. So will the children of Israel look unto Jesus whom they have pierced. and then shall their tears flow. Never go to the throne of grace without first remembering that Christ died for the ungodly, and you are going to your Father, because Jesus Christ lives as your Advocate. Your sorrow will be keener, your repentance will be deeper, your humility will be more genuine, because there will be Christ in it. And in all your doings, and in all your sufferings, through good report and evil report, in sickness and in health, in weakness and in strength, nay, even in backsliding, faults, and sins, remember that faithful is He who hath called you, and who also will perform. He will heal your backsliding, He will love you freely. Trusting in the Lord, let us abhor that which is evil; let us cleave to that which is good. Let us always remember perfection in Christ Jesus. "The Lord is his Name, and perfect is his work." Let us be whole-hearted, and with a whole heart receive Christ, as He is given unto us by the Father.

[Two correspondents have written to us criticising some of the points dealt with in our first instalment of Dr. Saphir's discourse. We think it due to the preacher to say that our report, being necessarily a summarised one, may not in every case have conveyed the exact meaning intended. We are glad to know that a full and revised report of the sermon will be published soon. Most likely any objections that may have been felt on reading our condensed report will be removed when the complete statement is seen.—Ed.]

EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY, VICTORIA.

WE are glad to hear of the prosperity of this recently-formed Society. We have before us the first annual report, from which we learn that God has abundantly blessed the efforts in this far-off land to win souls for Christ. It has been the special desire of the Society to send the Gospel to those who otherwise would not have been brought within its reach both in the town and the bush districts. Two evangelists are fully employed—Mr. A. J. Clark, who laboured so successfully in this country in connection with Mr. Smith, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and Mr. A. E. Eustace, lately connected with the village mission. Others have been partially employed, besides volunteers. During the year eighty-three missions have been conducted, with an estimated attendance of 134,246, while over 2000 inquirers have been personally dealt with. The income we see was £1160, certainly a fair amount for the first year (nearly half of this being the gift of one member of the committee).

The annual meeting recently held in Melbourne was a great success. The hearts of those present were moved with thankfulness to God for his goodness during the first year of the Society. The need of such a Society had been long felt, specially in the bush districts, but the committee were not prepared for the reports of almost heathen darkness brought by the evangelists. The eagerness with which "the old, old story' was listened to, makes them long to send more labourers into the field. They hope, therefore, to extend the work as the way opens. As to results, the reports sent in by ministers and Christian workers show that not the least important of these has been the quickening of the love and zeal of the Lord's people. Yet it is satisfactory to know that the greater number of those dealt with have been brought into Church fellowship. It is cheering to read of "sisters who have been alienated for years, reconciled, and sitting at the Master's feet." "Seven or eight strong men working together in a mine, all converted." "The whole of my class of senior girls have taken a stand for Jesus." "Prominent and respected members of the community declared themselves on the Lord's side."

The Society is thoroughly undenominational, and we trust our readers will remember its work in prayer.

LIFT UP THE FALLEN.—If a domestic in our families has been tempted to commit a theft, it may depend upon us whether she becomes a confirmed, desperate thief, or a penitent, self-watchful woman for the future. The statistics of prostitution prove that there is more than one wretched prowler on the midnight streets who might have been saved if the parental door had been opened to her after the first fall from virtue. Society not only sins grievously by sparing the man and striking the woman, but often sins cruelly by striking down at once without ever giving "space for repentance." I am not offering an excuse for sin. I am only pleading for the saving of the sinner by every Christian method. If God's love has built a bridge of recovery, then in his name let us point it out, and help the fallen towards it.—Theo. Cuyler.

"A REASONABLE FAITH."

UNDER this title three members of the Society of Friends have brought out a small volume of "Short Essays for the Times" which are intended to help "seekers after truth" to attain a more satisfactory and reasonable faith than is to be found in ordinary evangelical teaching.

We regret to note that the views of these writers on the subject of the Atonement—a subject to which they give considerable space—are quite out of harmony with what we believe to be the clear teaching of Holy Scripture on this important subject. It will be enough to show what their views are if we quote one short passage.

> "But whatever, in the deep purpose of God 'the Atonement' may be, it certainly is not Expiation; it is not Substitution, nor the suffering of punishment vicariously in any literal sense. It is not the expression of God's anger against sinners, much less against his well-beloved Son in their stead."

If it be asked, then what is it? Here is their answer:—

> "God our Father, being full of love to his wandering and degraded children, seeks to win them back to Himself, to assure them of a welcome, to lift up and restore them, and to make them—of their own willing and intelligent choice—spiritually healthful, self-denying, and law-abiding. For this purpose He manifests Himself in the person of Jesus Christ, who lives a human life; submitting to the restraints and trials of our nature; bearing the ingratitude, self-will, and enmity of men; and finally, in steadfast pursuit of his gracious purpose, suffering at their hands a cruel and humiliating death."
> "Here in the Incarnation [the italics are not ours] in the whole manifestation of the love and gracious purposes of God which the career of the Lord Jesus upon the earth displayed, in his deeds and teaching and promises, as well as in his death and resurrection was the true At-one-ment."

The object of this statement is only too evidently to disparage the view that the cross of Christ is the central object presented to the eye of faith as that whereby atonement has been made. For this the three "Friends" would substitute the Incarnation and its results. But which of these two views best accords with such a Scripture as this: "We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greeks foolishness, but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." Is not the inability of these advocates of a "reasonable" faith to reconcile the doctrine of the Cross with the wisdom of men another proof of the truth of the Apostle's words that "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise"? And again, "the word of the Cross is to them that are perishing foolishness, but unto us which are being saved it is the power of God" (R.V.)

No well-instructed Christian, indeed, no one moderately acquainted with Holy Scripture, could for a moment doubt that the Cross is therein set forth as the central sun of God's plan of Salvation. We are not surprised, therefore, to find in this book not only a want of acquaintance with Scripture (as, for example, the expression continually recurring in inverted commas, as if it were a text, "God manifest in the Spirit"), but at times also a thorough misconception of its meaning. Thus, for example, the "free" forgiveness of the Gospel is spoken of as meaning God's forgiving freely without any propitiation enabling Him to do so. Whereas such a passage as Rom. iii. 24 shows that the word "freely" refers to the mode of our reception, not of God's giving, "being justified freely, by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Here our justification is "freely" given so far as we are concerned, but not so as to God, for on his part it is "through the redemption (or payment of the price) which is in Christ Jesus."

It is not to be wondered at that the concluding chapter of this book "On Inspiration and Revelation" should show a deplorably low estimate on the part of the writers of both the inspiration and authority of Holy Scripture, they deny that—

> "The ordinary mode by which the holy men of old were moved by the Holy Ghost was, in its essential nature, different from the like influence by which good and holy men are still visited, and by which they are still to a large extent endowed with insight into the things of God and with power to communicate them to their fellow-men."

We can only say that this is a very different estimate of the authority of Scripture to that which is taught us by our Lord Himself, and we believe this low view of the inspiration of Scripture lies at the root of the very unsatisfactory teaching of this little book, containing as it does so much of human reason and so little of God's Word.

MOHAMMEDANISM v. CHRISTIANITY.

TWO PICTURES.

BY MR. H. M. STANLEY, THE AFRICAN EXPLORER.

AFRICA — that dark, forgotten continent, rimmed around by mountain-ranges of an altitude from 1000 to 9000 feet high, divided into fair and fertile basins, and watered by mighty rivers, and peopled by countless millions! A fleet of Arab vessels sails across the Red Sea; an army of these fanatics debark; they climb the steep passes of Abyssinia, and surmount the lofty plateau. They are mounted on fleet dromedaries, with coverings of velvet, adorned with gold and silver filigree, on coursers of Yemen and white asses of Arabia. They unfurl their standards, and, with banners streaming, they advance against Paganism, with the fierce cry of "Death to the Unbeliever—there is no God but God, and Mohammed is his prophet.' Terror precedes them, death accompanies them, desolation follows them. The Apostle of Islam knows no mercy. Ages elapse, and this creed overruns North Africa; from Guardafui to Cape Juby the Crescent is triumphant. The Libyan Desert and the Sahara are traversed; and, invincible and dauntless, the proud riders advance towards the Equator, when suddenly the camels are stricken down as by a pestilence, the high-spirited steeds become nerveless and die, and the white asses shrink under this mysterious change of nature. Baffled, they return, to resume their conquests over the dry deserts and rocky plateaux of Northern Africa, leaving the southern half of Africa to other influences, and to higher nations. That is one picture.

The other is of a more modern period. From the Cape of Good Hope advances a Christian missionary, with a meek and humble following of Hottentot servants, a wagon, and a few teams of oxen. He advances northward towards the untravelled wilds of Southern Africa. He seeks the heathen in his home. To his astonishment he hails him as a brother. He soothes the benighted man with the vision of a Heaven, comforts him with the asurance of a Redeemer, and infuses into him the hope of salvation. And ever as he advances northward he repeats the song of the angels, which they sang over Bethlehem: "Peace on earth, goodwill towards men." This same Christian arrives finally on the banks of the Zambesi, and thence directs his paths westward to the Atlantic Ocean. Back again, whence he came, he retraces his wearied steps; and he halts not until he has viewed the waters of the Indian Ocean, and along all that vast route he has dropped the sweet words of peace and love. After a short pause among his own kind, he returns to Africa, and for fifteen years more he continues to move among the lost nations, loving and loved, blessing and being blessed, and at last surrenders his life in their midst on the shore on Bangweolo; and as we turn to the map of Africa, to regard the traces of his footsteps, we behold the outlines of the Cross of the Redeemer drawn by Livingstone during his thirty-two years of travel in the southern half of Africa.

There was pomp and majesty in the proud advance of Mohammed into Abyssinia, but the picture of the lone Christian wandering in those untrodden wilds of South Africa, with charity and good-will for his motto, is almost Divine. It is grand to think of the brave, undaunted Arabs, so invincible in war, carrying the Crescent flag from the Red Sea to the Atlantic! but it is still grander to think of the large conquests achieved by this meek and patient follower of Christ by the simple power of Christian love. Give due meed to the Arabs for the valour and matchless courage with which they carried their faith over many a thousand leages in Northern Africa; but the undying constancy, the persistent resolution, the patient fortitude of this lone soldier of the Cross, during his long and blameless crusade in the strongholds of Paganism, is sublime.

Well then, since this Christian, with all his unrivalled goodness and piety, has declared that the end of the geographical feat is the beginning of commercial (the missionary) enterprise, do you wonder that I, the last of his race and colour who talked with him, should take up his work with the view of redeeming Africa from its forlornness and squalid poverty by initiating legitimate commercial enterprise? If even Brummagem ware be the means of awakening the Africans from their torpor, let Brummagem ware be consecrated as the means which caused Livingstone's hopes to be fulfilled.—Scottish Geographical Magazine.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

ON Tuesday week the annual meeting of the North Branch Home of this Institution was held in Eden-grove, Holloway-road. The design of the meeting was to distribute reward books to former inmates, and to speak a few words of encouragement to them in the situations they are now creditably filling. There was a good attendance. Mr. Francis Nicholls, who presided, said he had been connected with this Institution for the greater portion of his life, and it was a matter of great thankfulness to him to have witnessed its growing usefulness and adaptation to the cases of those for whom it was founded, both among the friendless and the fallen. Mr. Haig Miller spoke words of cheer and encouragement to the workers and the young women.

Mr. Nicholls having distributed the prizes (and it was interesting to notice that some of the recipients of the books had been in the same places from two to seven years), Mr. E. W. Thomas said that during the year the matron had been visited by twenty-seven young women who were known to be respectably married. One former inmate was now supporting an aged father; another was a governess in a school in the country. The matron was continually receiving letters from those who had once been under her care, expressing their gratitude. He added that about 350 would obtain reward books; he was glad to say that nearly one half of them are depositors in savings banks, and two-thirds are total abstainers. It is cheering also to hear that the great majority of them are now regular attendants at the house of God.

Rev. E. J. Barnes referred to revival meetings which had been held lately in connection with the London Episcopal Mission, and which gave promise of a shower of blessing.

Some further words of encouragement were spoken by Mr. Smith and Mr. Ireton, and the happy meeting was closed with prayer.

DOCK LABOURERS.—Mr. C. Coleman (26, Chamber-street, E.) is endeavouring, by free meals to the many unemployed in the vicinity of the docks, to relieve the prevailing destitution, and at the same time win the hearts of these tried brethren to the great Friend of the poor and needy. If any can render help in this effort they will be making a good investment.

MILDMAY COTTAGE CONVALESCENT HOME.—Immediately after the death of Rev. William Pennefather some of those who were intimately connected with him in Christian work instituted a small Convalescent Home for the parish of St. Jude's, as a loving memorial of his tender consideration for the poor committed to his care. For the last ten years this home has done its appointed work. From thirty to forty poor women have year by year enjoyed the advantages it affords, and, after a few weeks' residence for the recovery of their health, have returned to their homes greatly benefited by the change. The time has come when it is thought well to remove it to Clacton-on-Sea; in order to meet the inevitable expense, the purchase of a little new furniture, and clear off outstanding liabilities, &c., I am anxious to raise the sum of £100. I earnestly appeal for aid, and thus secure to the parish an invaluable institution.

DR. PATERSON ON MATERIALISM.

THE fifth lecture of the series at, Devonshire House was headed "Atom v. Person," and dealt with the materialistic problems of the day. Given the world as it now exists, Dr. Paterson asked, to what cause can we attribute its existence? The "atomic" theory, which is at least 2000 years old, is still put forward as a solution. The speculation is that certain minute "atoms" existed from all eternity. Half by chance, and half through the exercise of a sort of freewill, they moved in space obliquely; colliding, they began to form a variety of substances; at last, fortuitously, they succeeded in shaping the present universe. All this appears ludicrous to simple minds, yet it has been gravely put forward from the platform of the wise and learned "British Association for the Promotion of Science." This materialistic theory, of course, has no place for God, the soul, or the future life. It is finding its legitimate outcome in the revolutionary doctrines that are abroad with respect to communism and private rights in property. The progress of materialism seems to be one of the greatest dangers of the present day. It may partly be accounted for by the great strides that have lately been made in the discovery and adaptation of natural forces, so that men's minds have been almost exclusively directed to a consideration of things seen and temporal, to the utter forgetting of things unseen and eternal.

The two factors credited with the construction of the universe by the materialistic school of thinkers are matter and motion. When we ask, Whence came those elements? we get no intelligible reply. Even if an eternity of time were granted to the semi-fortuitous movements of matter, can any sane mind imagine that they can produce a world, anymore than the shuffling of the letters of the alphabet can produce a poem like that of Lucretius—himself one of the authors of the materialistic theory? It has been said that believers form a God in the shape of man, and then reason out God as a kind of magnified man. Granted: even "a magnified man" will account for the universe in a way that a fortuitous concourse of atoms could never do. Another consideration arises behind that of the atoms, which is that the elementary atom itself admittedly has all the appearance of a manufactured article. Who, then, is the maker? All the primordial chemical elements are now known to be related to each other in certain exact proportions. How came this marvellous and beautiful harmony and adjustment? Materialists argue from the indestructibility of matter to its eternity. No doubt it is eternal in the sense that no human power can increase or diminish its quantity; but that does not prove that God cannot create and has not created the matter of which the universe consists.

Dr. Paterson had some interesting things to say about "the conservation of energy," but he showed very lucidly how all the ascertained facts as to the persistence of force in no way account for the origin of force. In the material world we can follow the varied deflections of force into multiform channels, and we find that the motions of matter are controlled and bounded by rigid law. But when we come to the living body of man we find the new elements of mind, conscience, and will, which mainly regulate the forces he may evolve. Materialists assert that man is as much under the power of a blind necessity as the forces of inorganic nature, but all experience proves the childish folly of such a doctrine.

In summing up, the lecturer maintained that the principle of life, in its lowest and most elementary forms, cannot be explained in terms of matter and force. With all the gathered wisdom and experience of the centuries, man has never succeeded by any shuffling of the molecular atoms in producing a spark of life. Materialists object to miracles, but they really attribute to matter the power of working the most marvellous miracles, because they essay to evolve from dead atoms, moving without any adequate motive power, a whole world of intelligence, beauty, adaptation, and manifold use. Proceeding upwards from mere life to thought, we find that in the materialistic philosophy this also is set down as the product of matter and motion. But the failure to indicate the velocity and direction of motions that result in thought, is utterly fatal to the baseless speculation. The simple truth is, man cannot create force; he can only direct it. How, again, is memory to be explained on the materialistic hypothesis? We plainly recollect what happened fifty years ago, yet we know scientifically that all the molecules of the body have been changed seven times within that period. Throughout all these material changes in the body the identity of the individual remains. We have, further, the consciousness of free will, which is something entirely beyond the bounds of material force. It is possible that a man may become almost as much the slave of a base passion as matter is the slave of unbending law. But he nevertheless possesses a consciousness of his sin in yielding to the passion, and by the converting grace of God he may be lifted out of this bondage so that he shall become virtually a new man. Where in materialistic doctrine or discovery is there anything analogous to this? Every case of true conversion is a scientific verification of the fact that there is a new power altogether outside of matter which can produce such a tremendous change. But these things our lofty, so-called "scientists" disdain to look into. The gist of the whole matter is this, Where sight fails us, faith comes to the rescue. We can by seeing and apprehending Him who is invisible, learn the greatness and glory of the Creator, God; and we can have personal communion and dealing with Him through the revelations He has given to us of Himself in the person of Jesus Christ.

MISSION TO THE ESKIMOS.

SIR,—I have been labouring for the last eight years amongst the Eskimos of Hudson's Bay. My work is much the same as that carried on by the Moravians on the coasts of Labrador and Greenland. God has greatly blessed the work. We have now nearly 200 Christian adherents, and amongst this little flock there are some who have manifestly experienced the saving power of the Gospel in their own souls.

My home amongst these poor people is isolated and trying to an extreme. For some six months in the year there is scarcely anything to be seen but one vast expanse of ice and snow. But in the summer months the ice is broken up, and driven from the coast by various winds and storms. I am anxious to take back with me a small steam launch, so that I may be able to travel along a wild and barren shore with some speed and safety. I have often travelled hundreds of miles under the most perilous and trying circumstances. Once, for instance, I was no less than fourteen days accomplishing a distance which might be done in as many hours had I but possessed a suitable vessel to take me on my way.

The work is in its infancy, and is capable of great expansion. Thousands of these poor creatures are waiting for the Gospel, and thousands might be saved were Christians only alive to their needs. I have been able to travel across the vast peninsula of Labrador, where I found many Eskimos ready to receive the Gospel. The desire of these poor people for instruction was something wonderful. Can such men as Franklin, Parry, McClintock, Nares, Kane, and others, give up home, friends, and even life itself, to pierce those ice-bound regions; can vessels be fitted out, and vast sums spent in scientific research; and shall nothing be done by Christians to compass the salvation of these poor isolated Eskimos? The Secretary of our Mission is H. S. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Islington, N.

WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.—The Mercers' Company have made a donation of twenty guineas, and the Worshipful Company of Sadlers a donation of five guineas, to the funds of the Homes for Working Boys, London.

MORAVIAN MISSION WORK.

ON Wednesday, last week, Revs. B. La Trobe and James Henry, from London, were present at the Noon Prayer-meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, and gave some interesting accounts of the missions of the Moravian Church. Mr. La Trobe spoke of the new mission to Eskimoes, of Western Alaska, a work strongly advocated by Dr. Sheldon Jackson, of New York. The first missionaries have been already appointed, and will start for their distant field of labour in the course of a few weeks. Mr. La Trobe also spoke of other fields entered by the Moravian missionaries over a hundred and fifty years ago, especially mentioning Greenland.

Mr. Henry spoke of the readiness with which the missionaries gave themselves to the work, notwithstanding tremendous difficulties and dangers to be encountered. Now that the cry comes from Alaska for the evangelisation of the thousands of Eskimoes on the west coast, still the watchword of this Church is "We are ready."

On the following day Rev. E. P. Hammond gave a most interesting account of his pioneering work there ten years ago. He went there not only to preach the Gospel, but to induce others to follow as missionaries. He wrote full accounts of the country and of the needs of the people, and did all in his power, as will be seen in his book "The Reaper and the Harvest," to arouse the sympathies of Christians for the poor, benighted people of Alaska. All who attended these meetings and heard the accounts of the work were thoroughly interested and pleased, and many new friends were gained for the Mission.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THESE evangelists have held a three weeks' mission at Folkestone. The word of the Lord has been blessed to many souls. Believers have been stirred up to a greater realisation of their privileges and responsibilities. Many souls have been brought out of darkness into God's marvellous light.

It has rejoiced my heart that Christians of all denominations have co-operated in the good work. The large meetings, I, as an established Churchman, am glad to say have been attended by many Episcopalians, although held in the Baptist, Congregational, and Wesleyan chapels. The simple Gospel has been proclaimed with a power and an aptitude of illustration that will, I hope, stir up the ministers of all denominations to more faithfulness and directness in their preaching.

The singing of Mr. Smith is a great attraction. He is a second Sankey, and has an especial power in speaking to children. Sometimes he leads the singing on the cornet, which he plays admirably—a novelty, it is true, but an attraction that is used to the glory of God. Our friends sometimes have meetings for testimony to the Lord's work in the hearts of recent converts. I am persuaded that if ministers and evangelists would more frequently tell the people something of the Lord's dealings with their own souls, a blessing would accrue to many.

This week there is to be an "all-day meeting," and a tea, after which Mr. Smith will give his "Life story" (his testimony), in which the grace of God will be magnified and illustrated in a very wonderful way. This I knew beforehand, by the book on the subject, which Mr. Smith's friends have induced him recently to write, and which is published by Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster. I venture strongly to recommend its perusal and circulation.

The work of these evangelists is, I understand, unsectarian; although Mr. Spurgeon pays, or makes himself liable for, all the general expenses incident to the mission. Local Christians would do well to remember that, where practicable, they should not only collect sufficient funds to meet the local expenses, but should send to Mr. Spurgeon a thank-offering to the Lord.

I understand that these evangelists are going to Southampton after leaving Folkestone. I would earnestly entreat all real Christians there of every name to rally round them. I write as one who, until the present Folkestone mission, was a stranger to these evangelists and their work. I am now convinced that reality and faithfulness to the Word of God is conspicuous in these men. God is using them for his glory.—Yours faithfully,

Chas. Walter.

Notes and Comments.

WE shall be glad to receive notes, briefly and concisely written, of evangelistic work carried on in any part of the world. Friends who receive such intelligence in private letters will much oblige us by communicating it.

At a meeting of the Lancashire Congregational Union, lately held at Ashton-under-Lyne, observations were made like the following:—A leading Manchester minister, referring to the ornate services of the present day, said he looked back with regret on the fervour of the past; he did not object to putting learning into a minister provided the man knew what to do with it. He had seen M.A.s and B.A.s of the new pattern who made him long for the old prophetic fire. The substitution of the word "freedom" for "authority" was coming in, and he gave a warning against losing sight of sin and righteousness.

At the same meeting, the Chairman said that for ministers to dispense with definite convictions was cheap and easy; but it was of no use to the souls of men. To-day what was wanted above everything was practical Christianity. Christ placed little dependence on external methods. The need of the hour was not so much for genius and scholarship, as for consecration. These are timely utterances, and we are glad to learn that the Union, impressed with the need of spiritual revival, recommended a season of simultaneous religious services in Lancashire.

The Times has suggested that the Soudan expenses would be best met by the imposition of an extra tax of threepence per pound on tea. Would it not be a more commendable plan in every way to levy an additional tax on wines, spirits, beer, &c.? Tea represents the chief beverage of thousands of industrious working people, while alcoholic drinks are simply luxuries, and too often destructive ones.

It is an age of luxury and extravagance. In the midst of an expensive war, we yet read of theatrical representations put upon the stage at fabulous cost, while the dresses alone in one recent ephemeral piece cost £5000! The evil does not stop here, for that world which gets its freaks and fashions from the stage, attires its votaries in similitude of habit, and the result is often bankruptcy and ruin. The married daughter of a Christian merchant recently gave sixty guineas for a dinner-dress made in exact copy of one worn by a popular but second-rate actress! Well may "the bitter cry" ascend, and the Lord's missionaries go begging.

A Cincinnati printer, who brought a suit to compel a Telephone Company, that had removed his telephone because he used profanity in a message through it, to replace the instrument, has been defeated in the Supreme Court of Ohio, the Court holding that the Company had the right to remove the instrument.

There is a wholesome air about such justice, reminding us that much around us, meeting the higher senses, needs to be oxygenated and purified – spiritually disinfected. There is not so much open profanity of speech and writing as there used to be; but we fear there is an immense amount of insincere speaking and writing. Ordinary qualities and attributes are expressed in superlatives; trivialities are magnified, while there is often a corresponding desire to minify that which deserves wholesome disparagement.

When we consider that at the root of this there is insincerity of thought, it is high time to regard it as a serious matter. "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt." As Christians, let us remember that the tongue is an unruly member; that every idle word is to be accounted for, and that our Master has promised us a mouth and wisdom. Lawless speech is an offence before God, an insult to society, and a blight on the soul of him who indulges in it.

The sweating system appears to be in full operation in New York. The forty-first annual report of the New York Association for improving the condition of the poor contains many illustrations of the terrible state of things which results. Women are paid seven cents for finishing articles of clothing; for making shirts eight cents per dozen, including the sewing on of 148 buttons and forty-eight stays; for making ladies' wrappers fivepence; and other rates are even less, and these are not special payments during a period of depression, but the regular rates. A "Working Women's Protective Union" has been organised, however, for the purpose of "enforcing by legal proceedings, free of cost to working women, the payment of wages which they have earned. The promoters state that contractors systematically take advantage of the helplessness of women and defraud them, a statement amply illustrated by the fact that the Union has already conducted 7000 prosecutions and recovered 25,000 dollars of wages unjustly kept back from needlewomen.

A correspondent thinks that no better investment could be made than the entrusting of £8 10s. to Dr. Barnardo, who for that sum is able to emigrate a boy or girl to Canada. Says the writer:—

> "Would it not be a pleasant Easter thankoffering to rescue one of God's little ones, by giving the cost of some article, whether of dress, furniture, or other indulgence? I was about to spend that sum on something which I can well do without, and surely 100 readers of THE CHRISTIAN may be found willing to forego some personal gratification in order, by God's help, to save a child from destruction."

A band of Dr. Barnardo's boy emigrants are sailing for Canada this week; much interest was awakened by their presence, and by Dr. Barnardo's address, at the Central Noon Prayer-Meeting on Monday last.

The Law Times says that the judge (Baron Huddleston) who sentenced Henry Williams to seven years' penal servitude "showed an absence of judicial impartiality." Mr. B. Whitworth goes further, and says:—

> "The judge placed great difficulty in the way of the defence, constantly interrupted Williams' counsel, spoke of Williams' calling as a 'degraded' one, characterised the publican, the chief constable, and others implicated, as most respectable persons, and acted throughout with obvious animus and unfairness. . . Seven Poole magistrates have declared their belief in the innocence of Williams. Sixteen hundred people in Poole, convinced that Williams is innocent, have memorialised the Home Secretary. Sir William Harcourt has consulted the judge; the judge is immovable; so the Home Secretary as yet does not interfere."

An able Committee has been appointed to endeavour to obtain Williams' release. But unless the influence of all opponents of disreputable drinking-houses is exerted to the same end, the difficulty of their suppression will be greatly increased. The present is a test case, and no effort should be spared by all abstainers for the reversal of an oppressive and unrighteous sentence.

Mr. Moody has expressed the belief, says a correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, that he has never done better service in any winter campaign than has been accomplished through the Conventions recently held in different places throughout the States. Speaking of the Gospel Songs used at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, the same writer says:—

> "Go where one may in all this broad land, he will hear hymns from Gospel Songs, in the church, if there be one, in the Sunday-school, if there be one, and in the home, if there be one. He will hear them at the railway-station, in the homesteader's cabin, the cowboy's ranch, and the miner's cabin.'

It seldom happens that private efforts for the benefit of the community receive much recognition from the powers that be. All the more gratifying and valuable, therefore, is the warm testimony that has lately been rendered, in a report by the Scotland-yard authorities, to the worth of the prison branch of the St. Giles's Christian Mission. This report states that though there are eleven societies with large incomes established in London, professedly for the assistance of discharged prisoners, only two—the Royal Society and the St. Giles's Mission—actually assist convicts after discharge; of these two the St. Giles's Mission gives the greater amount of assistance, though its income is smaller. Here is a weighty sentence from this official document:—

> "To the good work the St. Giles's Christian Mission has done for the last three years may be partly attributed the decrease of serious crimes, shown by yearly returns and testified to by Her Majesty's Judges and others within the last few months."

The report makes the very commendable suggestion that the large and wealthy charities ought to subscribe liberally to an institution that accomplishes such good results in a very unpretending way. Mr. J. Monro, the new Assistant Commissioner of Police, adds a separate expression of opinion. He says:—

> "During my short connection with the Metropolitan Police I have had many opportunities of noticing the very valuable work which Mr. Wheatley does on behalf of discharged prisoners. The new Home [in Brooke-street, Holborn] will meet a great want, and deserves encouragement at the hands of every one who has the welfare of discharged prisoners at heart."

We understand that some £150 is yet needed in order to open the enlarged Brooke-street Home free of debt. The address of Mr. G. Hatton, Secretary of the mission, is 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

There is no better way of evangelising London than the multiplication of iron halls of suitable size in poor localities. They are comparatively inexpensive, and can be made attractive and comfortable with no needless adornment to distract the attention of sinners from the Saviour evidently set forth crucified before their eyes. With much sympathy and confidence, therefore, we commend the appeal of Mr. John Bain (of Harley College) for £1000 to purchase a freehold site and build an iron hall among the poor people of Lower Clapton.

The Church Missionary Society, in a circular intended for Warwickshire, states that whereas the children of the county send to the Society, for the conversion of the heathen world, £430 annually, the noblemen and gentry of Warwickshire, who fill the office of county magistrates, give for the same object an annual sum of £20.

A lover of the London Missionary Society, writing to The Nonconformist, criticises the London Missionary Sunday, and concludes by asking: "Is it advantageous for ministers to be travelling many miles after the morning service to fulfil an evening appointment? Is this unnecessary travelling on the Sunday good for the preacher, the Society, or those employed in public conveyances?" To ask such questions is sufficiently to answer them.

"A Countryman from Abroad," as well as several at home, have sent us communications urging the duty of a call to public prayer and humiliation. We fear, however, and it is one of the most ominous signs of the times, that Government, Parliament, and people have ceased to feel the necessity of confession and appeal to the God of heaven and earth in regard to national affairs. Vox populi is supposed to be vox Dei: the people have supplanted God.

Half a century ago we used to hear of "The Coming Man," and during recent years there have been public expressions from other countries of Christendom besides our own of the want of a man to lead and guide the people. A few weeks since, a Tory paper had a poem entitled, "Wanted, a Man;" and a few days later a Radical paper had a note to the same effect. The same want was felt of old, when faith in God was waning. The Lord of hosts took away from Judah the mighty man and man of war, judge and prophet, prudent and ancient, counsellor, artificer and orator, and gave children to be their princes, and babes and women ruled them. But He promised that when He had purged away their dross He would restore her judges and her counsellors. God's answer to the cry for "The Coming Man" is this: "Behold, I have given Him for a Witness to the people, a Leader and Commander to the people."

The World and The Pall Mall Gazette have both happened upon a true omen of the coming sorrows. The former says that the present condition of the Conservative party irresistibly recalls a very brief historical recital from 1 Kings xxii.: "There was then no king in Edom: a deputy was king." The Pall Mall makes a still stronger statement, and says, that in reality there is now no Government in England. Ministers are the mere agents and salaried servants of a vague, impalpable something labelled Public Opinion—that is, the opinion which manages to express itself most loudly by means of bye-elections, newspaper articles, and the resolutions of political meetings, public or private. "This can only end in a catastrophe."

> "We shall not get rid of the discreditable vacillation which paralyses our policy until a Statesman arises who has the common sense to see that the first duty of a Government in relation to public opinion is not to obey it, but to mould it. At present the supreme test of statesmanship with us is ability to forecast the way in which the cat will jump. The weathercock on the steeple might as well pretend to be wielding the sceptre of Æolus."

It is of the deepest interest to those who observe the signs of the times, as foretold in Scripture, to see them thus noted and made public by the secular Press. But the word of inspiration does not leave us wringing our hands over a gloomy present. It points hopefully to the future, and assures us: "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a Man [the Coming Man] shall be . . . . as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

At a recent convention of Baptist elders in New York, Dr. Dorchester is reported to have made the following assertion:—

> "A preacher has to contend with many abnormal growths in the Church; with persons fancying themselves the Church militant, but who are really the Church termagant; with the Church somnolent; with the Church of ineffable rest; with the Church of holy cranks; and with the Church of perpetual tramps, who live on star-preacher diet."

Mr. W. H. Peters, of Harefield, Lympstone, Exeter, writes to us that he has been much interested in Mr. Shuldham Henry's proposal to set M. Sinel free for evangelistic work in France. He will contribute £10 towards the requisite expense, if five or ten other friends will do likewise. We hope Mr. Peters' proposal will be accepted.

At a recent meeting in Chelsea, in connection with the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, Sir Charles Dilke stated that at the end of 1884 there were over 5200 girls under its care, who had been transferred to situations from workhouse schools and elsewhere. Considering the very defective early surroundings of young girls who have had a workhouse training, it is gratifying to know that they are being counselled and cared for in this way. At the same meeting resolutions were adopted affirming the necessity of an increase in the number of lady visitors, the desirability of opening a lodging-house for the accommodation of girls out of place, and the need for increased public support.

In an interesting sketch in The Sunday-school Times of "Joseph Cook in his Study," Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton says that the Bible which he uses daily has six parallel columns, in as many languages. He has no time for frivolous or idle conversation; he is for ever learning, for ever giving out his knowledge.

The clergy of the rural deanery of North Kineton, Warwickshire, in view of the forthcoming races at Stratford-on-Avon, have numerously signed a protest which condemns horse-racing as injurious to morality among all classes, as degrading in its association with gambling, drunkenness, and vice, and which calls upon all wealthy persons to withdraw their countenance and patronage. This is cheering as evidence that ministers of religion are beginning to realise the baleful power of these social customs.

The following passage from Edward Irving's Sermon on the Parable of the Sower will be interesting to many of our readers:—

> "You may depend upon it, therefore, that the laws of all life, vegetable, animal, mental [soulal], and spiritual, are one and the same, though different in degree; and all derived from one and the same sacrifice of our blessed Lord and Saviour, offered from all eternity, without which there would have been no life, but a universal death. And you may rest assured also that the lower is always typical of the higher, and that the knowledge of the higher is best ascended into through the progression of the lower. We ought not to wonder, therefore, that the Holy Spirit continually useth the emblems or symbols derived from vegetable and human life—the sowing of the seed and the harvest, the birth of the child and the full-grown man—to set forth spiritual things withal. And you ought not to say they are finely-chosen similitudes, but they are rightly-appropriated types. And however much our men of taste and sentiment do laugh at the spiritualisings of our fathers, I dare to believe and to say, that to spiritualise nature is rightly to interpret nature; and that the greater part of our Lord's discourses are nothing but divine exercises of this kind; and so of his parables also."

We are requested to state that in Silver Morn for April (S. W. Partridge & Co., 2d.), the Editors will have a paper in justification of the line of teaching which called forth our article on "Judaizing the New Testament" in our issue of March 12.

With fullest confidence, we, for the third time, commend the Rev. Henry Bradford, of Northampton, to the sympathy and help of all Christians who appreciate fidelity to Christ without fear of consequences. A letter from Admiral King Hall in another column explains the circumstances.

Under the title of "Fallen Leaves" (4d.), Miss Macpherson has gathered from the Bible and note-books of Henry Moorhouse a large number of points and illustrations, which will be useful to preachers and teachers, and will interest all those who knew that zealous and much-loved evangelist, so early called from work to rest. Mr. Moody never tires of expressing his indebtedness to the man who astonished the people of Chicago by preaching seven successive evenings from John iii. 16, and from whom in his earlier days of work he learned so much.

Miss Booth gave a deeply-interesting account of another year's stewardship in France and Switzerland, at Exeter Hall, on Monday week, before a crowded and enthusiastic audience. Despite the difficulties that are to be met with in France from widespread infidelity and indifference, and the special difficulties that have resulted in Switzerland from the persecuting action of the authorities, our devoted sister was able to report progress all along the line. She asked for £2000 towards the expenses of the war for the current year, and the greater part of it, we understand, was contributed at the meeting.

Can any reader favour us with an admission letter for an outdoor patient for the Hospital for Diseases of the Skin, Great Marlborough-street, or any other hospital where such ailments are treated?

There are few classes of the community who stand in greater need of kindly and practical endeavour for their spiritual well-being than our soldiers. The absence of any true home life or privilege makes their position one of peculiar peril, and enhances the value of all institutions devoted to their benefit. The Soldiers' Home and Institute in Dublin has for the past ten years done good service among the military contingents that have been stationed there, and their families. The friends of the work are now making a special effort to extend and enlarge its scope. We trust they will be seconded in this excellent enterprise by the generous support of the Christian public. The Hon. Secretary is Capt. R. Wade Thompson, Clonskeagh Castle, co. Dublin.

Rev. Canon Jackson, who has long been known in Leeds as a prominent advocate of education and as a friend of the poor, has offered to accept the pastoral care of the Leeds Workhouse at a nominal stipend of ten shillings a year. He will hold himself responsible for a Sunday service and the pastoral care of the inmates who are members of the Church of England, but with the distinct understanding that, under proper regulations, no hindrance or obstacle shall be placed in the way of other religious bodies. It is pleasant to record such an instance of liberality and catholicity.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

DURING the recent Christmas season the work of this society greatly increased; the Institutes provided for theatrical employés were so largely attended that it has become a necessity to secure larger and more commodious premises. The Committee of the society have secured a vacant plot of ground in Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, on a long lease, and the cost of the proposed new Institute, which will accommodate, if necessary, 900 members of the profession at a time, will be about £4000.

Many young women of the ballet and chorus have been in constant attendance, and nearly 2000 youths and boys have availed themselves of their own club and institute during the past three months. Of these by far the larger number have voluntarily attended evangelistic meetings, while those who were prevented doing so by rehearsals or engagements in the provinces have been followed up by the correspondents of the "Letter Mission," now carried on by over 800 lady workers throughout the country. Many of those out of employment have been kept from starvation, and the many forms of temptation, through the the Employment Fund.

Contributions and all communications should be addressed to Mr. Courthope Todd, Director, 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

MANY letters received from young people have been read by Mr. Hammond, or some of the ministers in the Glasgow meetings. They have deeply interested the audiences. Such letters often touch the hearts of the children, and lead them to wish that they too may become Christians. The following letter has a special interest, which makes it worth reproducing in full:—

FRUIT A HUNDRED-FOLD.

125, Greenhead-street, Glasgow.

DEAR SIR,—The first time you were here, twenty-four years ago, a sister of mine went with her five children to your meetings in Hope-street. She and at least two of the children received Christ the first night. After my sister's triumphant death, two of her daughters started a kitchen-meeting, which was soon crowded. They then took an empty shop in Clydeside, but there too they were soon crowded out. Mr. Linn, the district missionary, heard of the meeting, and invited them to his hall in S. Wellington-street Academy. There the work increased as before. It was then called the "Mill Girls' Association."

At their first soirée there was a large attendance. The account of it spread far and wide; people from different places came to see, one of whom was Dr. Hunter, a young man connected with Dr. Eadie's congregation, Cambridge-street. He was struck with the whole affair, and said to himself, "Can I not do something like this among the boys?" We soon gathered a few boys running about the streets, and as they mostly wrought at, or were connected with, the Phœnix Foundry, he called it the Foundry Boys' Society. This was the beginning, I believe, of the grand and glorious work now well known in Glasgow and elsewhere as the "Foundry Boys' Society." What a wonderful result from a small beginning—namely, the conversion of my sister and her two daughters. The eldest was long one of the matrons of the "Saltcoats' Seaside Home," under the late godly James Smith. She was much blessed in the work in pointing sinners to the Saviour. She is now with Him in glory, and all the family are following her footsteps. Yours, ALEXANDER POLLOCK.

The second week's centre was Lansdowne Free Church, and last week a series of services were held in the Cowcaddens Free Church. On Sunday Mr. Hammond changed his quarters to the Evangelical Hall, James Morrison-street; and, after a week's interval, Bethany Hall, Bridgeton, will be the scene of the evangelist's labours. Subsequently, several districts on the South Side of the river will be visited by Mr. Hammond.

CLAPTON PARK NEW MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—I write to tell you our Mission of Mercy among the lapsed of Lower Clapton is in rather a critical position at present. You will recollect that we began it two years ago, and now there are about 400 adherents and 230 members around the Lord's table; also 318 children in the Sunday-school, 38 teachers, 27 tract distributors, over 300 Band of Hope children, over 250 Temperance adults, three prayer meetings weekly, besides lectures and helps by the way in the form of Bible-readings, &c. This work of God in our hands has thus prospered, many precious souls being won to Jesus. And since this fear has come there has been quite an upward tendency all along the line of the fifteen departments into which the work has naturally divided itself, so that our outlook morally, and spiritually, is blessed, clear, and bright.

But our outlook as regards promises is very dim and cloudy. The place where my poor people have gathered hitherto is to be taken away from us in July. A Christian gentleman promises to sell us a freehold site for £560, that is about £400 below what he expected for it. A substantial iron building, capable of seating about 900 people, could be erected for about £1000 before June has passed. We owe nothing. During our two years of labour in the present building we paid all that was necessary as tenants of the place, and now as we look forward, and have only three months to pass over the line, we tremble. Do kindly aid us in our blessed struggle to attain our place and ground free of debt before June.—Yours in the Loving Master,

JOHN BAIN.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.

THE annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this Mission was held on the 17th inst. a Myddelton Hall, Islington. The chair was taken by Mr. Henry Spicer, who was supported by several ministers and other gentlemen.

The report prepared by Mr. D. Cooksey, the hon. sec., showed a large amount of useful work done during the year. The Sunday services were encouragingly attended. At the Tuesday week-night service 200 sometimes attend, coming, in many instances, direct from their labour. There were open-air services during the fine weather, and special services conducted by the Evangelisation Society, when the hall was quite full, and the Temperance cause much benefitted. A meeting of a remarkable character, consisting of thieves, drunkards, and taproom frequenters, to the number of 400; a midnight mission, which drew together some 250 unfortunates; soup meals for the boardmen at the Cattle Show; free breakfasts during the winter to footsore wanderers, were also among the records of works accomplished.

In a locality, where, in the immediate neighbourhood, poverty deepens and grows, by the influx of a population, from destroyed rookeries, where once respectable dwellings are fast sinking into squalid tenements let out to the poor, and where groups of youths, when the policeman's back is turned, may be seen gambling like the Jack Idle of Hogarth's prints of the last century, it is difficult to imagine instrumentalities better adapted to give a helping hand to a man struggling in the morass of poverty than those at work in this Mission, the variety of which indeed astonished some of the speakers on the platform, who compared them to bees issuing from some industrious hive.

With the various facts mentioned in the report before them the Chairman and speakers could only thank God for the blessing bestowed on the Mission, and express their renewed confidence in it. Mr. Lewis, the honorary treasurer, showed that the large operations detailed had been conducted on an annual expenditure of £393, a small sum surely for so extensive a work, and that, instead of running into debt, there was a balance in his favour of £16 12s. 1d. An earnest appeal was made, however, by the Committee for funds to enlarge the building, the want of further accommodation being especially felt in the Sunday-school rooms, which are unhealthy from overcrowding, the present limited accommodation also necessitating the turning away of many children who run about the streets. The sum of £800 is required for this purpose, and subscriptions will be thankfully received by Mr. George Fuller, the Superintendent, addressed, Sermon-lane Mission, Liverpool-road, N.

A WAKEFUL NIGHT.

BY MRS. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

"I hate vain thoughts; but thy law do I love."

STILL me, O Lord, and keep me still;
Drive back these thoughts that come at will,
Rushing like horsemen through the mind,
Destruction in their track behind.

Their work is famine, death, and fire,
Insatiate fiends that never tire;
They blight my peace, they smite my joy,
And every prayerful wish destroy.

I cannot seek my Saviour's face,
Or claim the refuge of his grace,
But everywhere these imps arise,
And, taunting, stand before mine eyes.

Help, Lord! like demons cast them out;
This vexing rabble put to rout:
I hate vain thoughts; thy law I love;
My pleasure is with Thee above.

Alas! this sinful flesh how weak!
This will, for conflict, shameful meek;
How easy Satan lures his prey,
How desperate to break away.

Lord, Thou hast strength; oh, plead for me;
Match Thou my foe, my David be;
Then nurse thy child to kindly rest
On some attending angel's breast.

GIFFORD HALL MISSION.

VERY interesting anniversary services have been held in connection with this Mission, situated in Gifford-street, Caledonian-road, Islington. On Thursday last, at the annual tea, and meeting Mr. W. T. Paton presided, and, together with the following gentlemen, addressed the meeting (there being about 400 present), Rev. Dr. Bevan, Messrs. D. T. Legg (Religious Tract Society), H. W. Wilkins, J. J. Corbin, B. Hitjer, B. Clarke, and H. W. W. Whittenbury.

It would take more than one number of THE CHRISTIAN to chronicle one-half of the work done in this part of the Master's vineyard during the past year. Some idea of the good work done, however, may be obtained by a perusal of the following jottings we made during the reading of the report by the secretary, Mr. H. Forbes Clarke. Sunday-school: average attendance, morning—teachers 24, scholars 330; afternoon—teachers 40, scholars 680. Sent to Aylesbury for fresh air, 58 sickly children; 108 scholars pledged themselves to read a portion of the Bible daily; mothers' meetings held weekly, average attendance 85; coal, clothing and boot clubs with 65 members; nearly 50 blankets lent to the poor; about 1000 penny dinners per week supplied; 100 quarts of beef soup distributed every Friday during the cold weather; 60 open-air services; 500 families visited; twenty-one deathbeds attended; work for the unemployed found, admission to hospitals secured, relief and comfort for the sick administered, rooms for aged poor provided, 200 Christmas dinners distributed; goose club, with 47 members; penny bank, with 1044 depositors; women's week evening class, 30 members; mission church, 167 members; children's separate service morning and evening; senior Band of Hope, 31 members; junior Band of Hope, 110 members; cast-off garments distributed to the ragged and half-naked, free breakfasts to the hungry, entertainments and play-rooms to cheer the dull, 92 pairs of boots given to the shoeless. In addition to all this work and very much more that has been done by the Committee, officers, and teachers at a cost of less than £200, the children of the Sunday-school poor, as they are, collected £3 10s. towards a treat for 140 infants and 300 boys and girls who do not attend any Sunday-school.

Help towards this deserving Mission will be thankfully received by the Superintendent, Mr. Benjamin Clarke, Editor Sunday School Chronicle, Hampden House, Crouch-end.

EAST END POOR.—SIR,—For many weeks past we have been giving upwards of 1500 free meals to the destitute and unemployed, in the Gospel Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar. After the meals Gospel addresses have been given. We are daily meeting with applicants who are without food and firing. I should feel pleased to send our paper, Light and Dark, to any of your readers on application.

ROMAN CATHOLIC TACTICS.

DEAR SIR,—I read the article, headed as above, in your issue of Feb. 26, with painful in- rest, and yet I have wished that attention might ore often be called to the progress of Romanism rural districts. Experience has, no doubt, ught them how accessible are the simple untry folk, and the deep hold religion has on many of them. Therefore it is that these tholic missions are springing up in most un- pected quarters, frequently fostered by some rdly or otherwise wealthy pervert, and the iest attached has, I believe, in many cases eviously been an English clergyman.

Whether by design or otherwise I know not, t in various ways the poor people in town and untry have for some years past become familiar- ed with Romish ideas. In nearly all cottage omes are to be seen the prints of St. Joseph, e blessed Virgin and Child, &c. The Cross, o, has long been a favourite ornament, seen erywhere; these, with ritualistic books, are ietly but effectually doing their work. My nsophisticated village friends, seeing them con- cted with religion, readily welcome them, and ver suspect any evil, and when I have some- nes turned the faces of these pictures to the all, they have been almost shocked, and looked r an explanation, which they quickly got, with better picture substituted for the Romish one.

Now what is to prevent this Catholic propa- nda becoming what it threatens? assuredly thing now in force. I believe it is not gener- ly known or realized that evangelical teaching rapidly on the wane in country towns and llages. A few aged, God-fearing men of the harles Simeon school are uttering their con- nual heartfelt protests; one in a village near where I am writing, a clergyman over seventy, his sermon a few Sundays back, gave a very ithful warning, and expressed his readiness if were called upon to go to the stake in defence the truth he had so long maintained. But of hat avail are a few solitary voices; when the ajority of our clergymen, and especially the ung men, are pronounced Ritualists, aided by eir satellites, who play the part of John the ptist to Romanism? In the parish just referred lives one, and he the village schoolmaster, who es all in his power to pull down during the eek what his evangelical clergyman has tried build up on Sundays, and who, I hear, is eatly irritated with what he has lately seen ing on at the adjoining chapel, and all the sult of what he considers our heretical aching.

These Ritualists with their clergy (many of em quite young) influence the squire and his mily, and together they resist to the utmost e approach of simple Gospel truth, and do eir best to stamp it out wherever it has gained footing, so that whatever measure of truth ere once might be in the saying that the urch of England was the bulwark of Protes- ntism, in very many cases it is not so now.

Many may perhaps ask, but what of Dissent these places? Nothwithstanding the great crease in the number of chapels and mission lls, Dissent is not so strong as it used to be. The ultiplying of chapels in villages whence the habitants are migrating so rapidly to large ntres of industry is doing very great injury to issent and is a grave mistake. In villages where ere never can be more than one really good ngregation there are often to be found two d occasionally three or even more, each, it ould seem, feeling there is some great lack hich they as a denomination can alone supply. that a good congregation cannot long exist ywhere before a new place springs up suddenly d almost under the shadow of the older one. sad breach is at once made among these pre- ously united brethren, and henceforth more or less valry and often bitter opposition prevail. The sult of this kind of thing is damage to all. In ss than a generation Dissent has lost its hold pon many of the families of our good old- shioned yeomanry, which was once the backbone the Nonconformist churches. Where, now, n be found this class of people in our village chapels, as in former days? Where seen, as then, the numerous vehicles wending their way to the sanctuary? Where the gathering of families from a distance in the chapel grounds, with the accustomed warm weekly greetings which made the Sabbath a delight to many? And I may add, where is the plain and simple, but godly and often well-educated, pastor, moving about among his beloved flock, a man of influence in the neighbourhood, whom so many loved and respected? To-day their fine old chapels either have to be reduced in size or may be seen nearly empty.

The minister's place, too, is now supplied very often in the same way as the many lesser places that have cropped up of late years in their vicinity. During the week most of these places are left to the care of someone living near, but whose influence for good is, to say the least, next to nil. And on Lord's day they are usually supplied with such local help as can be obtained. Brethren who toil hard all the week are ever ready to walk twenty miles if need be, and many often do more without fee or reward, except love for souls. I have not the least desire to depreciate the work of these good brethren, many of whom I count amongst my dearest and most loved and valued friends; the services of such men have ever been, and still will be, very valuable to a certain extent, but many of them are imperfectly taught in the Scriptures, and for lack of this and a better oversight, dissensions and annoyances are of very frequent occurrence, which make these places very unattractive, especially to the young people of the few well-to-do families left, who, if not converted, generally embrace the earliest opportunity of going off to church, and very soon become High Church, as they delight to call themselves, although cradled in Dissent.

The little chapel their parents helped to build and sustain is left in a forlorn condition, and there are many such miserable exhibitions of weakness, made so by the above causes. These are facts known to many besides myself, and all this leaves my poor village friends in a very helpless condition, and an easy prey to the ritualistic curate or more astute Romish priest.

In a future communication I hope to be permitted to make a few suggestions by way of meeting this threatened Romish inroad.

MISSIONS TO THE KABYLES.—Mr. E. H. Glenny, of Barking, Hon. Secretary of this Mission, has lately visited Bath, Bristol, Portishead, Clevedon, Bridgwater, and Weston-super-Mare, giving details of the work, and arousing an interest in the condition of these interesting North African tribes.

ADDRESSES TO MEN IN LIVERPOOL.—A course of lectures to men only is being delivered on Sunday afternoons, on important subjects, in St. Silas's Church, Pembroke-place, Liverpool, of which Rev. Dr. Harrison is the incumbent. Between 500 and 600 men attend these special meetings. The subjects are such as are likely to attract men. The first address was given by Archdeacon Bardsley, on "Some Causes of Modern Unbelief;" then followed, "Why Infidelity Prevents me Becoming an Infidel?" by Rev. Canon Lefroy. "The New Time," by Rev. R. H. Hammond. "The Child Lost and Found," by Rev. Canon Major Lester. Two others followed, on "Manliness," by Rev. Richard Hobson; and "Keeping Company," by Rev. J. H. Honeyburne. There can be but little doubt that blessed results will follow.

EVANGELISATION IN SUBURBAN PARIS.—Pastor H. Perrenond, 105, Rue de Flanders, Paris, writes with reference to this subject: "I have laboured for nearly eight years at Belleville, for the evangelisation of youth, in Paris. The Mission of Belleville was commenced in 1872, and is directed by a Committee composed of Christians belonging to the Reformed Church in Paris. After thirteen years of work we have succeeded in gathering together 400 children, both Protestant and Catholic, in our six week-day schools. We have opened three Sunday-schools at La Villette, Charonne, and Belleville. Two Christian Unions, one for young girls and one for young men, are most prosperous. The Committee propose to send a delegate to England and Scotland in the second week in April to plead on behalf of this good work.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

HOBART, TASMANIA.—Mr. and Mrs. J. Mountain have held evangelistic services here, which have been well attended and have created a deep impression.

IPSWICH.—A mission here, conducted by Mr William Sampson, is being wonderfully blessed of God to the sanctification of believers and the salvation of precious souls.

ELGIN, N.B.—An excellent series of meetings is being conducted here under the auspices of the Evangelistic Association. The attendance is slowly increasing, which is an evidence of growing interest.

BERWICKSHIRE.—Evangelistic meetings have lately been held in a number of Berwickshire towns and villages. Mr. D. Wallace, evangelist, has been prosecuting his labours, and souls have been won.

MR. JOHN HARRIS has held a two weeks' mission at Copford. Many who have been blessed through his former visits are now and have been for years rejoicing Christians. Others are inquiring the way. The Christians have also been stirred up.

ST. AGNES, CORNWALL.—The churches at St. Agnes have of late been much blessed, through the labours of Messrs. Hurditch and Spurr. The visit was a short one, but long enough to make a deep impression on the minds of the people.

CAMBERWELL.—The Old Mansion House Chapel, Camberwell-road, was on Thursday last the scene of the gathering together of about 400, of all ages, to a free tea. Addresses were given by Rev. S. H. Akehurst, Mr. A. J. Pardoe, Mr. Walker, and Mr. G. W. Linnecar.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Thomas Eyres has conducted a fortnight's mission at the Union Presbyterian Church, Kirkdale. Rev. A. Bannerman, Barkway, writes: "There can be no doubt that many children have given their hearts to Jesus, while others have been made anxious after the way of peace."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Three weeks' services among the young in Pembroke Dock, by Messrs. Spiers and Westall, have been brought to a close. Many of the children have, we truly believe, been brought to the Saviour. Our earnest prayer ist hat God will give this work a solid foundation in our midst, that it may be a permanent branch of Christian work in the town. D. S. R.

SLOUGH.—On March 17 Mr. C. King gave a rousing address, entitled, "The Danger Signal," to the lads and young men of Slough. A tea was provided for those connected with the Lads' Christian Association, and in the Iron Chapel there was a full and attentive audience, composed almost entirely of youths of the working class. At the close of the meeting two of the young men professed to have given their hearts to Jesus.

BROOKLYN, U.S.—A series of Gospel services have been held at Dr. Pentecost's Church, in which the pastor has been assisted by Mr. Sankey, Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, and Mr. George Soltau. Much good has been done. These meetings were followed up by a similar effort at Dr. Cuyler's Church, where Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Sankey also assisted. Our readers will be glad to know that those well-known and much-esteemed friends are busy in the Master's service.

WITHERSLACK, WESTMORELAND.—A nine days' mission has been held in this very wild and scattered parish, the result of which has been most encouraging. The church is situated a great distance from many of the people, but this did not prevent it from being filled every night. Many walked three and four miles night after night to the services, and the lateness of the hour did not keep them from remaining for the after-meetings, which were well attended. Rev. Dr. Morris conducted the mission. His addresses were very powerful, yet simplicity itself, and many souls brought out under him. It was a glorious time, perhaps the greatest blessing the parish has ever had. G.

MR. HENRY THORNE IN SUNDERLAND.—From March 7 to 18, Mr. Henry Thorne paid a visit to Sunderland, and held most successful Gospel Meetings under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. There were numerous inquirers dealt with in the inquiry room at the close of every meeting, and it is believed that no service was held which was not blessed to the conversion of souls. It is hoped that over 200 persons will be added to the different churches in the town as the immediate result of the mission, and there can be no doubt that many others have been impressed and benefited. The clergy and ministers of the town cordially co-operated in the work by announcing the mission, and personal attendance and effort when that was possible.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to sound an alarm through your pages about certain "wolves in sheep's clothing" who attend Bible-classes, mission services, &c., for the purpose of decoying youths for immoral purposes. I have now before me several very sad cases of men, who have taken an active part in religious services, committing crimes that are simply indescribable. We are without doubt living in the perilous times spoken of in 2 Timothy iii. Let those who are lovers of moral purity be on the look out. Let our boys and youths, gathered together in classes, hear words of wisdom and warning from their teachers. I scarcely ever speak at a Purity Meeting without some young fellow saying, with tears in his eyes, "Would to God I had known these things a few years ago."

I shall be glad to communicate with any teachers or others seeking advice on this subject.

Faithfully yours, James B. Wookey.

OPENINGS IN TASMANIA.

Dear Sir,—There is a fair field for Christian work in all its branches throughout this Island, but there is one particularly which might be filled profitably and agreeably by some gentleman who has time and money at his disposal, and to whom a sea voyage and good climate might recommend itself for health. There are many places throughout the island, both townships and solitary dwellings, which are hungering for the Bread of Life, and no man gives to them. Many places are never visited by ministers of any denomination, and children grow up without religious instruction of any kind. Such places would gladly welcome a visitor who would give them that of which they stand so much in need. When I tell you that there is no bookshop in the colony, except in the two northern and southern towns, 120 miles apart, you will see what a field offers itself for colportage.

One colporteur has lately been started by the Bible Society, but there is work for many such men, and if any gentleman could be found to come out at his own charges, buy a horse, or a horse and cart, and travel through the country, he would find an interesting and great spiritual work to be done, which, with the sale of books and periodicals, could also be made most remunerative.

Any further detailed information on the subject I shall be happy to afford. if applied to.

Yours, &c.,
Hon. Sec., Ladies' Christian Association.

GERMAN COLONIES.

Sir,—Although political topics are rightly excluded from the pages of The Christian, there are some public movements which deserve notice, as bearing directly on the interests of the Kingdom of Christ. One of these is the recently-developed activity of Germany in founding foreign colonies. Every right-minded man must rejoice in this movement. The unfortunate Cameroons affair caused some irritation, but this was due to a passing misunderstanding, in a disputed territory. In other regions, in South Africa, in New Guinea, in the Pacific, the establishment of German colonies will give encouragement and support to the cause of Christian missions.

It is exactly the opposite wherever French colonisation extends—witness Madagascar, Tahiti, and other islands, where missionaries are subject to annoyance and persecution. A simple explanation of this treatment is given by Mr. Shaw in his most interesting volume, published by the Religious Tract Society, "Madagascar and France." Mr. Shaw says: "The French think that every English missionary must necessarily be a political agent, labouring not only for the extension of Christ's Kingdom, but also for the aggrandisement of England. They think this because France has been willing to use Jesuit priests for political purposes in various parts of the world. To be an Englishman or a Protestant is sufficient to condemn a man to the French officials."

Mr. Gladstone, speaking in the name of the British Government, has disclaimed all jealousy of German colonising; and, on far higher than any commercial or political ground, every Christian should wish German colonies throughout the world to increase and prosper.

THE GORDON MEMORIAL.

Sir,—In common with many of your readers, I have seen in the morning papers an account of the meeting of the Committee of the fund for the provision of a National Memorial to General Gordon, which was held at the Mansion House on Saturday week.

The movement, no doubt, is one which commends itself to the sympathy of the nation; it is to provide a memorial for one who was not only a hero, but a Christian and a Protestant. Why, for such a purpose, the name of Cardinal Manning should take precedence in the List of the Committee next after the Royal Family, and before the Lord Chancellor and many peers, it would be difficult to give a satisfactory reason. Why should not the Moderator of the Church of Scotland have occupied that place of honour? Surely the representative of the Church established by law in the sister kingdom of Protestant Scotland had a better right to the position than the representative of a foreign and idolatrous communion, which many years ago excommunicated the Sovereign of this nation, and has never withdrawn or disavowed the act. They did drag in the Moderator nearly at the close of a list of additional members on Saturday, and with that, of course, we are expected to "rest and be thankful."

It is equally significant that when a Sub-Committee was moved to carry out the proposed object, the Marquis of Ripon was the first person named after the Chairman. This Sub-Committee will virtually supersede the General Committee, and will in effect have the whole management of the matter.

I think that it will be well for those who have no desire to see the proposed Hospital filled with Romish Sisters of Charity, and become a mere arena for proselytising, to obtain some assurance, before subscribing to the fund, that their wishes may be faithfully carried out. By all means let us have a monument to the lamented hero, but let us take care that the means supplied for erecting it are not perverted to the furthering of the ends of the ever-watchful Church of Rome.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Vigilans.

THE USE OF MONEY.

Sir,—I must take exception to the morbid utterances of John Wesley and others, as given on page 12 of The Christian for March 12, where, because at the moment when a girl begs of him he had not money in his purse, he therefore comes to the conclusion that the Master would reject him on account of the pictures on his walls. True, if living beyond his income, which no Christian man would think of doing. Surely God intends that others as well as the very poor should live. Mention is made of the price paid for one of God's most beautiful works, that of a "rare orchid without spot or blemish," a work upon which no one can look without being elevated. A man who educates himself in botany circulates his money among tradesmen; the carpenter, to build his hot-house, the manufacturer of glass to supply his light, the ironmonger to send in his stove, the miner to supply his coals, a gardener with men under him again at a weekly wage, whereby they provide honestly for their wives and children. Such a man is surely doing more good with his money than the one who doles out a few shillings to men or women, thus creating paupers for the hardworking afterward to support in our unions.

The artists of the "modern pictures," and the worker in "jade carvings" have surely for their skilful and laborious work a right to live. They have received their ability to do these works as a direct gift from God, quite as much so as Hiram, the widow's son, who was filled with wisdom and understanding, and cunning to work all works in brass, and such work of such value that pious people would have held up their hands in horror at Solomon himself for purchasing. God, however, would not deprive any man of the results due to honest work, "for it is He that giveth the power to get wealth." See Ex. xxxv. 30—35. A right-minded person, looking round the mansion of a good and rich man, could not but rejoice, as he felt the good which had been done to others in his being possessed of orchids, pictures and costly ornaments, and would feel that here is one using his talents aright, and one upon whom the Master smiles. I may say that I have no "orchids," no "costly pictures," and no "jade carvings" myself, nor have I the means to buy them, but I rejoice that there are wealthy men able and willing to part with their means for such things and thus assist others to provide things honest in the sight of all men.—Yours, &c., T. H. N.

"PREACH THE WORD."

Dear Sir,—Having lately looked into th Hand-book for Bible-classes—Genesis—by Rev Dr. Marcus Dods, I am grieved by its tone—th evident desire, where it could be supposed possible to get rid of the supernatural, and a flippanc which can hardly be felt consistent with dee reverence for a fully-inspired Bible. On page 7 Dr. Dods, on chapter xvii. 17, says: "He desire to believe, yet his mind turned to the great natura improbability, and even drollery of the event predicted;" and further on says that "the name Isaa would at all times remind Abraham of the eve ludicrously unlikely means by which this child wa brought into the world."

Such expressions make us shrink, and feel tha we do not know what will come next. Though w are not at present hearing much of the Robertso Smith theology, its effects remain, and will continu to work, unless a great outpouring of the Hol Ghost shall lead men to feel that for their immorta souls something more deep and real is needed tha a mangled, half-inspired Bible.

We seem to have greatly lost the belief tha God's Word, applied by his Spirit, is the grea means of conversion (if that is felt necessary), an at our evangelistic meetings we have little Scriptur and plenty of men's words. Many who remembe better days in Scotland mourn over the craving fo mere intellectual preaching (which puffs up bot preachers and hearers), and the mere shadowy lin which now divides the Church and the world. for a return to Apostolic preaching and life! ther again, would "great fear come upon all th Church," and believers would be daily added to th Lord. EMIGRATION.

Sir,—Great Britain needs some outlet for he superabundant and migratory population. Emigration is one means that can be used successfull The question is how to promote it, in order to assi those willing and able to work; and experienc shows that money so expended is the best and mos permanent way of helping the poor.

I have lately visited each of the offices of th Agents-General of our Colonies. The result that with the exception of New South Wale Canada, and Queensland, none are offerin "assisted" passages. Practically the Colonies ar excluding "direct" emigration and substitutin nomination, by those residing in the Colonies, relatives and friends in Great Britain. This is serious drawback, and calls for Imperial "State aided and Directed" Emigration, and the reviva of the Emigration Department in our Colonia office.

Victoria gives no assistance. Steam there i forty-five days; steerage, £16. Land order granted. Western Australia: only occasiona assistance; apply Messrs. Bethel, 110, Fenchurch street, E.C. I found New South Wales (5, Westminster-chambers, Victoria-street, Westminste Abbey, S.W.) is requiring only £6 each coupl under 40; unmarried men, under 30, £4; ditt women, £2; children 3 to 14, £2; under 3, free also ship's kit given. Nomination orders stoppe Colony very prosperous; a splendid chance whic many ought to embrace. Tasmania: all gran are entirely stopped. Queensland (1, Westminste chambers). Domestics, £1; a few unmarried far labourers and others, £8, ship's kit included. Sout Australia has on her list 600 nominations, so tha for this year no others can be helped. New Zealan (7, Westminster-chambers, S.W.) is sending out fe beyond wives and families to join the husband Domestics free; also some selected farm labourers The Cape of Good Hope and Natal: all assistanc has ceased.

Canada (9, Victoria-chambers, S.W.). Agricul turists and unmarried women, £3. From Liverpo to Quebec, under 12, £2; infants, 10s.; hire ship's kit, 3s. 6d. London to Liverpool, 12s. 6d About £2 8s. from Quebec to Winnipeg; also rate 10s. to 25s. to Ontario. Free land grants of 16 acres in Manitoba, requiring £60 to £120 for tilling

I feel in the face of these verified statements tha New South Wales, Canada, Queensland, and th United States will, this year, be principally benefited by British emigration. "Hints to Emigrants, will be forwarded free to each applicant sending stamped and directed envelope. All who wish t emigrate must write direct to the Agent for th Colony they desire to proceed to.

We are daily asked to assist our good-charactere applicants. We should be very glad to receive an donations to aid these poor people to where food i cheap and work is to be had.—Yours obediently,

A. Styleman Herring,
Vicar of St. Paul's, Clerkenwell.

CASTE IN THE EVANGELICAL WORLD.

SIR,—It was with considerable surprise that I ead the paragraph contained in The Rock of March 6, nd to which you drew attention the following eek in your remarks on a pamphlet entitled Caste in the Evangelical World." Will you allow e very cordially to endorse what you say on the ubject? Surely there can be no question that the eligion of the New Testament inculcates perpetual arfare against all that is evil in Society, not a ame submitting to those rules of Society, which in heir very essence are opposed to its Divine eaching.

I have procured the pamphlet in question, and if e indictment which its unknown author brings gainst some of our great religious organisations be ue, it is high time the work of reform were begun. ut be that as it may, there is much the individual hristian can do to discourage this "odious spirit f caste" in religious work, and to testify by his fe and conversation that the New Testament ideal f a Christian brotherhood is no more an impossiility in this nineteenth century than it was in the arly days of the Church's history.

I cannot but thank you again for your protest gainst setting up expediency as a shelter for "beetting faults," and enclosing my card, I am, Sir, ours very truly, S. E. S.

New Wandsworth, S.W.

SIR,—Having read the pamphlet, "Caste in the vangelical World" with great interest, albeit the terest of an outsider, I must confess I was agreely surprised at the tone of your brief comments n the matter. The author appeared to me to have uch a complete case, and to have proved it so comtely, that I was rather curious to see how the ing would be met by those most concerned in eeting it; and certainly, as you most truly show, no better answer than that of The Rock be forthming, then, indeed, is this a case in which silence golden.

Doubtless you, Sir, believe that an answer can be iven to the grave indictment that the writer of is brochure has preferred, differing from those ho, like myself, not only agree with, but go much rther than he does—go farther, and draw this eduction from the proposition which he has stated— z., that the harmonising of the high precepts of hristianity with the realities of life becomes every y a more Utopian vision.

The shams and hypocrisies have flourished, are ourishing, and will continue to flourish, and the fty ideality of the New Testament will be unable destroy them. Therefore it is that the Christian Exeter Hall is, in good faith, unable to extricate mself from the thraldrom of cant and caste. If is grave question had always been treated as irly as you, Sir, seem inclined to treat it, perhaps many would not now have to sign themselves as do, AN AGNOSTIC.

[Pessimistic Agnosticism is indeed a very poor ing. Our correspondent says, "Shams have ourished and will continue." Christianity says, A king shall reign in righteousness. The saints all possess the kingdom." It knows that the spensation of the fulness of times, when God will ther together all things in Christ, is no Utopian sion.—ED.]

HE REV. H. BRADFORD, NORTHAMPTON.

SIR,—I shall deem it a great favour if you would ford your sympathy and aid in bringing before our readers the claims of the Rev. Mr. Bradford, Northampton, formerly Baptist Minister, of rince's-street Chapel. In consequence of his ving preached a faithful sermon last May, from e words, "Who is on the Lord's side?" his conregation, by a majority of seventeen, removed him om his charge. The noble stand he made against fidelity won my admiration and respect. I sured him that as he had honoured God, the omise would be fulfilled, God would honour him; stick to his post, and my services would be at s disposal.

The minority of his flock gave him their support, d members of the Christian denominations in the wn, by the signatures of their representatives in published circular, testified to his fidelity and high proval of his testimony.

£1400 has been raised since May last. £950 has cured the site. £350 is in hand; expected to each £500 by the end of May next. A special fort is now put forth to raise another £500 by that te, so that when £1000 is in hand the building ay be commenced.

Having given, a few days since, £20 to start the nd, if twenty-four others will each collect the me amount on or before the end of May, on the t of June the building may be commenced. The ev. Dr. Wilkinson, vicar of Christ Church, Leamington, Thomas Dale, Esq., J.P., Warwick, and another gentleman who gives anonymously, approving my proposal, have given the same amount.

The "Union Church" has for its members "all who love Christ, and confess Him before the world." Some of my friends decline to help me in this cause, because Mr. Bradford is not a member of the Church of England, to which I belong. I know no more noble example than a minister, for conscience and his Master's sake, with a wife and six children to support, unhesitatingly declaring the Truth without fear of results.

"Who is on the Lord's side?" were the words which caused him trouble and anxiety. May all your readers with their prayers, and who are on the Lord's side, see that the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.

EVANGELISTIC HALLS.

SIR,—While rejoicing in the permanent memorials of the Evangelistic Mission of 1884 which are springing up in the various localities visited by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, yet it is not well to overlook the readiness with which men and women of the non-church and chapel-going class will enter temporary buildings, or secular halls, where the Gospel is being preached. Most ministers and officers of churches will, I think, agree in the fact that frequently the best work done by the churches on evangelistic lines is when they are occupying some building of a temporary character. Therefore I would respectfully suggest to those who have the means or the control of funds for evangelistic work, whether a greater result might not be attained if, instead of the permanent building, an iron hall were provided capable of seating 500 to 1000 persons, according to the requirements of a district, with an adequate amount invested to cover the cost of moving, &c., this hall being erected for a given time in a neighbourhood, or at one part of a large parish, and then, when the work appeared to flag, moving it to another site, and again to a third, and so forth; then, after an interval longer or shorter, as judgment should dictate, back again, if possible, to the old sites. In each case a directly aggressive work should be carried on, every effort being made, by visiting public-houses, house-to-house visitation, &c., to "compel them to come in." Such an effort must, in the hands of men and women full of love to Christ and perishing souls, be a very powerful means for good, and under God's blessing bring hundreds of men and women within the sound of the Gospel, and eventually into the Church militant as well as the Church triumphant.

WM. R. SELWOOD.

COMMERCE.

DEAR SIR,—Is the letter of "X. Y. Z.," in your last week's issue, all that can be said in reply to the paper on Commerce? Can he really claim a divine sanction for trade on the ground of our Lord's parable, Matt. xxv. 14—30, and Luke xix. 12—26? Surely no one will contend that He meant us to adopt as models of conduct the characters introduced into his parables for the sake of illustration, else must the dishonest steward, in Luke xvi. 1—13, be accepted as a pattern for imitation in our worldly dealings, and the unjust judge, in Luke xviii. 1—8, as an example of judicial uprightness. In the first of these parables our Lord is inculcating a lesson of faithfulness, in the latter He is urging to importunity in prayer; and his use of these very earthly-minded examples is not in the remotest degree an encouragement to similar worldly-mindedness.

No more is the example quoted by "X. Y. Z." designed for our imitation. If it were, this inevitable consequence must be accepted, that the closest-fisted and most successful usurer is to be the pattern in earthly commerce, rather than the man who is content with moderate gains.

As regards "God's providential arrangements" is there not here also some confusion? Men in one generation pursue certain lines of conduct or worldly policy, and we inherit the results, and quietly assume that the state of things amidst which we find ourselves form part of the plans and purposes of the Most High. How often have we heard such language in reference to England's possession of India; that God in his providence has placed it in our hands to carry out his purpose? Has, indeed, God given us India? Nay, rather has not Mammon, the money-getting spirit? has not Moloch, the blood-spilling fiend, obtained for us India? Let us look at these things in the light of the sanctuary, and some of our deeply-rooted notions must be overturned.—Yours truly, A. B. C.

WAR AND POLYGAMY.

DEAR SIR,—I should like to ask why professing Christians are allowed to ignore the teaching of our Lord and his Apostles, with regard to war, and at the same time condemn polygamy? It seems to me that both are directly forbidden under the new dispensation, and I never met with anyone who defended war from the New Testament. Now, if they go back to the Old Testament times to justify war, let them be consistent and allow that polygamy may be tolerated also. If "the earthly life of Jesus was the Sermon on the Mount put into practice," did He not intend that his children should follow in his steps? A fighting Christian is to me altogether an anomaly, and whilst military heroes are held up as "Tip-top Christians," no wonder that so many are rejecting Christ. From some of your remarks I gather that you do not personally admit that war is right, but I wish you would speak as strongly against that as polygamy. There is abundance of religious talk in the present day, but the world wants to see it put into practice.—Yours truly,

Tunbridge Wells. E. WOOD.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE thirty-second annual meeting of this Mission was held in Exeter Hall on March 18. Extracts from the report were read by the secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham. The "summary of operations" may be briefly stated. Members of the Mission, 905, an increase of 98 in the year. Races, fairs, regattas, shows, reviews, and other special gatherings visited, 462, an increase of 147. Tracts, cards, and books distributed, 1,016,187, an increase of 72,675. Towns and villages reached in the United Kingdom, 558, an increase of 53. Income, £1571 12s. 4d. Expenditure, £1515 3s. 10d. Balance in hand, £56 8s. 6d. As showing the direct blessing which comes of open-air preaching, it was stated that of 214 members who had reported, 85 had mentioned conversions, which in the aggegate amounted to 318.

Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard (chairman), congratulated the meeting that open-air preaching was in the ascendant; a far larger measure of support, however, was still needed, and the membership should be increased. Bishop Perry, having tendered some good advic to the preachers which his lengthened experience enabled him to give, Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser described the difficulties and characteristics of the open-air preacher. There was nothing to distinguish him from the people among whom he moved, and hence the power he had over them depended upon the strength and clearness of his message. His great theme should be human sin, human misery, and the way of salvation. No one knew how much great cities owed to the open-air preacher and the city missionary for keeping back the tide of iniquity. Open-air preaching had been called random preaching, but was not all preaching random preaching, in the sense that it needed a Divine power to make it effective?

Mr. John MacGregor, hon. secretary, dwelt in tender reminiscence on its early days. Quoting from Acts iv., and other passages, he described the characteristics of the early open-air preachers. They might seem unlearned and ignorant, but the people soon took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. He rejoiced in the fact that the members of this Mission, though possessed of such different temperaments, had yet always manifested such unity of the Spirit. Rev. A. R. Cavalier (Church Missionary Society) recently returned from Tinnivelly, cheered the meeting by recounting the success of the Gospel in that land, where large accessions had been made from among the heathen, and numerous devil temples had been turned into Christian churches.

A few words followed from the Venerable Archdeacon Cooper, of Kendal, and Captain Charleton, and then Bishop Perry closed the proceedings with the Benediction.

EAST END DISTRESS.—Lady Dent, 20, Thurloe-square, S.W., desires to thank the many kind donors who have sent anonymous gifts, varying from 1s. to £5, in answer to the appeal in our issue of the 12th inst. for the East-end poor. Her ladyship is still receiving contributions.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

WESTERN COUNTIES.

MR. HIND SMITH, in his capacity of Travelling and Organising Secretary, has lately visited Weston-super-Mare, Bridgwater, Sidmouth, Torquay, Exeter, Clevedon, and Bristol. In each of these places he was able, in conference with the local brethren, to awaken a fresh interest in the work.

GRACECHURCH-STREET BRANCH.

This Association has taken up mission work in the east and south-east districts, and on Friday, 13th inst., inaugurated a weekly mission service at the Lambeth Ragged Schools, Doughty-street. The attendance was good, and the "Song Service" by the South London Evangelistic Choir was greatly appreciated. This branch has also recently acquired the management of the Melior-street Mission Hall and Schools near London-bridge (Surrey side), where a good work has been carried on for many years. For this help is needed to defray cost of reseating, cleaning, &c.

This Association renders good service to Mr. George Holland in his arduous labours at George-yard, Whitechapel. Members help nearly every evening, conducting boys' classes, visiting the poor, addressing meetings, &c. The Secretary (Mr. N. R. Hughman, 61, Gracechurch-street, City) will be glad to receive help for the varied work of the branch.

HACKNEY BRANCH.

The first anniversary of this branch was celebrated on Thursday last by a public meeting in the Hackney Town Hall. Mr. George Cable presided, in the absence of the President, Mr. A. J. Scrutton, through sudden indisposition. From the report of the Secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, it appeared that during the year 151 associates and members became connected with the Association; after deducting removals, &c., 139 now remain. The usual spiritual and educational agencies are carried on. The report of the Treasurer, Mr. M. W. Richards, showed a deficit of £23 18s. 4d. The Committee appealed for assistance to wipe off this amount, and for annual subscriptions to carry on the work.

The Chairman spoke highly of the work of the Y.M.C.A. Rev. J. De Kewer Williams pointed out some of the pitfalls that surround a young man in the pathway of life. Mr. Owers gave a soul-stirring and encouraging address, intended to stimulate the workers present. Rev. W. H. Langhorne, Rev. J. W. Butcher, and Rev. Samuel Hebditch also spoke warmly and sympathetically of this young institution.

CAMDEN AND KENTISH TOWN.

The annual meeting of this branch was held on Thursday last. Mr. George Williams, in the absence of Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., presided over a full and interested company.

The Secretary, Mr. Smith, reported that since the opening of the present new building there had been increased attendance, awakened interest, and much blessing. The entire cost of the building (£3200) had been defrayed, and it would ere long be furnished with gymnastry, and other means of recreation. The courses of lectures, Bible-readings, and evangelistic services had all been successful, and in all that was done the Association carefully avoided everything antagonistic to the churches. Quite £200 yearly would be needed to meet regular expenses.

Rev. Dr. O'Brien spoke of the need of such Associations at a time when the theatre, music-hall, dancing saloon, and gambling-house, were imperiling the safety of our young men to a fearful extent. The united testimony of the police was that if drunkenness be decreasing licentiousness is on the increase still more. Dr. Donald Fraser condemned the spirit of compromise abroad, and eloquently pleaded for a thorough-going, whole-hearted, out-and-out religion. Sir William Charley, Q.C., said he became a member of the Association through witnessing the intense yearning after spiritual things that existed among the members. He heartily congratulated them upon the maintenance of Gospel truth in their midst. He and the chairman were both doing their best to prevent the funds of the London Diocesan Society being appropriated to the formation of secular clubs. Remarks followed from Mr. Shipton, Rev. Mr. Thornton, Mr. John White, and the Chairman.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—A new hall and Mission station was opened at Peter-street, Westminster, in connection with this Mission, a year ago. The first annual meeting has been held, and from the report submitted it appears that the Mission has produced very encouraging results among the masses of the neighbourhood.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing upon services held in the Clapton-park Tabernacle, on Sunday, conducted by Mr. C. King.——For much blessing on services at Coombe Down, near Bath, conducted by Mr. Opie Rodway.

PRAYER.—For a brother who has not been heard of for four years.——For blessing on meetings at Everton, Notts, March 18th to 31st, by Mr. J. P. Gibbons.——For three young men in a foreign land, surrounded by Roman Catholics.——For a minister of the Gospel, who has laboured in one place for forty-three years most successfully, and who is afflicted with cancer on his tongue.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

The Revival at Clairac, in the South of France, is very steadily continuing. All-day prayer-meetings are being held, always accompanied by much blessing.

Distress in Paris.—The French papers refer to the great distress among the poor in Paris, in consequence of the commercial and industrial crisis. Private charity and philanthropic institutions are not able to meet the need.

Paris Y.M.C.A.—Messrs. Th. Monod & Appia, at a large meeting recently held, spoke on "Heroism." M. Monod defined it as being an action over and beyond duty, inseparable from the ideas of disinterestedness and devotion. Every true Christian is a potential hero, though he may not be called on to do heroic acts, in the ordinary acceptation; but all must have the spirit of those who "loved not their lives unto the death."—Christianisme.

La Bonne Nouvelle, edited by Rev. W. Gibson, of Paris, is freely distributed at the rate of 10,000 monthly, and quotes Victor Hugo, who strongly recommends the reading of the Bible to his fellow-countrymen. "Give," he says, "to the people who toil and suffer—give to the people for whom this world is hard and bad, the belief that there is a better made for them. Scatter Gospels among the villages, a Bible for every cottage."

Canada.—In 1870 many French and Belgians emigrated to America. Of these twenty-seven families went to Montreal, where they heard the Gospel for the first time. They soon decided to go further and cultivate the land, founding the township of New Belgium. The Evangelisation Society followed them here, and now they have a prosperous little church, Sunday and day-schools, a library, and the Lord's day is one of rest instead of, as at first, a time for hunting, marketing, &c.——Evangéliste.

Karlsbad.—There exists in this town an institution called Elizabeth-Rosen-Stiftung, which helps middle-class people of any country needing help to obtain the benefit of the baths in Karlsbad. It was established by a benevolent lady in 1867. She went with baskets full of roses into a room full of health-seekers, and sold her roses. The proceeds of this sale have been continually added to by contributions of fresh and artificial roses, painted and carved roses, &c., which are sold by the foundress. Last year sixty-six persons received help from this fund.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

A sad calamity has befallen Mr. Johnson, a missionary in connection with the Universities Mission. Whilst journeying to Lake Nyassa he was suddenly attacked with a virulent form of ophthalmia. He was brought with all speed to Mozambique, and placed in the hospital. The local doctors confessed their inability to do anything. His trial is a very bitter one indeed, though he bears his misfortune heroically. An English doctor on on board the steamer, by which he leaves for England, is of opinion that the sight of one eye may yet be restored.

The Zambesi Mission.—MM. Coillard and Jeanmairet's last letter was dated Oct. 30; they had reached the Zambesi river. They reached Patamatenga, where Mr. Westbeech has a commercial establisment. Here the Jesuits have settled, after having in vain tried to fix themselves on the other side of the Zambesi, among the Barotsis and the Batokas. They do not seem to have made much progress with the blacks, happily. They behaved very hospitably to M. Coillard and his party. Mdlle. Coillard soon discovered in the children of the expedition and some Zambesi boys who worked for them the elements of a school. M. Coillard adds: "We count on your constant prayers and generous gifts, as you doubtless know our Zambesi Mission depends on special gifts and not at all on the Society."—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has been holdin services at Barrow-in-Furness, Windermere, ar Upper Norwood. There has been much blessin in each of these places.

THE CHURCH ARMY, which hitherto has bee worked in connection with the Church Parochi Mission Society, ceases to be affiliated to th Society from the 31st inst.

THE SYDENHAM GOSPEL HALL MISSION ar Coffee Tavern reports much blessing during th past year. Temperance and Gospel work goes o Fruit has not been wanting.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES (4 49, and 55, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W.)—I connection with these Homes a sale of wor will be held in Brondesbury Hall, Iverson-road, c Tuesday and Wednesday, May 19 and 20. Donations in goods or money may be sent to Miss Col Mount Hermon Orphan Homes, Cambridge-roa Kilburn.

MAJOR AND MRS. EVERED POOLE are at Hul Major Poole addressed a meeting at 7 a.m on Sunday, and over 500 men at 9 a.m. The afternoo and evening meetings, held in Hengler's Circu were crowded to overflowing. On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Evered Poole held a special drawing room meeting for "ladies only," and on Thursda our friends leave for Grimsby to give Gosp addresses.

STAR VILLA ORPHANAGE, CHATHAM.—A sho time ago it was found necessary to remove from th premises in Rainham-road, and Mrs. Willis wa successful in obtaining two villas in Napier-roa New Brompton, to which place the Orphange ha now been removed. The ceremony of opening th new premises took place on Monday week. At th present time there are thirteen children in th Orphanage—eleven girls and two boys. It estimated that the cost of maintaining each child £14 per annum. If there was a sufficient incom twenty children could be accommodated in th Orphanage, but at the present time this cannot b accomplished, owing to the fact that there is a deb of about £40.

AN INTER-UNIVERSITY CONFERENCE, in connection with the daily prayer-meeting, was held Cambridge on Monday week, when quite 200 me were present. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Hollowa took the chair. About eight members spoke, including the Chairman, on "The best way in whic to present the Gospel to young men." All throug the evening there was a marked consensus of hig spiritual aim in what was said. To be thoroughl real oneself, in knowledge of Christ and faithfulness to Him, was pressed home as the sine quâ no of influence on others. Next morning about sixt men who had been present at the Conference me at the Lord's table in Trinity Church. This was new feature in the occasion.

THE STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.—The ne enlarged hall at the Rest is a great boon. Ever Thursday night it is vacated by its usual occupant and several times during the past few months has been used for a gathering of lodging-hous men. This class abounds in Ratcliff Highway, an an occasional free tea is to them a treat indee The last tea of the season (unless more funds ar sent in) was given on Thursday last, when som 300 men were bounteously provided. The Stratfor Mizpah Band, under the guidance of Messrs. Boardman and Thomas, conducted the after-service. Th thrilling testimonies given were so effective tha when the meeting was brought to a close a goodl number waited behind for conversation and to sig the pledge.

AT THE MILLWALL DOCKS.—Very large numbers of distressed and hungry men continue t tramp morning by morning to the Millwall Dock in the vain hope of earning a shilling or two. Mos of them come out without a morsel of breakfast and as noon is reached, with no prospect of dinner hope gives way, and their sad spirits decline almos to despair. Assisted with a few pounds from reader of The Christian, we have given about 25 free dinners, at a cost to us of fourpence each. I would be difficult to describe the anxiety of thes poor fellows to secure a ticket, and the looks o blank disappointment when told they were all gon cannot easily be imagined. Any help in this wor will be gratefully received.

Southgate, N.—Mr. Wickerson, who is labouring her in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Count Mission, desires to erect an iron building for the purposes o the work. A site has been provided, and an appeal is no made for the money wherewith to build. Mr. Hayward Treasurer of the Tabernacle County Mission, will receiv help.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

MARCH 26.—LUKE XIII.

In this chapter the Gentile character of this Gospel, as illustrating the freeness of Divine grace, is very plainly marked. The universality of sin, and consequently of the need for repentance, whether in Jew or Gentile, is taught in verses 1—5. The downfall of Israel on account of its fruitlessness is foretold in the parable of the fig-tree, while in close proximity to that prediction we have the "mysteries" of the kingdom, in its world-wide promulgation, set forth by the parables of the mustard-seed and the leaven. So in verses 23—30, the Jews are seen shut out of the kingdom, while the Gentiles are beheld flocking from every quarter of the globe, and sitting down in it with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Yet Israel is not entirely removed, but only suspended for a time; their house left desolate until the time when they shall welcome the Lord. The dispensation of grace to the Gentile shall be followed by a return of grace to the Jew.

v. 24.—"Strive to enter in at the strait gate."—There is but one mode of entrance to the kingdom of God—"Ye must be born again." When, therefore, Christ said, "Strive to enter," He meant, resist all temptations to adopt another course, give all your thought and purpose of heart to securing "the grace of God and the gift by grace," which alone can entitle you to eternal life.

vv. 31-33.—"Go ye, and tell that fox."—The message brought to Jesus in ver. 31, doubtless, was the result of an intrigue arranged by the Herodians and Pharisees, Herod himself, with the cunning of a fox, being at the bottom of it. Hence, as Godet says, paraphrasing our Lord's words, 'I see well on whose part you have come. Go and answer Herod, 'Reassure thyself, thou who seekest to terrify Me; my present activity in no way threatens thy power; I am not a Messiah such as he whose appearance thou dreadest; some devils cast out, some cures accomplished, such is all my work in thy dominions; and to complete the assuring of thee, I promise thee it shall not be long; to-day, to-morrow, and a day more [symbolical for a short time], then it will be at an end.'"

v. 35.—"Your house is left unto you desolate."—Because He departed from them. To be without Christ is indeed to be desolate. How blessed a contrast is afforded to these words, spoken to the unbelieving Jews, by those addressed to the believing disciples, "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you." None are, or can be, desolate who have Christ.

MARCH 27.—LUKE XIV.

Note here three distinct words of our Lord. In ver. 7, He speaks "to those that were bidden," when He marked how they chose the chief rooms, a lesson of humility being given, pointing out the true way to exaltation. Compare Proverbs xxv. 7, 8, "in the presence of the prince," instead of "in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee." To have worship or acceptance "in the presence of the Prince" is above all price.

In vv. 12—14, He speaks to "him that bade him:" the host as well as the guests must be sought, and that at his own table. The lesson is one of charity; while not forbidding entertainment of those we love, He urges special care and thoughtfulness on behalf of the poor and the needy who cannot recompense the kindness.

v. 14.—"The resurrection of the just."—That is "the first resurrection" of Rev. xx. 6: that of which Paul speaks when he says (Phil. iii. 11), "If by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from among the dead." That in which only those "who are Christ's at his coming" shall have part.

In vv. 15—24 He speaks in parable to a single guest, urging acceptance of the Divine call to life.

Three similitudes follow, addressed to the multitudes who thronged the Lord as He left the house, all aiming at caution against hasty profession, and thoughtless adoption of Christian discipleship.

vv. 28-30 refer to the building up a character worthy of the Christian name, and indicate the need of devoting oneself wholly and resolutely to the service of Christ. Verses 31-33 speak of conflict, and the necessity for relinquishing all for the sake of Christ. "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." Verses 34, 35 sum up the whole lesson, and show the need of savour in the spiritual life. Of all things in the social world, savourless Christianity is the most useless, and the most to be contemned.

MARCH 28.—LUKE XV.

The order and connection of these three parables is intended to present the great scheme and fact of human salvation as it lies in the Divine Mind. The shepherd seeking his strayed sheep reminds us of the Good Shepherd laying down his life for the sheep. Does not this first parable bring forth that atoning sacrifice of the Son provided in heaven, and demanded by the law and the nature of God as the pre-requisite for man's recovery and forgiveness? Then, on this redemption, go forth, in the second parable, the Providence of God, and the Spirit of God, and the Revelation of God, as the lamp and besom, and the diligent search of the housewife recovering the lost coin; and bringing, and enabling, the soul of of man to see the danger of its condition by sin, and its need of the gracious provisions of the great Atonement. But whilst man is dependent on God's Spirit for each good thought, he is not saved in inert carelessness, and in utter apathy and inaction. He is turned of God, but he turns himself, when thus turned of the Good Spirit. If quickened, he is converted, and repents and considers his ways, and sets his face toward a forsaken home and an outraged Father. Then comes to the soul, thus seeking and self-destroyed, the thought: Will God receive, and can the Holy One accept, so worthless a petitioner? And to the soul of man, thus awakened and humbled, distressed in its self-accusations, and perplexed as to its possible disenthralment, how does this closing parable of the three address its consolations. You are unworthy, but you are the sought and the welcomed of a most loving, and generous, and placable Father. You cannot so yearn to return, as He longs to welcome your return."—Dr. R. W. Williams.

MARCH 29.—LUKE XVI.

vv. 1-9.—The Unjust Steward.—The unjust steward typifies the Jewish nation, as represented by the priests and elders, the Scribes and Pharisees, the doctors of the law, and the rulers of the people. They had wasted the goods with which God had entrusted them, using them not as stewards for their Lord's profit and pleasure, but for their own. Their stewardship is described in Rom. ix. 4, 5: "Unto them were committed the oracles of God." God's will was that they should be a kingdom of priests, and that all nations should be blessed through them. But as the unjust steward had relaxed the obligations of his Lord's debtors by reducing their debts from one hundred to fifty and fourscore, so did the Jewish rulers relax the stringency of God's commands, and "make the Word of God of none effect by their own traditions."

v. 8.—"The children of this world are in their generation. . . ."—There is this difference between the stewardship of the children of this world and that of the children of light:—Duty to their lord requires the former to get all they can, duty to their Lord requires the latter to give all they can. Therefore, while the steward acted dishonestly in giving away his lord's goods, the disciples of Jesus please Him best, and serve Him most faithfully, when they give most away. Whatever our Lord entrusts to his stewards is to be circulated, sown, scattered; this is the law of nature, and the law of grace.

This parable is the terrible answer of Jesus to the derision of his adversaries, the proud and covetous Pharisees (ver. 14). He shows them their portrait, the likeness of their present life, and their lot after death. Now they know what they are in the eyes of God (19—21), and what awaits them (23—35); they know also the real cause of their near perdition, and the only means which can yet avert it (27—31).—Godet. The tables are completely turned upon the self-righteous faultfinders, who said, "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

Sheep, money, prodigal—publicans and sinners. Elder brother, unjust steward, rich man—pharisees and scribes (xv.)

vv. 1-6.—The duty of forgiveness.—God does not receive us into his favour until we repent, and we are not required to assure of forgiveness anyone who has wronged us until he has expressed sorrow for such wrong. But prior to any repentance on our part, God cherishes pity, shows kindness, waits to be gracious, is ready to pardon, makes advances towards us, calls us to Himself, beseeches us to be reconciled. Therefore we, on our part, before a "brother" who has offended us acknowledges the offence and asks forgiveness, are bound to cherish kind feelings toward him, to pray for him, and to be willing to express forgiveness when he repents. —Newman Hall.

v. 10.—"Say, We are unprofitable servants."—The emphasis lies upon the word servants, and every servant ought to confess himself unprofitable, because he is a servant (slave), who owes all things; who, if wanting in duty, merits the scourge; who, if he does everything, deserves nothing; he ought to think nothing done; no thanks are due to him, and it is not his part to demand anything great, either in work or reward. God, who alone is good, can do without our usefulness (Rom. xi. 35; Matt. xix. 17). Wretched is he whom the Lord calls unprofitable servant (Matt. xxv. 30); happy is he who calls himself so.—Bengel.

v. 21.—"The kingdom of God is within you."—Rather, as in margin, "among you." It was among, not within, those self-righteous, wicked Pharisees to whom our Lord addressed his words; it was among them, within their reach and discernment, but they rejected it by refusing Him, in whom, as its King, the "kingdom of God had come nigh unto them."

vv. 6, 7.—"Hear what the unjust judge saith. And shall not God . . ."—If such be the power of earnest entreaty, even with reference to man, even with reference to one the opposite to benevolent or God-fearing, how much more will it prevail that right should be ultimately brought about through the Just and Holy One, in answer to the continued prayer of his faithful people.—Bloomfield.

vv. 9—14.—The Pharisee and the Publican.—A fine moral example, levelled against three capital errors in practical religion, in each of man's threefold relations—to himself, his Maker, and his fellow-creatures; the want of sobriety of judgment in his estimation of himself; an ignorance or dissimulation of his true moral position in respect to God, and an equal injustice and uncharitableness in his estimate of others whose situation in all moral respects is the same with his own.—Greswell.

Penitence, confession, and faith are essential to the obtaining forgiveness of sins, even as humility, perseverance, and confidence are essential to power in prayer.

v. 18.—"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?"—Though this ruler's conscience was not thoroughly satisfied with what he had done, but imagined he might for all that fall short of eternal life, yet he still hugs the imagination of obtaining it by doing. This is natural to corrupted man. All men set too high a value upon their own services. Sinful creatures would fain make God a debtor to them, and be purchasers of felicity. Eternal life is a gift, and not by any obligation of right, but an abundance of grace; it is owing not to the dignity of our works, but the magnificent bounty of the Divine nature, and must be sued for by the title of God's promise, not by the title of the creature's services.—Charnock.

v. 35.—"As he was come nigh unto Jericho."—The word "come" is not essential to the translation of the original, although permissible if needful. Here it is not only not needful, but mistaken, as we learn from Matthew and Mark that it was as He left Jericho the miracle was wrought. All Luke intends to say is that the man was healed while while Jesus was near to, in the neighbourhood of, Jericho.

APRIL 1.—LUKE XIX.

vv. 2, 3.—"He was rich, and he sought to see Jesus." —It is well that rich Zaccheus was desirous to see Christ. Little do too many rich men care to see that sight; the face of Cæsar on their coin is more pleasing. This man leaves his bags to bless his eyes with this prospect. He that desires to see Jesus, is in the way to enjoy Him. Let me go into the mint-house, and see heaps of gold, I am never the richer; let me go to the pictures, and see goodly faces, I am never the fairer; let me go to the court, I see state and magnificence, and am never the greater; but, O Saviour, I cannot see Thee, and not be blessed.—Bp. Hall.

v. 9.—"This day is salvation come to this house." —Salvation is come, for the Saviour has entered; hence there is joy in the tabernacles of the righteous, Ps. cxviii. 15. Again, there is almost an open—I am He! almost a gracious illustration now in the last days of his life of his name of Jesus. It was before—To-day I must abide in thy house; this is not all that the expression now involves, but it gives an intimation to Zaccheus, that he must henceforth guide his whole house to salvation and peace (chap. x. 5, 6).—Stier.

v. 38.—"Peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." —What they justly sang at the birth of Jesus was "Peace on earth," ushered in by "Glory to God in the highest." Here we have a signal change or converse. "Glory in the highest" is the result, not the introduction; and instead of "peace on earth" (which will no doubt be the fruit by and by), the disciples meanwhile, and most appropriately, sing "Peace in heaven." The earth was unready, was about to judge unjustly, and to be judged. Jesus was on the very point of being cast out and cut off. The effect, then, of that which was imminent was not peace for the earth yet, but peace in heaven most assuredly. Thus the Lord guided by his Spirit the song of the disciples at the close, as of angels at the beginning.—Kelly.

OBITUARY.

REV. T. LESSEY.

WE regret to record the death of the Rev. Theophilus Lessey, who was for many years the Pastor of Arundel-square Chapel, on retirement from which in 1873 he joined the Plymouth Brethren.

MRS. LAWRENCE, CARDIFF.

The beloved and devoted wife of Mr. George Lawrence, formerly of Barcelona, died recently at the Welcome Home, 179, Bute-road, Cardiff. She was a deeply-interested worker at this Sailors' Rest, as she had been in Spain.

MRS. BARON HART.

A large circle of friends will mourn the death, on Wednesday, last week, of Mrs. T. Baron Hart, and will sympathise with her bereaved husband, whose fellow-labourer she was during their twenty years' residence in Paris. Her gentle ministry to many in that city will not soon be forgotten.

PERISHING EAST LONDON.—Rev. W. E. Hurndall has published a brief account of his "Mission and Relief Work among the Poor, from street to street, house to house, room to room, person to person." Many readers who are acquainted with this good work will doubtless be glad to procure the Report, and there see what a vast amount of practical good may be done by a single church and congregation amongst its immediate surroundings of destitution and misery. A copy will be sent gratis by Rev. W. E. Hurndall, 16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E. Enclose stamp for postage.

SURREY CHAPEL.—The sixth anniversary of Rev. B. Senior's pastorate was lately commemorated. A social tea meeting was held in one of the large classrooms, and a public meeting held, when Mr. Tressilian P. Shipp occupied the chair. The spirit of the meeting was most enthusiastic, and capital addresses were given by the Revs. Dr. Davies (of York-road Chapel), W. Williams (of Upton Chapel), G. Bell, and Mr. Andrew Dunn. Mr. Senior made some important statements concerning the proposed new chapel and schools. During the past six years they had received into the Church upwards of 500 members, and had raised for general purposes some £7000. During the past year 100 members had been added to the Church. Their success as a Church was retarded from want of accommodation. They had secured a freehold site for a new church and schools in the main road about forty yards distant from Old Surrey Chapel, and during the past twelve months some £2700 had been obtained in cash and promises. It was intended to spend between £10,000 and £12,000 on the new undertaking. They intended to complete the purchase of the site by September next, and hoped to commence building in the following spring. A bazaar is in course of formation, and will be held on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of next month, when it is hoped to raise at least £1000 for the new chapel and schools.

NEWS OF BISHOP TAYLOR.—Monrovia, Liberia, February 11, 1885.—I arrived here Thursday night, January 22, at 7.30 p.m. I preached that night in our church in Monrovia, and then nightly for two weeks, except Saturday nights, and preached the afternoons of all the same days in Miss Mary Sharp's native school-house in Kroo town. I preached four or five days before the people began to yield to be saved. Then in the next ten days we had between fifty and sixty persons saved, besides a great seeking after holiness of heart. We had, meantime, a good session of the Liberia Annual Conference. This is a nice climate, and apparently very healthy. I have gotten on thus far splendidly, but hard at work all the time. I hope to get a steamer to-morrow to take me to Great Bossa, where I hope to preach a week, and then join, about the 21st inst., the steamship Nubia, on which our party are coming, as per arrangement.—Methodist Times.

URGENT APPEAL.

A special effort is now being made to raise funds to build an addition to the Dublin Soldiers' Home & Institute, to provide a suitable Lecture Hall and extra sleeping accommodation for "Soldiers on Furlough." The present Lecture Hall (only a temporary one) it has been found necessary to convert into a dormitory to supply the great demand for beds, and whenever the Hall is required for a meeting, these have to be piled up at one end, so as to make room. This has been found most inconvenient in every way, and the sleeping accommodation thus supplied is quite insufficient. It is, therefore, earnestly hoped that the proposed addition may very soon be commenced—plans of which are already prepared. The Committee, however, cannot go forward until the necessary funds are forthcoming. There is in hand for this object nearly £600; double this amount will be required at least. The matter is most urgent, so that the work may be completed before the next Furlough season begins. When the addition has been built, it will be almost self-supporting (as a charge of 6d. per bed is made, which the Soldiers gladly pay); it will also be a source of income to the Home by the increase of profits from the Bar.

To those who understand the working and appreciate the value of a "Soldiers' Home," it is unnecessary to state the great boon which 30 or 40 extra beds would prove to "Soldiers on Furlough," in such a City as Dublin,* not to speak of the moral and spiritual good which might be done, with God's blessing, to many of those who would thus be brought under the influence of the "Home."

There are, we are glad to know, many proofs of God's blessing here, in the past, and that many of our soldiers, now in the Soudan, can with joy and thankfulness look back to the first day they entered a "Soldiers' Home." Some have fallen, but others still live to tell "the old, old story" of a Saviour's love to their comrades. The soldier has a hard battle to fight against temptations. We trust that many will come forward to aid us in giving him a helping hand. It is at such times as these that all who have the soldier's real welfare at heart must feel the value and importance of such Homes, and that it is in "time of peace" that he should in the highest sense "prepare for war."*

G. BUTLER STONEY (Major-Gen.),
Hon. Treasurer.
R. WADE THOMPSON,
March 1, 1885. Hon. Secretary.

"A Friend of the Soldier" has given £50 towards the sum required, and has kindly promised to double his donation, if the sum of £400 (in addition to the amount already in hand) has been collected before April 30 next, so as to insure the building being commenced at once, in order that it may be completed before the next Furlough Season begins.

---

* Few, except those who have heard and know something of the Soldier's experience in lodgings outside, can understand how he values the accommodation provided here.

* Appended is an extract from the last Annual Report:—

"The following table shows the number who have been accommodated with beds at the 'Home' from March 1, 1883, to March 1, 1884, viz.:

Soldiers	1724
,, Wives	449
,, Children	326
Men of the R. I. Constabulary	1404
Total for year,	3903

"The largest number of beds that can be supplied at present is 40 per night. Often during Furlough season twice this number apply for admission.

"The total number of daily visits paid during the past year, including those who slept, has been about 27,590, or over that number."

No accommodation whatsoever is provided by the Military Authorities for "Soldiers on Furlough" passing through Dublin, for which reason this branch of our work has become an item of such importance.

Save the Children from the Streets!

BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY OF TEXTS FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

A Series of Scripture Texts and Meditations for every Day in the Year. Cheap Edition.—Cloth back, 2s.; toned paper, cloth boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Editions.—Leather back, leatherette sides, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Whole bound in leather, gilt edges, 5s.

"Bogatzky's Golden Treasury" has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books except the "Pilgrim's Progress" have been so largely circulated or so widely read.

THE 5S. EDITION OF CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

The special feature of this edition is the New Translation of the Proper Names of the Old and New Testaments, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. Alfred Jones, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated," &c. Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.; Library Edition, half bound in leather, 10s. 6d.; Illustrated Edition, with Twelve exquisite Steel-plate Engravings and Six coloured Maps, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate." Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the world. By John Foxe. With twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1,083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

THE TABERNACLE, THE PRIESTHOOD, AND THE OFFERINGS.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mrs. F. GREEN, of BRISTOL.

This patient, residing at 18, Dore-street, Kingsdown, Bristol, was nearly twelve months under my treatment—a chronic case.

Consumption was in the family. She had been ailing for twelve months. Nervous debility followed by hacking cough, free expectoration, pains in both lungs, fever, hectic flushings, loss of flesh. For some time her medical attendant had thought her lungs very weak, and now said, "There is great danger."

Advice and medicine were forwarded at once on receiving the tabulated form of questions (which renders a personal interview in almost every case unnecessary). In two months there was very marked benefit, which continued to be reported month after month until the patient got fairly well.

At the time I write (February), it is about three months since I received the last letter from Mrs. Green, of which the following is an extract:—

"I am thankful to say your valuable medicine has done me a world of good. I have gained much flesh. If anything should occur to throw me back,* I shall immediately resort to it again. I have recommended it to a great many, to whom it has done good. It will give me much pleasure to testify to its value."

* This patient, like many others, desirous to save expense, was leaving off too soon. To do so is a risk, and might involve going over all the ground again.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

OUR SISTERS IN PATNA.

The Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society;

OR,

Zenana, Bible, and Medical Mission.

Mr. Robert Johnson, 21, Rutland-street, Edinburgh, has had it laid upon his heart to start a Mission to the women of Patna, and to this end has promised the Committee of the above Society £150 per annum. The Committee needs £250 more annually, in order to carry on this work efficiently. Who will give this, or any part of it, that we may send the Gospel to these poor women? Two of our ladies have just arrived in Patna, and report most favourably of their prospects of work there. They have already got an entrance into some Zenanas. As this work has been begun in Scotland, special appeal is made to Scottish friends to come forward and second Mr. Johnson's efforts.

All communications to be addressed to Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, Secretary and Treasurer for Scotland, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

THE KING'S PALACE,

A Series of Readings for each Day of the Month.

BY REV. J. H. ROGERS, M.A., Incumbent of Christ Church, Pau.

CONTENTS.

THE HEART:—A broken heart—a new heart—a clean heart—a perfect heart—a heart kept—an enlarged heart—an untroubled heart.
THE LIPS:—Purified lips—watched lips—opened lips—the lip of prayer—the lip of praise—the lip of truth—the lip of wisdom.
THE EYES:—A single eye—undistorted sight—an eye observant of God's ways—the eye searching God's Word—the eye turned from temptation—the eye of calm courage—the unselfish eye.
THE EARS:—Hear the Son!—hearing only for God—hearing aright.
THE HANDS:—Clean hands—the hand restrained—diligent hands—strong hands.
THE FEET:—Walking in God's ways—walking circumspectly—walking perseveringly.

"It is a prettily printed manual, compiled by the worthy incumbent of Christ Church, Pau. He justly as well as quaintly claims three P's as descriptive of his purpose; he intended to be personal, particular, and practical. And he has certainly succeeded. He starts from the fact that we are saved for service; and his suggestions are founded on the certainty that He who has saved us will help us to serve. Busy folk will find here a thought for every day connected with the service of the body; each week is devoted to a particular part, beginning with the heart and ending with the feet. The compendium has, it will be perceived, a distinct character of its own, and those who use it can hardly fail to find it edifying."
